Who will cry to the Rocks and Mountains?

I have long been impressed to cast in my little mite for the Companion, but feeling my own imperfection, I have withheld my hand. To-day I asked myself: have I improved my time and talent that God has given me, or have I buried it in the earth? If so, may God help us in the future to make wise improvements. We are not here to live for self alone. No; we are taught to help each other; to bear each other's burdens. Here self must be denied, passions suppressed, and patience tried. May God bring it home to our hearts, especially to those who have rolled their burdens on others. We are taught in God's word, if we fail in one point we are guilty of all. Then what manner of persons ought we to be, who must give an account for every idle word. Need we wonder who will "cry to the rocks and mountains to fall upon us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth upon the throne?"

I do not think this means the sinner and ungodly, for it will be said to them, "depart from me ye workers of iniquity, I never knew you;" and these will go away into everlasting punishment. It is to be feared that cry will be made by some that have named the name of Christ, and have deviated from the word of the Lord. Lamentable indeed after bearing the burden and heat of the day. Would it not be well for us to ask ourselves, is it I? Is it I, who will cry to the rocks and mountains to fall on us? Awful and terrible will be that disappointment. Is it not enough to arouse every one to a sense of duty. May God help us to work whilst it is called to-day, for the night of death will overtake us, wherein no man can work.

Maxims.

Persevere against discouragements, keep your temper. Employ leisure in study, and always have something in hand. Be punctual and methodical in business, and never procrastinate. Never be in a hurry. Preserve self-possession, and do not be talked out of conviction. Rise early, and be an economist of time. Maintain dignity without the appearance of pride; manner is something to every body, and every thing with some. Be guarded in discourse, attentive and slow to speak. Never acquiesce in immoral or pernicious opinions. Be not forward to assign reasons to those who have no right to ask. Think nothing is conduct unimportant or indifferent. Rather set than follow examples. Practice strict temperance, and in your transactions remember the final account. Let your course be onward and upward; pay your homage to the God of heaven, through your observance of the great principles of friendship and brotherhood, which he has laid down for your observance; thus you will with His blessing; your noble order will spread until the whole human family will be embodied in the great plan of common brotherhood.

Turn withersoever we will, we find the belief in immortality. In every nation ever known, in every race that has ever lived, in every age of this changing world, we find it. Every language known to man as now or heretofore spoken among the babblers of this earth, is constructed in accordance with it. In all ages men in dying have looked on death as simply the soul's putting off its tabernacle. There are exceptions, but they are so few that they hardly attract our attention, and do not destroy the practical accuracy of our statement. The belief in immortality is one of the universal convictions of the race.

A Crumb of Manna.

TO A CROSS-BEARING, CROSS-HONORING SISTER.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

Grace be with you, to find the good purpose of God in all your vicissitudes and trials. To "apprehend that for which also we are apprehended of Christ Jesus," requires close walking with God. To be enabled and sustained by the lofty consciousness of reposing on the Almighty Arm, and being guided by unerring Wisdom, is the privilege of "the least of all saints." He calleth His own sheep by name, and leadeth them out." Each saint has his course shaped to meet his highest wants, develop his nature symmetrically, and lead him ever upward into that participation of Divinity which yields perfect composure when sense and reason fail, and qualifies for the destiny which God reserves for the individual believer. "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me." That God has a definite end for every soul, and a definite plan to reach that end, admits not of a doubt.—It is our wisdom, our dignity, our glory and our joy, to be so wholly at the Divine disposal as to be led by His Spirit into and along the path where His ends may be compassed. Your lot, and mine, is painful and perplexing, only as there is friction between God's will and ours. If we have the faith and confidence to 'go out," in the cheerful sacrifice of all that is "seen and temporal," "not knowing whither we go," assured that we go at God's call, we have the strongest support, and the sweetest solace possible for the soul to enjoy.

You remark, somewhat despondingly, that huge mountains often obstruct your course, have "so many little battles to fight, so many crosses to bear and so many great temptations to resist." Beloved, let me tell you a secret, not wholly a secret to you, nor to any of the elect. If we would be led along by the Omniscient, all embracing counsel of the Most High, we must know what is meant by these wondrous words: "YOUR LIFE IS HID WITH CHRIST IN GOD."—There must be a complete renunciation of every thing that offends the presence of the Holy Spirit. If we would have as our peace and confidence "the testimony that we please God," we must be sure to let him have His pleasure in us. This is the only true life-insurance, for we will be so entirely in the line of God's purpose, that "all things work together for our good." To such a soul there can be no real disaster. Having our aims and aspirations infolded by faith in God's ends respecting us, the outcome must be a realization of the Divine thought, and, of course, our highest good.

To have it for your joy that you are at one with God, vitalized, moulded, directed by God, the vehicle of His thought and action, you must have it as your undivided object to rise above all aims and pursuits that repel the Holy Spirit from being the Life of your life. "Keep your head with all diligence." Let the springs of your being be so well-kept, so close to the Great Fount and Model, so centred and enveloped in the All-Holy, that you will be carried along with the Divine will and movement, as the arm and foot are kept in unity with the thought and purpose of the head and the heart. The "joy of the Lord," "the peace that passeth all understanding," require an entire settlement of the soul in the Divine purpose and discipline, so that your trust in Jesus will give you the same rest and peace as though you could see all the good and glorious ends of God in all your "little battles, heavy crosses, and great temptations." Take Christ by the hand, by faith, and do it heartily, borrowing no trouble from the morrow, taking step by step in the holy confidence that your fiery trials will but refine and crystallize your nature, bringing out more clearly and radiantly the lineaments of your adorable Redeemer.

Study attentively Heb. 12: 3. Read it as often as the verse contains words, emphasizing a different word at each reading. Glorious, uplifting, transporting meanings will unfold as you proceed. When you get to the heart of it, you will find yourself on the very bosom of Infinite Love, too blissfully satisfied with the fullness of Christ, to be greatly disturbed by "little battles," or big. Let every thing be done as the result of daily counsel with God. Carry your censer with you, wherein you go, and envelop all whom you meet with the "sweet-smelling savor" of a Christ glorifying life.

"Are you a Christian, my friend?" "I long to be one," was the reply. "But you may long to be a Christian all your life, and yet lose your soul at last; if your action ends where it begins, with simply longing to be a Christian.

For the Companion.

New Year.

At the commencement of each year there is spread before us, as it were, a pure blank page; divided like a diary, into three hundred and sixty five days. Every day we fill the allotted space; and because we write carelessly, almost unconsciously, we make many crooked lines, and large blots, and thus mar the history of our lives. Looking over the last page, how soiled and blured it appears! We find much to regret, much that we would obliterate if we could. But what we have written we have written, and we cannot efface it.

Looking back across the lapse of time, to that mournful day when the first of the human race —"hand in hand, with wand'ring steps and slow through Eden took their solitary way" out through the gates to commence life anew in a sin cursed earth, we find that each page of the world's history has been blotted in the same way. Blotted by acts of rebellion against God, by deeds of cruelty to one another. "Man's inhumanity to man has made countless thousands mourn." We not only read of, but seem to hear the cry of those laboring under hard task masters, and the wailing of an innumerable multitude of the oppressed in all ages. We seem to hear the blast of the trumpet, the tramp of hosts, the clash of armies, and the shrieks of the dying; and now and then, above all this, we hear the thunderings of God's wrath upon a burning city, a perishing nation, or a doomed world. But along with this sad noise and strife, there comes down, through all time, a gentle sound like a soft strain of music, telling of the universal brotherhood of man—of man's love and compassion for his fellow man. Sometimes, like the music of an Eolian harp, the sound becomes so soft and low that it can scarcely be heard, and then again, in hours of peril and anguish, rising into the higher notes of human heroism.

Leafing back over nearly two thousand pages, how divinely sweet and melodious that strain becomes. During the humanity of Christ the chords were touched as none but Jesus ever touched them; and that soft sound has been sweeter ever since a,s though the echo of his touch had mingled with the imperfect notes his followers have sounded since. Both these sounds have came down to the close of eighteen hundred and seventy one; one telling of sin, the other of righteousness—one singing of love—the other sounding the shrill notes of hatred and strife.

And now which shall we inscribe on the pure blank page which lies before us? With prophetic soul we seem to know what the nations will write; but what shall we who walk in the lowly places of earth? We have nothing to do with the nations. Shall we assist in keeping up, and strengthening that sweet strain that has come down to us? or shall we help to increase that harsh sound of emulation, and strife? I fear we shall, as in the past, strike both chords; now playing on this, and then that—sending forth sweet, and bitter water from the same fountain. But oh! that the soft, sweet strain might, at least in the Church of God, prevail above the other.

If we fill the page with a record of the works flesh, such as: "hatred, variance, emulation wrath, strife, envyings, revelings," &c., of the we will have to crowd the margin with words of penitence, and remorse. But if the works of the Spirit prevail, such as: "gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." we can write in the margin songs of praise and thanksgiving.—Let us pray that God will keep, for us, the page pure to the end; not blank, for we want to work, but free from the blots of sin.

E. Williams.

Why are we not sanctified, purified, becoming more and more each day a glorious Church, not having spot, nor wrinkle, nor any such thing? Simply because there is so little reading—living on—the Word. It is the only thing that can transform us into the image of God.—The Spirit works by the Word.

Christianity meets us in our spiritual ruin and helplessness, and brings us, in the Gospel of the blessed Jesus, "glad tidings of great joy." And a man becomes a Christian in the acceptance of these tidings, and in the embracing of the Saviour whom they reveal.

Faith will invariably show itself in works; and he who is a real Christian will exhibit in a life of holiness and usefulness the Character that adorned his Lord.

Our Greeting.

Surely the Lord is good, and we are a monument of his great mercy, whom he has permitted to stand another whole year, and to tread upon the threshhold of another, and now we are permitted to repeat our annual greeting to our kind patrons, very many of whom have also been favored with life, and the privilege of enjoying it. And now, will we not first of all, breathe forth an offering of praise and thanksgiving to the Great Giver of all blessings. When our mind reverts to the past, we can recall names which have been upon our books from the first number to the close of last year, but now the hands that so readily placed their names upon our lists are locked in the cold embrace of death. They cannot unfold them.—Their names are enrolled in the long lists of obituary notices found in the seventh volume of our paper, and their memory lies deep in our hearts. Their souls, we fondly hope, are basking in the Redeemer's love, in the bright world where sorrows never enter. Let us prepare to follow them, for be assured, friendly readers that some of you who are now tracing our thoughts, will be numbered among them ere this year will have come to a close. Let us be God's dear children, then let come what will, we are safe. If he wishes us to labor here, where we know and are known, even though our lot be cast in vallies of poverty, let us work industriously, for our Master gives a good reward. And should it be his good pleasure to remove us to the better mansions, our Father's own abode, where we shall see him as he is, and—glorious thought—we shall be like him, we shall again have occasion for loud songs of praise.—But let us at all times remember that he that has "this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." Let us walk worthy of our high calling; keeping our garments undefiled from the pollusions of sin, and the dark stains of iniquity.

But while death has committed his ravages, time introduced its changes; and opposition worked its work, when we turn to our subscription books, we still find many familiar names, reminding us of many friendly faces which are among us, and standing by us. This fact encourages us, and inspires us with hope and resolution for future duties; and so we now set out afresh in our Master's service. And in doing so we feel as though we might promise our readers something more than usual, during the present volume; but as the future is full of uncertainties, we will refrain, and instead proceed to actual work, doing with our might what our hands find to do, and trusting in God for what may come. We are happy to be able to present to our readers a model paper in our first issue for eighteen hundred and seventy-two, and to inform them that for several numbers more we shall not lack for spice and variety.

Wishing all our readers, old and new, a happy and prosperous year, in its beginning and its close, we send forth our messenger, in the name of peace and love.

For the Companion

Our Companion.

The word, "companion", has to many of us, become a familiar household word; and being brought before us, by his weekly visits, we have formed an attachment to him, I presume not easily severed. If he would bring us word that he means to stop his visits, many of us would feel very sorry, and lonesome. Just think of the many items of news he has brought over the thresh-holds of your mansions, in the past year.

How often were some poor lonely hearts, in the distant wilds, made glad through a paragraph of some brother's correspondence, perhaps reporting the conversion of a son or daughter, father or mother, that had been given up as hopeless. And of the unions formed, aggrievances ratified, of churches established, of love-feast seasons, in which the brethren and sisters enjoy themselves so much; the district and annual councils, and the very many excellent essays on different subjects. The essays on the Lord's Supper, by Assistant Editor, are so inteligent and plainly written, that, I cannot help to acknowledge them a good, and an instructive production. Did you read them? And then the short, but telling editorials by the proprietor, made it to me, one of the best Companions, with which I had the pleasure of meeting in the past year.

Although I have been a reader of the Companion from its beginning, and I think the Editors had just as well put me down as a life member, no one year closed as pleasantly as the last one. No unpleasant criticism, no unpleasant feelings among its contributors. This alone should induce us, his patrons, to double our efforts in his support, and have him to extend his visits among those that know nothing of him. The past year with its work has gone on history—the work is done; and if our motives were good, it will have the blessings of God to rest upon them, and we will recieve our reward for the same, when our life's journey is done.

Now brethren and sisters we are entering upon a new year. This should bring new courage, new energy, new zeal, and new names upon the Companion; but above all, upon the Lamb's book of life. Of this number we have gathered up 30 since we commenced the year just past, and I cannot see why we may not hope for the same, in the present year. While many hearts and hearths were made to rejoice others were made to weep, for loved ones, from the cradle to the hoary head. Thus were taught the lesson, that we have no continuing city here.

We have entered upon an other annual meeting year, and already do we know that many of the useful and working brethren have fallen asleep, and have gone yonder where our messenger can not reach them, peace be to their ashes.

Inasmuch as the Companion is about starting out upon a new year, and I wishing to have "Our Companion" a welcome visitor, allow me to make the following suggestion: Let editors, contributors, and patrons use their best endeavors to make the paper appear, cheerful pleasant, and edifying that its contents may be food for the soul. If this be our rule to work by, we will spend another year pleasantly together. Brethren, refrain from harsh criticism, and here let me say, should I have said any thing, in any of my articles in the past year, to offend any in, or out of the church, I can say it was not done intentionally.

We say so much about our editors, and frequently censure them for committing errors and for not just doing as we would like them to do. My dear brethren and sisters I have learned, "as the little boy said, after an anxious waiting of his turn to see the President of the United States: "Why mother he is only man." Just so with H. R. Holsinger, and J. W. Beer. Their attainments to perfection are no better than yours. Just always remember this as you pass through the present year. What then becomes your bounden duty, as Christian Companions? Nothing more nor less than your editors, in your prayers. If you do this, their labors will certainly be more successful.

Brethren Editors, you may be anxious to know what your unworthy servant has to say in regard to the general deportment of the Companion. I shall simply say, let him come this year as he did the last, and my support he shall have, and a hearty God speed; but be careful that you do not get too many advertisements upon its pages, or some of the readers may object. In my judgment the last was the best yet sent out. Now brethren editors, I hand you this for the columns of the Companion; I say "our" because I think we should all feel interested in its welfare, as a church organ, for such it is. I think we shall let some others help you to fill its columns, who have been silent for some time, that ought to write; but be assured, rather than have your contribution box get empty, I will write for you again.

Under the Shadow of Thy Wings.

Tears, desires, convictions avail but little—you must be "gathered to Christ, even as a hen gathereth her brood under her wings.' There is safety only there; and all that you can do outside that wing will never give you rest, peace, and joy—the things that your soul longs for. Until you come to that, it all goes for nothing—soon to rise up in judgment against you. And if you say, "But I cannot do that; it requires a divine power," those who speak in that way are but too often merely playing with the thing. Christ says "I would have gathered you, but ye would not;" and the same heart that melted over Jerusalem will say, "Depart from me."

Five Minutes in Heaven—McCheyne tells of a little boy who for years suffered great pain. When asked by his minister whether he did not feel like murmuring under the heavy hand of God, he replied, "Oh! sir, five minutes in heaven will repay me for it all"? We were reminded of this by a boy's speaking of his trials and hardships. To be a good, honest boy, one must "endure hardness as a good soldier." But will not five minutes in heaven with those saved through your example, each one a star in your crown of rejoicing, repay you for a life of toil in His service?

An intimate acquaintance with the Holy scripture is a secure heaven and an impergnable bulwark, an immovable tower, an imperishable glory, and impenetrable armor, and unfading joy, and whatever other excellence can be uttered.

Individual faithfulness constitutes Christian harmony.—Mary Dudley.

For the Companion.

New Year's Day.

While reading Hebrew 13: 8, thoughts suggested themselves to my mind, of times past, times present, and times to come. "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever." The years have passed by us very swiftly one by one, and they bring many changes as they pass.—God has spared us to see another New Year begin. And this New Year is sure, like all other years, to bring many changes with it. Happily for us we cannot tell what the changes may be. If we live to see the end of it, we shall have passed through one year more of our trial time, and shall be one year nearer to the end. We shall have traveled one stage farther, either on the road that leadeth to life, or on the road that leadeth to destruction. This will really be the most important change of all to us. To some of us this New Year may bring other changes. Some who begin it in joy, may end it in sorrow; begin it in health, and end it in sickness, and others in death. The frame which now seems so full of health and strength, may, before this year ends, be sleeping in the cold, dark grave. And then there will be no more change till the trumpet sounds, and we all awake to judgment. May God help us to begin this New Year so that, whatever "changes and chances" fall to our share in it, all may be well with us at its close. But in the midst of all the change and uncertainty of life, is there any thing that changes not? Yes, "the blessed Master" is "the same yesterday, and to-day," and for ever." Though year after year hurries by, each seeming swifter in its passing than the last, and each bringing some great changes to us or to those around us; though joy may be changed into sorrow, and sorrow into joy; though new graves swell up in our church yards, and new faces come and go amongst us; though nations rise and fall, and generations pass away; new things introduced, and old things forgotten, the thoughts and notions of men change and shift, and "toss to and fro" like a ship in a storm; yea, though worlds are destroyed, and the stars fall from heaven, yet one there is who changes not, "with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning," for Jesus "Christ" is "the same yesterday, and to-day, and "forever."

How good, brethren and sisters, for us to have something to lay hold upon which cannot change. How blessed a thing to find a rock, upon which, when the storms rage most fiercely over the sea of life, we may cast out an anchor of the soul, both "sure and steadfast." Thus, on this New Year may our hearts be fixed, and centered on Him who is "the beginning and the ending, which is, "and which was, and which is to come."

Ye who have lived to see another year begin, ye know not what it shall bring forth for you, nor whether ye shall live to see it end; "ye know not," even "what shall be on the morrow." Oh hold not by the vain and changing things of this world! Set not your hearts on the frail and uncertain things of time. I will show you that which is changeless and certain forever: go to Jesus Christ, in him is no change. He is the same—the same merciful Redeemer, the same perfect pattern, the same accepted sacrifice,—the same loving master;—the same gracious intercessor; go to him, and "among all the changes of this mortal life," be safe for ever.

But while the first day of the New Year thus points Christ out to us, and bids us think of Him, we must not pass by the special lessons which are taught by him, that are so much despised by false professors, namely the humble institutions of his house. Let us brethren by the grace of God, determine to practice his humble ordinances with clearer views of their essentiality, in the year to come. I have known some brethren, when crowded with Satan's angels, to acknowledge that they did not hold much in the outward ordinances. It looks so cowardly to deny the Lord when pinched a little by the devil's mediums. Let us follow a better course in the year to come. Let us learn a lesson of respect and obedience to the outward ordinances of religion. Christ was obedient to the law for man. He kept all the law of Moses strictly.—He could not himself need those outward ordinances. It was to give us an example, that we should follow his steps. He observed them most carefully. And shall we who do need them,—aye, and most sorely need them,—shall we dare to despise or neglect any one, even the least of those outward aids to religion which we possess. Whether it be baptism, or the Lord's Supper, or feet washing or the holy communion, or the salutation of the kiss, or the annointing of the sick, or attending the public worship of God's house, or whatever it be, that we neglect, that God has commanded, we are surely guilty in the sight of Him who was "obedient to the law of man."

As a blessed Savior, then, we would look to him this day, and from this day forth. O may he be with us, and let us be with Him, throughout its course. As our Savior, let us trace Him, as the year goes on, from the manger to the cross, yea, and to His throne of glory again in heaven. Let His name stand out obove all the thoughts, and cares, and interests, the joys and sorrows, the hopes and fears the good and ill, which this New Year may bring with it. Let the thought of Him bless and sanctify all we do, and all we suffer. While all things are changing around us, and we find nothing secure, nothing lasting, nothing perfect, here,—oh! let this be our watchword and our strength, "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever."

Godlinesss Makes the Gray Hairs of Age Beautiful.—"The hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousness." Age invests many things with peculiar attractiveness. An aged oak, gnarled, wide spreading, lichen-covered; an ancient castle, weather-worn and storm swept, moss-grown and ivy clad—both are beautiful, exceedingly; but of all attractive pictures old time can draw, no sight is so beautiful as the silver locks and radiant features of godly and joyous old age—an aged sire, a venerable mother seated in "the old arm-chair," looking placidly back along the line of trodden years, looking hopefully forward across the bright borders of the Beulah-land, to catch a glimpse of the jasper walls which belt the city of the saints!—*J. Notes of Travel.

After attending a series of eight love-feasts, I arrived safely at my home, on Saturday, November 28th, at 11 o'clock, A. M., and found all well; thank God.

Upon looking at my list of meetings, &c., I discovered that I had been appointed, and that I agreed to attend a meeting in Turcarora Valley, on Sunday at 10 o'clock A. M., at a point about five miles distant, on a straight line from my home. This does not seem very far, of course, but the way either leads across two high mountains, and on account of its zigzag course the distance to be traveled is about nine miles, or to go around through some narrow defiles in these mountains, the distance is about eighteen miles. Being obliged to go on foot, or to borrow a horse to ride, I tried to exert all the wisdom and ingenuity I could command to borrow without appearing much of an encumbrance to the lender. I succeeded tolerably well, at least I thought so. After taking some refreshments, and trying to make other necessary arrangements, besides leaving some very important matters unattended to, for want of abilities, opportunity, &c., I mounted my horse Frank, I now considered him mine to use. I reached the top of the first mountain without any occurrence, worthy of note, or without much difficulty, as it was neither too steep or too high for Frank to carry me up, without doing himself any injury. At one time when I let him rest a little, I looked down upon the beautiful valley, and in a moment I thought of the diversified condition of its eternity bound inhabitants among other things, I thought they were peculiarly blessed because they could remain at their homes, and attend quietly to their domestic affairs—that they did not appear to be directly bound to leave their families and travel off to preach the gospel. I discovered and endeavored to destroy a small root of envy that had unconsciously sprung up. While descending from the other side of the mountain, another scene met my gaze—a long narow valley, variegated with natural sublimity, grandeur, and the wealth and poverty of its accountable beings. In my imagination I soon passed an interview with all that had either shown me so much kindness, or so much hatred, that I could not well avoid remembering them. Oh! the monstrous, extreme littleness of man's heart! While pondering upon its natural inclination to wander away from God; its proneness to be in darknees among the fading vanities of earth, and its wonderful adaptation to reject truth and receive error. I reached the base of the second and higher mountain. My way now led up a deep, narrew winding path at an angle of notless than twenty degrees to the horizon. In some places its depth is caused by the absence of rocks which had to be thrown out in order to get a surface even, scarcely smooth enough for a horse to travel upon; in other sections it is caused mainly by the rushing of water through ic during freshies.

Having dismounted, I pulled off two coats, for they are not only unnecessary, but they are a great encumbrance if wound round ones body while scrambling up such a path-way. even on a cold day, while on other occasions they may be comfortable—useful, and consequently not superfluous. I strapped the heavier one upon the saddle for Frank to carry, the other one I hung across my shoulder; then taking the hitching strap in my hand I commenced the ascent, Frank following me. A saddle and an over coat are heavy enough for any horse to carry up this steep path; but there are different opinions afloat in regard to this, and there may be cases having circumstances connected with them, which should change my views accordingly. After getting fairly started upon the rugged ascent my mind again began to wander, as almost all minds are apt to do; sometimes upon plain practical or abstract principles of truth, and sometimes upon metaphysical subterties, absurdities, &c., but the prevailing imaginations can invariably be traced back to a main object in view, as their foundation or source. For more than forty years, brethren have been passing and repassing these mountainous regions—not in search of gold or worldly fame, we trust, but on missions of love. It is most certainly an object quite fit for the people of God to assemble themselves for the purpose of teaching and learning the way of salvation. A great amount of both physical and mental labor has been expended for the building up of zion, and much more is still required to bring about the period "when all shall know the Lord;" but God will work his work in due time. Laboring, traveling up steep mountains is mans reasonable service to God, and when he has done all and given all he can, he has only done his duty; though his Master smiles upon him, noticing and giving him credit with avery augmented vibration of his heart, occasioned by the performance of duty, even in ascending this or any other elevation. Upon reaching the summit I again looked far out upon mountains, hills, with villages and cultivated fields. Such natural elements and works of art act very powerfully through the eye upon the soul, and sometimes they leave in it the conception of lust which brings forth sin and death; but the eye is not the only avenue to the inner man; the same end may also be accomplished through the sense of hearing, feeling, or tasting. After looking at and thinking upon these things a little, I made some necessary changes and descended from the mountain, arriving at brother Isaac Book's house at dark. Lodged with him, and in the morning went to meeting with him. At the apointed hour he introduced the worship of God by singing and praying with the congregation, after which another brother tried to preach.

If the brethren have any "notes of travel" in their possesion that are more interesting and profitable than these, I would be glad to see them published, and I have no doubt but that many others would be pleased to read them. J. B. GARVER.

Brother Henry:—There are but five of us here, and no speaker. I think if the brethren would preach in this neighborhood a while, good might be done. I wish you would make it known that we are here, and try to send us a preacher. We would be so glad to hear the brethren preach. SPARREL H. HARRIS.

Report of Brother Keller's Recovery.

Inasmuch as it was requested, through the Companion, that I should report, after I have recovered from Small Pox, and tell how I feel toward those who imposed the loathsome disease upon me, and whether I will still persist in harboring every body who knocks at our door, and if so, how I will justify myself in such a course, I will try, in the fear of the Lord, and the spirit of the Gospel, to answer those questions, expecting it to be profitible to the readers of the Companion.

But first of all, I will tell you, that I feel perfectly well again. I would also say that the statement concerning my case in the Companion, on page 768 is nearly correct, with the exception of the sick man being an old man, I would judge him about 35 years of age.

I do not blame the man, who sent the sick man to our place alone, for causing me to catch the disease, but the Constable who took the sick man away, is partly to be blamed also, because, when the sick man was ready, and all fixed to start, I called upon the Constable to assist me to carry out the chaff bed upon the spring wagon. The sick man had just got out of the bed, and it was quite warm yet, I thought if each one of us would take hold at the corners, we would keep it off from us, but the neighbor would not do it, my men were all in the field, and the women, I did not want to help; they had already done their full share. I then first thought, I would throw it out through the window, but the grass was wet, I thought it might do injury to the sick man, so I rolled the chaff bed together and carried it out on the spring wagon, and in this way I think I caught the desease, and so both these men, were instrumental, in part, through the aforesaid circumstances, to bring the disease upon me, not intentionally, but by neglecting their duty, and I was in danger of an untimely death.

The first three days, I thought that the disease would drag me to the grave, and I was much afraid that some more of the family, or perhaps neighbors would follow me, and as soon as we were sure that I had the small pox, we concluded, that we would move my bed in a room at one end of the house, and so we did it. The women first took the carpet, and everything else out of the room, so only my bed, a table, and two chairs, and a stove, was kept in the room, I made my bed, and the fire myself, my dear wife waited on me, and she only, she came through the entry into my room, and before she came in, she changed clothes, and when out again she changed again before she went to the family again it was understood that she should only come to my room, when I needed anything and go right out again, the friends, and neighbors, we told not to visit me, and if any did come, we did not let them come inmy room, and if any one had to csnverse with me, it was done through a window, so we managed the case, used all the care we could, that it should spread no farther, as yet the disease did not go farther, and it is over four weeks since I took it, and we have good hopes that it will stop, you may imagine that we as a family, feel glad, and thankful. Suffer me now as a child, to relate a little more to you. My case appears to me was a singular one. As I said at first, I thought that through this disease I would be removed from time to eternity, to try the realities of the other world. Solemn thoughts occupied my mind. When I used to be called to preach at funerals, when the deceased was a grown person, it was often very near to me, to take for my text, "Set thy house in order, for thou must die and not live." This came home to myself; the question was now, how is now thine own house in order? O, I soon found that it was not so fully in order, as when I preached to others; it was out of order, here and there, the more I examined myself, the more I found things that stood against me; and being very sick, I felt sick unto death. I now felt the need of a throne of grace more than ever. Unbelief would say, there is no more a throne of grace for you, but I would try to believe that there was. I prayed, and reasoned with my God, and wrestled, until I got very nigh a throne of grace.—Through an eye of faith, I saw my Savior at the right hand of God, both on the throne, and he my Savior plead my case, I listened, and the blood of Jesus was handed, and I found mercy, and pardon, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Thanks be to God the Father of our Lord Jesus Chris, who is always ready, when we come to him, with a broken heart, and a contrite spirit. But I was yet very sick, and you need not wonder, if my thoughts still roved over the past, present, and future, and in particular about this life destroying disease, and while my mind was thus engaged, a thought came up, and a sigh followed, and shall now, this disease, which has taken hold upon my body, bring me to my grave? I did not feel that it should, neither did I believe, that God sent it upon me. Then the question arose, am I then of no use at all any more, to my dear family? Am I, and can I, be of no use to the church, to my dear fellow members, and am I of no use to society? Am I become altogether unprofitable, and must I now go to my grave, and be forgotten? Then I brought my case before God, and besought the Lord who has full power over all diseases, to take the life destroying power from this disease, that it might do me no harm. The good Lord doeth what seemeth best in his sight. Not that I will boast, but tell you the truth, shortly after this entreaty, I felt that the Lord, who had all power, had taken my case in hand, and all fears of dying through this disease, disappeared. I felt safe in the hands of the Lord. After the fourth day I did not feel sick any more, only weak, as I ate nothing for four days, and had taken considerable medicine. I was only one week confined to my bed; I was middling full of small pox, but very few filed. I think there will remain no marks on my face, but about being disfigured I was little concerned.

And now as to how I feel, towards those with whom I find fault, and in my opinion, have been partly instumental, of bringing this disease upon me. I of course don't feel to thank them, for the course they took, but of a truth I can say that I love toem, as I love other men in general. If these men were brethren, then it would have hurt my feelings considerably. Outsiders, I am used to this long time, to over look considerable, and so considering the conditions these men are in, I do not find so much fault after all. The Constable has quite a young family; he was afraid, and the other man, who sent the sick man, was never converted. I wish neither of them the small pox, but I wish them both well. I believe too, if I would reason with them both about the circumstance, that they would confess the fault and that would satisfy me altogether.

And about whether we will still persist in harboring every body who knocks at our door, you may depend upon, that we will the more persist in harboring. In all my affliction, and struggle, never a thought come up that we should not have taken this stranger in. No, no; suppose we would have set him away also; I feel satisfied that he could not have stood it long any more. He would likely have despaired and died on the road. How bad and concerned would we have had to feel. I think he was fully as sick as I was, and if I would have been in his stead when I was about the worst, and no body would have taken me in, how I would have felt to bless them. This sick man, after we took him in, and made him a bed, and tea, and soup, he felt revived, and would still tell mother you are doing to much, and wished good Lord would bless us. He appeared, as if he could not thank enough, for the kindness the family showed to him. He told me the morning the constable took him away, that if he could he would gladly work for me several months. He wished the blessings of God to rest upon us. He was uncommon full of small pox. Now the reason itself should be sufficient to justify any man, to persist in such a course. I think the believer in Christ, and in his teachings, and the teachings of the Apostles, has somewhat more, whereby to justify such a course, did not Paul teach the brethren at Rome, (Romans, 12 : 13,) that they should be "given to hospitality"? And did not Peter in his 1st Epistle, 4 : 9, teach, to "use hospitality one to another without grudging"? And did not not Paul, also insist upon Bishops, to be "given to hospitality"? 1 Timothy 3: 2, and Titus 1 : 8, a Bishop, to be a "lover of hospitality"? And I do not know why all the people should not be as good as the Bishop. He is only man also, and we find that Paul taught the Hebrews "not to be forgetful to entertain strangers," and I knew the man we took in, was a stranger. This is about the way I justify such a course. And I am persuaded, that all the world would be justified, to begin thus to deal with their fellow creatures. I think it it is done from the heart, then the Savior will some day say "ye have done it unto me." I would be afraid, not to persist in such a course, because Christ taught plainly in Matth. 25 : 41, 42, 43, verses, if we don't, then some day, he will set us on the left hand, and say "unto us, depart from me ye cursed, into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels, for I was a hungered and ye gave me no meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me not in; naked and ye clothed me not; sick, and in prison; and ye visited me not."

Dear Brother :—After my respects, I wish to say to you, that I think I am 75cts back on the Companion, which I will send you in this letter. I feel too poor to take the Companion, I am getting old and have nothing only what I can earn by my labor, and money is hard to get; but I would like very much to read your paper. If you see cause to, send it on, and if I can hereafter, I will pay up. I would feel thankful if you would send it on, but I can't pay in advance. Now it is for you to do as you like, send it on or stop it. Let me know in next number whether you received the money, and if all is right. Yours in love.

MARTHA MANLEY.

REMARKS :—According to our book you owed nothing, so that you have now paid 75 cents on volume 8. We think you ought to have the Companion, and will send it on. The Lord always prompts his people to have a concern for his poor, so that we shall lose nothing.

Gleanings.

If any of the brethren are traveling, and can stop here, will make arrangements to have preaching. We have only a school room at this time, but hope and pray that there may be some good done in these places too.

Dear Companion :—A few items of Church news may be of interest.

Elder Kurtz, condition is far from favorable—he is subject to prostration at any time. He however is strong in the Faith.

On Friday the 15th inst. Brethren J. W. Shoemaker of this (Chippewa) branch and Moses Weaver of Ashland branch, started on a mission of love to the brethren of N. W. Ohio, Indiana and Michigan, and perhaps Iowa and Canada.

Yours Fraternally,

E. L. YODER.

Brother Henry :—You asked how many "thanksgiving sermons will be reported ?"

I can say there was preaching in Spring Run meeting-house. The 7th chapter of Daniel was read and remarks were made from the same.—Not many were present but more than two or three, thus the blessing was theirs.

There was also an appointment in Dry Valley meeting-house. You say "It is a custom among the world's people to present their editors and servants with a fattened turkey, or other edibles, and clean meats, previous to such or similar occasions," then ask "would it be making too much after the world for our patrons to serve us in the same name ?"

I say yes. It is not the design to feast, * but contrarywise to Fast. Thanksgiving used to be called "fast day," and we think it should be observed as such. Either treat it as an ordinary day or else comply with the demand which is, fast, but do not so far construe it as to do quite the reverse and thus feast.

We read in scripture of feasts but not that they ever occurred on fast days.

Query.

Where do we read that "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpents head ?" Who can tell ?

Brother Benjamin Benshoff, Johnstown Pa., says : I would like to see the Youth continued, and believe that it would be instrumental in doing good. As a Sunday school paper I like it, and have noticed how eagerly it is reached for. I will take two copies.

Scarlet Fever and Small Pox are prevailing in the town. We are all well.

* A short time before Christmas or on that day is a very suitable time for sending presents. The wise men of old gave gifts to Christ (see Matthew chapter second).

Dear Companion :—I have just returned from a visit to the Brethren in Marshall county, Indiana, where I assisted in holding a series of meetings, in the village of Bourbon, on the Pittsburg Fort Wayne and Chicago Rail Road. According to the best of my recollection we held ten meetings in the village. At first the audience was small, but gradually increased, so that at about the last six appointments we had a crowded house, and the house was very large and commodious. We made it a point to give special attention to doctrinal points, such as Baptism and the Lord's Supper, the object being to enlighten the people of the place upon the manner in which the brethren view those points, as well as to show the necessity of obeying those points of doctrine in humility and faith.—Brethren John Barnhart and John Knisely met us and assisted. There was not much present indication of success, but we hope there was seed sown that will eventually yield fruit. This village of Bourbon is located in the Yellow River Branch of the Brotherhood. We had the pleasure of making the acquaintance of brother George Shively, who is one of the, if not the oldest Elder in the Brotherhood, having been in the ministry for over 52 years. He travels but very little any more in consequence of age. Two of his sons, Jacob and David are ordained Elders in the same church. Besides these we have formed pleasant acquaintances with many of the members in this church.

It is here that Salem College is located. We had the pleasure of attending school a day and a half, took notice to everything that was done, and addressed, in our feeble manner, both teachers and pupils, and as many of our Brethren may wish to know what Salem College is like, I will say a few words upon that subject.

The building and ground was donated to them by the citizens of Bourbon, who for the most part are "out siders," upon the condition that the Brethren perpetuate a school in the place, for at least 4 years. The location is a nice one, being a gentle elevation above the surface of the surrounding country, which country is quite level. The building is a substantial two-story brick. I did not learn the exact size but it must be at least 40 by 50. The school is as yet in its infancy, but with proper management on the part of the Trustees, and proper liberality on the part of the Brethren generally, who are favorable to education, and proper silence on the part of those who are not, it will become what so many of us for a long time thought the Brotherhood needs ; namely a school where we can send our children to get an education without coming in contact with the many evils they are exposed to in other institutions. One of the worst of which is sectarianism. Some of our children will have education and if we don't educate them, somebody else will, and that very often to their ruin. Upon the whole we think there is a good beginning at Bourbon, and we take the responsibility in behalf of the Brethren there, to ask the Brotherhood in general, that if you can't say, or do anything for Salem College, don't do anything against it. Let us give it a fair trial and if we find it not good then condemn it.

A Panic.

Ed. C. F. C. :—I will give you a sketch of travels.

On the 15th of September, I left home on a tour through Armstrong, Clairon, Indiana, and Jefferson counties, in this state. Had some very interesting meetings, and had the pleasure of seeing some added to the Church. Arrived at home on the 30th, and found all well.

On the 13th of Oct., I left home to visit the Glade Run congregation, in Armstrong Co. Remained with the brethren there ten days. Had very interesting meetings, six were added to the church. Here I saw the greatest excitement I ever witnessed. We held communion services on the 20th, and had a very quiet, and pleasant meeting, until just when closing. When the people rose in the closing prayer, a sleeper broke on the women's side of the house, and some one cried, "the house is falling" And then there was a rush for the door, and in the rush six more sleepers broke. Such a sight I had never seen. Women jumping out the windows, regardless of consequences, some threw their children (infants) out through the windows ; men on the outside caught them that they were not injured. Such screaming I never heard, some even when out of the house ran through the grove screaming and crying. Mothers lost their children and were crying for them ; "and would not be comforted." But I cannot give a discription of the scene. To get an idea of it, the reader must consider himself in a house crowded with people. It was supposed there were between five and six hundred in the house above ; suppose the most of them panic stricken, running, jumping, screaming, climbing and tumbling over benches and tables, and you may have a faint idea of what I am trying to describe.—Men junped out of the windows at the lower side of the house, the windows being eight feet from the ground, and yet no one was injured. One woman fell on the outside of the window, and others trod upon her and hurt her slightly. All proved an unnecessary fright. We finally succeeded in quieting those in the house, and closed our meeting with prayer. I arrived home on the 23d, found all well.

Brother Holsinger:—Enclosed I foward to your address $2.00, as pay for the Companion for 1872; for the extra 50 cents, please send me Almanacs.

I hope dear brother you will not feel disappointed, at not receiving an order for the Pious Youth. I do highly esteem your efforts to spread useful literature among all classes, and especially to train the youny mind in the proper channel. My reasons for not doing something to spread the Pious Youth before our children here, is that I have most too heavy a burden to bear ; let me explain myself ; 3 or 4 months ago, I started a colored Sabbath School, some 4 miles from town. In writing to my little son in Pennsylvania, I requested him to ask some of his associates to send me a few little Sabbath-school papers, and books, such as had been used by them. I made the same statement to a brother in Philadelphia. The response was ; two boxes, weighing about 230 pounds, filled with Sabbath-school papers, books, &c. Among the lot were 1200, Sabbath-school papers, that had never been opened ; lots of Pious Youths, Little Pilgrims, Children's Papers, Young Reapers, Child's World, and I don't know what all, which tend to show the hearts of dear brethren and sisters, running over with kindness, and christian sympathy, towards the ignorant and need; and of the dear children whose kind hearts prompted them to send away the little keep-sakes. May God bless them in their kind acts. It certainly is no burden for me to bundle up a roll and distribute to the anxious colored ones, as I go among them; but they are still in poverty, and at that place are straining themselves to pay a debt upon their meeting house, so I cannot look for them to pay express charges. What I distribute among them, and the labor I perform in their midst, must be free. The burden of which I spoke is a bill of Express charges ,of $13,50 for the two boxes.

Accept kind regards for all the Compaion family, and believe me as ever. Affectionaly, E. HEYSER.

Continued Communication.

BY DR. BEACHLY.

The Publishing house of H. R. Holsinger is a substantial, three story-brick building; desirably located on the corner of Centre and Schoolstreets, opposite Philson and Black's bankin g house. The whole building is warmed from a heater placed in the basement. The ground for the foundation and material for the building were purchased only a few months previous to issuing the first No. of the C. F. C. at Dale City. The gas used for illuminating purposes is furnished from Palmers patent gas fluid.

About ten persons are thus far regularly engaged, while three or four irregular assistants find work by the hour. The large Potter Press, run by steam,is a grand monument of the mechanical ingenuity of man, and the wonder and admiration of the establishment. The Job Press, is Gordon's half-medium, a beautiful combination of mechanical ingenuity. The fancy type, letters, fingers and flourishes,and general Job printing material and a No. 1 job printer,enables the proprietor to do any kind of job work, with a degree of neatness, style, and cheapness not surpassed by the craft anywhere. Parties in need of this kind of work will do well to make a note of this.

To strangers and parties that wish to locate at Dale City I would say, that our town is located on the Western slope of the Alleghany mountains and in the pleasant valley of Cassel Man's River, thirty seven miles west of Cumberland, Maryland, and one hundred and twelve miles east of Pittsburg. We are comparatively a new town, the ancient town of Meyer's Mills, not being in the corporation.) We have a large commodious brick school building ; one hundred and seventy five pupils, graded into three departments.

Building material,—lumber, stone and brick are near at hand, and at reasonable prices. Five or six Steam Saw Mills within easy reach. Two Planing Mills, having all the machinery necessary to manufacture anything out of lumber the builders may want.

We have honest, enterprising merchants, selling Dry Goods, Hardware, Drugs, and notions at fair prices.—Mechanics, artisans, manufacturers and merchants are kept busy, and by spring, Houses and other improvements will be pushed vigorously. By April next there will be an influx of population of over one thousand.

Mining for Iron ore, Fire Clay, and Coal, will engage many laborers and much capital. A Fire Brick yard adjacent to our town, with a capacity to manufacture twenty thousand brick daily.

Dale City and the country surrounding it is improving rapidly in every respect. Laborers and mechanics of all classes will here find plenty of employment at remunerative wages. From the comparative isolation heretofore, the opening of the R. R. found our country undeveloped, and in many respects behind the age.—Land and property cheap, parties coming now will be able to obtain cheap and desirable locations, for their future homes, in a community principally composed of honest, industrious and well disposed citizens. The following churches are represented in our coummunity: Omish, Menonites, German Reformed, Lutherans, Roman Catholics, Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Methodist, Episcopals, Albrights, and the Brethren. The Omish although an industrious, honest class of people,—are evidently on the wane in our county. Brother's Valley, and Stoney Creek townships, ten years ago, had a numerous congregation ; now they are almost extinct. I believe there is still a preacher there, by name Joseph Schrack, but no flock. There are some eighteen or twenty Omish families in Elklick and Summit townships. Their meetings are held in their dwelling houses, Preaching altogether in the German language. They are great sticklers for the oid order. It is a sad thought to see a respectable, well meaning denomination die out. If they had a mission from God it must be about run out. The most evident cause of their decline in our county is the school master, the printing press, and a rational christian sentiment.

The Menonites, to my knowledge have only one minister in this county, and but few members. The other named churches are making efforts to keep up with the age of progress and development.

The church of the Brethren is well represented here, both as regards Ministers and lay members. We have preaching at two places every Lord's day, as follows: at Dale City meeting house and in Addison; Berkley's Mills, and near Salisbury ; Mechanicsburg and Greenville ; which gives us meeting regularly at each meeting house every three weeks. At the Dale City meeting house every Sabbath evening.

At our last council meeting we established a missionary fund, which will be supported by voluntary contributions. The means are used to defray the necessary expenses incurred by our ministers in traveling when on church duties, and for the same purpose for ministers visiting our churches.

A few Words to the Companion.

I shall dispense with all papers for awhile, and take the Book, and see which is the most soothing to the mind. I am some grieved by times, reading the Companion, and seeing of the brethren visiting, and having their good meetings, though always, where the brethren are the plentiest. We here in Illinois, are but few and very scattered; only two ministering brethren in the space of four counties. There is more requested of them than they can perform. People are very fond to hear them preach. We would now ask, why is it, that there cannot some more ministering brethren come this way and locate themselves here. I think that we have as pleasant land to farm here as there can be found. We raise abundance of wheat and corn. Farms can yet be bought from 25 to 40 dollars per acre. The prospect for a railroad is good. I will now say, come out from the rocks and hills, to where there is pleasure in farming. G. W. HORN.

Also in the same congregation, Dec. 2d, 1871, SARAH ELIZABETH, daughter of brother William and sister Mary A. IKENBERRY, aged ten years, less one day. Her disease was Diphtheria, which caused her to suffer greatly; but amidst her great suffering she was conscious that she must die, At times she said, "O, if I only was gone."—Some time before her death she said she saw Willie and Lettie, her playmates who had died a short time before her, and a lamb lying before them; they looked so sweet with their hands locked. She made many expressions, as, "I am going home to die no more." She also told who should preach her funeral and what the text should be, and what hymn should be sung. She then said, "Father, lay me down, and I will go to sleep and awake in Jesus." So she breathed her last without a struggle. Her mother had died several years before her. According to her request her funeral was attended by the writer. The text selected was 103 Psalm, 15th and 16th verses. Brother W. H. Bowman, of Benton, Iowa, assisted.

Also, in the same congregation, Dec. 1st, 1871, ELIZA, infant daughter of brother John and sister Mary HOFF, aged 11 days.—Funeral by the writer from 2 Kings, iv. 26, last part. Jacob Murray.

In the Snake Spring Valley congregation, Bedford county, Pa., December 11th, 1871, brother JOHN BURGER; aged 65 years and 21 day. The subject of this notice, near as I can ascertain, served in the office of deacon, about 20 years, which he filled faithfully, Brother Burger, was among the first with, whom, we formed acquaintance, after we connected our self with the people of God.—His instructions and admonitions, will long be remembered; although he is dead, we think we hear the echo of his voice, still ringing in our ears. His desease was Inflamation of the Kidneys. He leaves a companion (sister,) and eight children. (7 of them are members of the church) to mourn their loss, their loss however is His great gain. On the 13th his remains were conveyed to their last resting place, followed by a large concourse of people. Funeral occassion improved by the brethren, from the latter part of the 4th chapter of 1st Thessalonians.

S. A. MOORE.

In the Fourmile church, Union county, Ind., November 9th, 1871, MATTHEW LYBROOK, son of Baltzer and Jane Lybrook, aged, 3 years, 8 months, 21 days. Disease, Scarlet Fever. Little Matthew leaves kind parents, one brother, and six sisters to mourn his loss. He was followed to his last resting place by many relations and friends. The ninth day after his departure, his parents were baptized by the brethren believing, as David of old, that their child was gone and they cannot call it back again, but can prepare to go where he is.

Also, in the same church, November 28th, 1871, JOHN EMMET WITTER, son of brother Martin and sister Lydia Witter, aged, 4 years, 4 months, and 4 days. Disease Lung Fever. Little Johny was sick only 4 days. Their loss is his eternal gain.—Funeral occasion improved by brother Alfred Moore, and the writer from the 39th Psalm, 4th verse. JACOB RIFE.

In the Norristown branch of the Mingo congregation, Montgomery county Pa., Nov. 12th, our much beloved brother, JESSE P. NYCE, in the 47th year of his age, after, a very short sickness of nervous fever, which he bore very patiently, his hope and faith was sure and steadfast unto his end. In the departure of our dear brother the church here has lost a great help, and we feel his loss very much. His seat was never empty when his health would permit him to be there. He was always very zealous in the vineyard of his Master. But now his melodious voice is hushed amongst us, until we shall be reunited in that upper and better world, where we can again join to-gether to sing the sweet songs of Moses and the Lamb, with all the redeemed forever, Amen. He leaves a wife (a dear sister in the Lord), and one child to mourn their loss. The funeral occasion was improved by brethron John H. Umstead and H. Cassel at the house, and Eld. Samuel Harley at the meeting-house, on the 108 Psalm 14th and 15th verses.

Also, in the same congregation, our beloved old grand-mother and sister in the Lord, ELIZABETH NYCE, mother of the above Jesse P. Nyce, on the 3d of Dec., aged 87 years, 4 months, and 24 days. She had been totally blind for over two years, and confined to her bed almost one year. It was her prayer by day and night that the Lord would call her home, and especialy since the death of her dear son, to whom she was very much attached, her longings were increased. The Lord has heard her prayers, and has taken her to himself, and we believe she is now again united with those she so dearly loved. She was a sister to Eld. Wm. Price deceased from Indian Creek, Montgomery county, Pa., also, a sister to brother John Price of Upper Dublin church, Pa. I think she was the last of the family, On the 6th of Dec., she was laid by the side of her son Jesse, until the trump of God shall call them forth again to immortality. Funeral improved by Eld. H. Cassel at the house, on Isaiah 3: 10, 11, at the meeting-house, by Eld. Samuel Harley, Psalm 37: 37.

She leaves a sorrowing husband, a large family of chidren and an extended circle of friends to mourn her departure. On Monday, the 27th, her remains were taken to the Brethren's burying ground, followed by a large concourse of friends and Neighbors. The occasion was improved by brethren Wolf and Shiveley Sister Minnick was an exemplary sister. She was loved by all; had no enemy in the world that we know of. We truly sympathize with our beloved, bereaved brother. His loss is irreparable. May the Lord who gave, and who took away, sustain him in his sad bereavement. Disease, Dropsy of the Heart. Text 2 Timothy, 4: 7, 8.

A MONTHLY PUBLICATION

Designed to Promote the Welfare, and enlarge the number, of the class of persons whose name it bears.

One dollar a year in advance.

THE

Christian Family Companion.

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

VOLUME VIII. DALE CITY, PA., TUESDAY, JAN. 9, 1872. NUMBER 2.

"Give to Him that Asketh Thee."

If the poor man pass thy door,
Give him of thy bounteous store;
Give him food, and give him gold;
Give him shelter from the cold;
Aid his lonely life to live;
For 'tis angel like to give.

Though world-riches thou hast not;
Give to him of poorer lot;
Think thou of the widow's mite;
In the holy Masters sight;
It was more, a thousand fold,
Than the rich man's hoard of gold.

Give, it is the better part;
Give to him—"the poor in heart;
Give of love, in large degree,
Give of hope and sympathy;
Cheer to him who sighs forlorn,
Light to him whose lamp is gone.

Give the gray haired wand'rer room;
Lead him gently to the tomb.
Let him not in friendless climes,
Float adown the tide of time.
Hear the mother's lonely call,
She's the nearest one of all.

And the last, abandoned one,
In the pathway do not shun;
Of thy kindness she hath need;
Heal with balm the bruised reed.
Give, and gifts above all price
Shall be thine in paradise. E. P. P.

For the COMPANION.

Re—creation.

Change, change, eternal change, is the divine order of nature. We have day light, and darkness; spring, summer, and winter: time for work and time for repose; but there is no standing still. Action is life—inaction is death. The planets continue in perpetual motion, and the human heart beats time to our breathing. From birth till death there is no cessation, no stopping. We are undergoing a constant change, for better or for worse, in ever being re-created.—Once in every seven years,—some physiologists say six—the human body undergoes a complete change. All the material there is of us to-day will have passed off, and a new body taken on, re-created, in the course of seven years or less.

Looked at from our present stand points, the process of life and of change seem very slow; but when we look back, we realize more fully how "rapidly time flies," and how short is our stay here on earth. The poet thus expresses.

"A point of time, a moments space,
Removes me to yon heavenly place,
Or shuts me up in hell."

But the question for us to consider is this, Are we, when being remade, improving, or are we retrograding? We are ascending or descending, getting stronger or getting weaker.—Having attained the stature of men, are we now in right relations with the laws of matter and of mind, or are we running counter to them? If living right, if conforming strictly to God's requirements, we shall continue to improve from youth to age, from time to eternity. If on the contrary, we disregard the laws that were established for our guidance and our good, if we run counter to them, the consequences will be fatal to us and to our posterity. The wicked shall not live out half their days.

In being re-created, we must remember that the human body, like the plant and the tree, grows on what feeds it. Good food with good air and water makes good blood, while bad, insufficient or innutritious food, impure air, and bad drink tend to degrade the blood and lower the tone and quality of body and brain, in the same way that poor soil produces only weeds or brambles instead of trees and vines with delicious shade and fruits.

Reader, how are you living? If young, you are growing into a strong robust, vigorous man? Are you taking such exercise as will develop bones, muscles, and breathing power." Or are you sapping the foundations, wasting your vitality, and fitting yourself for the alms house or a premature grave. The process of re-creation is going on and you are changing. If much in the open air, performing some daily manual labor, sleeping regularly and living in careful observance of the Christian precepts; you are improving and may hope to come into healthy manhood. But if confined within doors, keeping late hours, taking little or no bodily exercise, and stimulating with tobacco, and narcotic or alcoholic liquors, the brain will become impaired, the lungs small, the circulation sluggish, the muscles weak, the physical quality poor, the vitality low, and the health wanting.

The Lord's House.

Jesus said "it is written, my house shall be called the house of prayer," but by trafficing, or trading, the Jews had "made it a den of thieves."—Christ, for wise purposes, drove them with their traffic, out of the temple.—A question arises in my mind, was it only done once? I answer, no.—The first time he done it was at the commencement of his ministry, and at this time he did it with a scourge of small cords, as we find in John 2; and this was done at least 2, if not 3, years before the one mentioned in Mark 21, and this was done one day before the one mentioned in Mark 11. By comparing Mark 21, with Mark 11, we find that when he came to Jerusalem, he entered the temple of God, and cast out all them that sold and bought in the temple, &c., and when the eventide was come, he went out of the city into Bethany, and on the following morning he returned, entered the temple, and once more drove them out. How he found them occupying the temple the fourth time, is not so plainly stated, neither is it stated in the parable of the fig tree, how the dresser found, it at the close of the fourth year. "But," says one "the temple was occupied by the traffickers, and the fig tree had only leaves. Well, yes, but who can not learn a great and practical lesson from both those narratives.

"Abide in Him."

To Brother Andrew Cost.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

"As He is, so are we in this world."

Heaven's impress is on all the elect. The seed of God matures into God's harvest. The Divine life within must stamp the surface with the Divine image. Fellow to the eternal in our renewed being, "from our bellies will flow rivers of living water," and wherever we go we baptize the world with the beatitudes of all Christly dispositions. Were there no constitutional terms of correspondence in the soul in its broken condition, there would be an innate impossibility of recovery from apostasy and recomposition in the Divine order: and had the soul not room enough to hold God in the essential elements of its being, no character fit for heaven could be developed by the Divine inbeing. It is our privilege, our glory, and our unspeakable joy, that we may be "filled with all the fullness of God." Grace be with you, brother beloved.

Perhaps no saint is so deep in the life of God as to know fully what is comprised in this salutation. It is a greeting that sums up all of good that man can appropriate or God bestow. I will not enter into an explanation of it, but leave you to study it every day of your life till grace is consummated in glory, and Christ and angels salute you with the effusions of everlasting love. He that studies natural science, or aught that is learned by induction, must gain knowledge by mental toil, and unless the mind is put to stress we gradually slide to the foot of the class. But in the school of Christ we study with the heart, and learn the great mystery of God through the affections. A cold-hearted person may know much about Christ, but only the loving, willing, trusting, self-renouncing, obedient soul knows Christ Himself. Memorizing the Bible is not knowing God, and living as by "will-worship" is not abiding in him. To know him is, in its way, a real incarnation—God dwelling in us by faith, our life "must be hid with Christ in God," so that we be warmed and quickened by His presence and inward fellowship if we are to possess any saving knowledge of Him. To abide in Him is to have Him as the tree has the sap, the constant, ever-operative principle that gives tone and form to all "the issues of life." This requires a close walk, a well-ordered life—hands and feet, eyes and ears and tongue, fastened to the Divine telegraph at the centre, reporting faithfully the thoughts and impulses of God—a heart that is constantly and sedulously set round with the picket-guard of holiness, warding off foes without, and subduing foes within. This is to "keep one's self," so as not to be "touched by the wicked," for where there is an abiding in God, there is no smallest point left that is congenial to the satanic nature. "Abide in Him," and His nature will evermore open to your inner vision, and your nature in Him, until you shall "see Him as He is, and be like him."

Honesty.

Honesty consists in adhering to truth, justice, fair-dealing, and virtue; constant adherence to rectitude. To lie and cheat are both acting the reverse of an honest man. Even among those who profess to lead a godly life, some, in their daily avocations, are either telling or acting lies, deceiving in order to gain what is temporary and perishable. Yes, among those who profess to follow the meek and lowly Jesus, such characters are to be found.

Some, if they have joined some denomination, see that they have not built upon the right foundation, yet are not honest, enough to reform! If he should leave his church and go to some other where he could enjoy himself, or do as God requires at his hands, he might make enemies, and so he stays where he is, though he cannot enjoy himself. He is living after the will of men, and not the will of God.

Others who have not, as yet, made a start in the divine life, are halting between two opinions; they cannot know where to go to please every body, as they would like to do. You are living toward the will of men and not of God. Whosoever does not forsake, father, mother, brother, wife, or sister, and follow Christ, cannot be his disciple. This is not acting the part of an honest man. A man that does not live as he understands his duty, without regard to what others might have to say about him, is indeed living dishonest against his Maker. Would that all my readers, without regard to age, or sex, would live as they know they should live. What a change there would be! "But to him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin."

A man is not far from ruin when he can say, without blushing, "I don't care how I live, if I only get the respect of others." Such a man can never be trusted. Young men hardly commit a greater mistake than to think of gaining the esteem of others by yielding to their wishes contrary to their own sense of duty. Such conduct is always morally wrong, and rarely fails to deprive one, both of self-respect and the respect of others. People think they must conform to custom; and if in buying and selling they sometimes say things that are not true, and do things that are not honest, why, their neighbors do the same; they say, in order to succeed in business it is out of the question to be strictly honest. Now, if it were indeed so, I would say to such: then quit your business; better dig, and beg, too, than tamper with conscience, sin against God, and lose your soul. But is it so? Is it necessary in order to succeed in business, that you adopt a standard of morals more lax and pliable than the one placed before you in the Bible? Perhaps for a time a rigid adherence to rectitude might bear hard upon you; but how would it be in the end? Will not a fair character, an approving conscience, and an approving God, be an abundant compensation for this little deficiency in pelf? Oh, there is an hour coming, when one whisper of an approving mind, one smile of an approving God, will be accounted of more value than the wealth of a thousand worlds like this! In that hour nothing will sustain you but the consciousness of having been governin life by worthy and good principles; which will strew joy-giving rays about your pathway to the tomb. Therefore live honest, upright, and God will smile upon you, and will give you an inheritance eternally in heaven, where parting will be known no more,—where we can live in the celestial abode of God.

Mothers, Talk With Your Children.

What you wish to say to your children, say to them now, death may cut you off in your prime, and they be bereft both of your presence and the remembrance of your advice and counsel. Above all, what you must wish for, pray for now; "pray-ing breath is not spent in vain." And if your life is spared, time is passing, your children are growing, almost inperceptibly, into men and women, full of their own ideas, projects and plans.

Therefore, teach them now, while at your knee, and you have their ear more than the world; tell them now, instil day by day the sweet gospel lessons of your youth; what experience and observation have taught you, also read to them. These things, in time to come will be to them as a well of living water, from which they will drink deep and be refreshed, though now it may almost seem like water poured on the ground, they seem so heedless of your advice and admonitions. How can they appear but indifferent? They know not the value of your teachings, they can not know now, but you know, and you can not escape guilt if you do not fortify them against responsibility and care by words of wisdom that in due time will ripen into golden sheaves whether you live to see it or not.

The evil one is busy sowing tares. Shall not you, the anxious, praying, loving mother, be as busy sowing good seed? "In the morning and in the evening withhold not thy hand."—The Pastoral Visitor.

One said to a universalist, "you believe that Christ died to save all men?" "Yes, I do." "And you don't believe there is a hell?" "No, I do not." "You dont believe there is any punishment hereafter?" "No, I do not: men are punished for their sins in this life." Well, let us put your system together. It amounts to just this: that Christ died to save us from nothing at all! Not from hell, because, according to you, there is none; not from punishment in a future state of being, for he receives his whole punishment in this life. Yours is the absurd spectacle of ropes and life preservers thrown, at an immense expense, to save a man who is on dry land, and in no danger of being drownded. Let me tell you that your religion is stark infidelity. If you heartly believe the Bible, you could not believe Universalism.

They who would abound in hope, peace, and joy, should be much in prayer to Him who is the giver of every good gift, and whose face none seek in vain.

Speak Gently, In Love Exhort one another.

We are minded to drop a few thoughts just here, while reflecting upon a criticism we have just read in No. 47, C. F. C. I think and imagine I see a sad expression come over the countenance of Sister Mellinger while perusing those criticisms. Out of love I am constrained to believe she penned those words of exhortation and encouragement in No. 44 of Companion. It made me feel glad to have such evidence that there are those among us that are not ashamed of their faith and practice, and have a zeal for the ancient land-marks. I am often pained to the heart to discover, in the communications of some of the writers of our periodicals, a spirit that seems to lightly esteem those views that touch upon the order and customs of our old fathers and mothers, and those that walk in their footsteps. Now brethren those things should not be. Oh, let us speak or write gently, as though our pens were dipped in love as well as ink, or rather, that the promptings of our moving pens emanate from the elements of a heart and soul that know nothing but a "life hid in Christ!" We could see nothing contrary to the dictates of the spirit of Christ or the Gospel in our dear sister Mellinger's words of exhortation, but much to commend. Oh, let us not be too ready to weigh everything that does not just suit our inclinations in the balances of Absolutism. Her views relative to the cap, or covering, when looked at in a qualified sense, would seem to say: "In our outward appearance, a plain cap will separate us from the world about as much as anything else, it thus being an outward sign of that inward grace that makes us a separate people from the world." And her words conveyed the idea that if we were truly looking to Christ, and by the cross were crucified to the world and the world to us, then we would not be ashamed to submit to that time honored, and I might say, heaven approved order, that shows to the world that we have a heart that not only feels that we are spiritually a separate people from the world, but that in every way, even in conversation, conduct, and outward appearance we have no inclination to be linked arm in arm with the world. And as to the rejoicing when she first willingly put on the covering alluded to, surely we could not understand her to mean that the simple outward thing of itself caused that joy; but it was an outburst of that inward grace causing an entire obedience to the will of God, and triumph over sinful pride. So we understand her in her "childlike" simplicity of expression. And would to God more of us had that simplicity of expression and love.

It is a fact, generally admitted, that the gaudy and fashionable adornment of the body is an outward sign of pride and folly in the heart—an impressive evidence of what is within. Is it not passing strange, that some can not conceive the idea that there is anything whatever in dress, bearing upon the subject of piety? Of course we understand the essentials of the Christian religion must have their centre in the "inner man;" but if the heart is fully consecrated to all the requirements of the Christian graces, it is absolutely certain there will be an outward expression and evidence of their existence throughout the entire man. His eating, drinking, talking, dealing, dressing, &c., will be governed in accordance with those graces. Christ, the "meek and lowly in heart," will be the guiding star, and all the characteristics of the individual, will harmonize with His teachings. It is worthy of remark that very often those persons that teach that the dress signifies nothing, also teach by their actions that the religion of Christ does not in any way separate them from the world.

To return, I do not intimate that our sisters sadness would be brought about in consequence of what she had said or done, but that her loving efforts should be the grounds of such criticisms as have appeared. Brethren and sisters, speak gently; write, if possible, so as not to offend. See that ye "despise not one of these little ones." I know of several correspondents that have been intimidated to lay down their pens because of a want of forbearance and love in some others, attributing their efforts to selfish motives; such as, desiring to see their names in print, &c. &c.,

Brethren and sisters, if our motives are pure, and I hope they are, let us not be so easily silenced; for they that so speak know not what they do. Many, now efficient watchmen on the walls of Zion, would not be there had they yielded up the sword because of discouragements, and often, too, these discouragements came from those that belong to us. I often take the part of our sisters when the world laugh at their modest apparel and child-like obedience to the rules and regulations of the church, (which are in accordance with the teachings of the New Testament or spirit of the Gospel), and I feel like taking their part when they come out boldly in the congregation of thousands that read our periodicals and speak words of comfort and exhortation to help us on our journey. The "man of sorrows" was not forsaken by the women that loved him ; they crowded near him in his most trying moments. He wept with them. The apostles felt the warmth and zeal of the women of their time, and commended them for their good deeds and strong faith. Shall we lightly esteem their zeal now ? God forbid ! but may they cling close to the gospel ship, and in every moment of danger help to save—help to keep her in the way, and be bright examples of what we should all be in Christ Jesus, where "there is neither male nor female." Let us commend their zeal, and invoke from heaven many a "God's blessing" upon them : Brethren, speak gently, in love exhort one another, that great may be our reward in heaven.

Morality and Religion.

They that cry down moral honesty, cry down that which is a great part of my religion, my duty to man. What care I to see a man run after a sermon, if he cozens and cheats as soon as he comes home. On the other side, morality must not be without religion ; for if so, it may change, as it seems convenient. Religion must govern it. He that has not religion to govern his morality, is not a dram better than my mastiff dog ; so long as you stroke him, and please him, and do not pinch him, he will play with you as finely as may be ; he is a very good moral mastiff ; but if you hurt him, he will fly in your face, and tear out your throat.—Selden.

Extravrgant Dressing of Children.

One of the crying sins of the age is the excessive dressing of children. In many a professedly Christian home the first lesson a child learns is to dress in the prevailing style.

It leaves the cradle admiring its fine clothes, and passes through hours of trial and torture with curling-papers and crimping pins before it has learned to say : "Now I lay me down to sleep."

Multitudes of these gaily-dressed children of the church appear on the streets, and in our Sabbath-schools, bedecked and beplumed like the veriest butterflies.

No wonder that, in the midst of such a display of fluting, and flouncing, and frizzing, and sashing, that dress, in many of our Sabbath-schools, should be the one controlling thought. When children's hearts swell out with pride and vanity, there is little room for lessons of Jesus and heaven.

And mothers would do well to remember that in thus extravagantly dressing their children, they are not only fostering feelings of pride and vanity that may ruin their children, but they are shutting the Sabbath-school doors against the children of the poor.

They cannot come in the presence of these gaily-dressed children of fashion, and bear the scrutiny of their laughing, prying eyes, and they stay away.

And in many cases the only door heavenward, the only window that would let in the light of truth, is darkened, and they are left to drift on in the slums of vice in which they find themselves, to drift down to ruin and to death.

Vain mother ! What answer will you make when the judge of all the earth, in whose sight these poor neglected ones are as precious as the children of a king, requires their blood at your hands ?

Dr. J. W. Alexander, writing of the worldliness of the children of the church, says :

"As I grow older as a parent, my views are changing fast as to the degree of conformity to the world which we should allow in our children. I am horror-struck to count up the profligate children of pious parents, and even of ministers. The door at which those influences enter which countervail parental instruction and example, I am persuaded, is, yielding to the ways of good society. By dress, books, and amusements, an atmosphere is formed which is not that of Christianity. More than ever do I feel that our families must stand in a kind but determined opposition to the fashions of the world, breasting the waves like the Eddystone Lighthouse. And I have found nothing yet which requires more courage and independence than to rise even a little, but decidedly, above the par of the religious world around us."—The Christian Woman.

Non-Conformity.

"And be not conformed to this world but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God" Rom., 12 : 2.

Being lonely this Sabbath evening, and thinking that I might add one mite, perhaps, for the C. F. C., the words of the good old Apostle came to my mind, in which he cautions the Roman brethren, and also us, not to be conformed to this world. My beloved brethren and sisters, I do think this will apply to us at the present day, if ever it did in the Apostle's day ; for I do contend we are following, as a body, entirely too much after the current of the world, and thereby our light is often under the bushel, when it should be upon the candlestick. There are various ways in which we can conform to the world beside dressing ; but in this I do think that we need a great reformation. Why is it, my brethren, why is it, my sisters, that we love so to be like the world, when it is written that we shall not love the world, neither the things of the world, and if we do so, the love of the Father is not in us ? How is it, after we have professed to have left the things that are behind, that we so often cleave to the foolish and unnecessary things of the world ? And how is it, my dear sisters, when we not only hang the unnecessaries upon our own poor bodies, which the Apostle tells us to present as living sacrifices, holy, acceptable, &c., but we hang them upon the bodies of our dear, innocent little children ? What are our thoughts—what can be our thoughts, while thus engaged ? Surely, we think, they are not in heaven ; and more than this, the harm is not only upon us and our children, but look at the influence we exert by so doing over our brethren's children ; for our children need not get very old before they will tell us,—not what that ones children has outside of the church,—but what that brother's children have. O my dear brethren and sisters, let us awake to our best interest ; let us train ourselves and our children for heaven. Let us all resolve afresh to double our diligence in our Master's cause, that the world may have cause to believe that we have been renewed in the spirit of our mind, that we may be able to prove what is God's acceptable and perfect will.

The New and Old Year---Retrospective Thoughts and Admonitions.

Hail! happy New Year! though empires rise and fall, and kingdoms come to nought, thou hast marked another score on the wheel of time, and hast made thy trip around another year unmolested.—We now enter on a new score of time ; the old year, with its productive harvests and beautiful seasons, has passed into oblivion, and upon the history of this world leaves a page of particular note.—And it has also marked some things of no trivial note in our spiritual man. Let us, for a moment, take a look into the past : How many of our friends and fellow beings have, during the year just gone by, departed from this to the spirit world. And yet they are so soon forgotten. Let us stop and think : some, no doubt, were borne up on angel's hands, up, up to the realms of glory.—Others "who sowed to the flesh," had to exclaim, "I am lost ! O, forever lost ! down, down, deeper down I must go, to be a prey to the flames of hell, where there is wailing, weeping and gnashing of teeth."

Many incidents of note might be mentioned, among which are the great fires of the west, which made hundreds and hundreds of people homeless and penniless ; besides the terrible suffering from burning, cold and hunger. Let us think for a moment. Can we restrain a helping hand, or will we, when we sit down to our loaded tables, warm stoves, comfortable houses, etc., think that if it is well with us, it is well with everybody ? Let us lend a helping hand. Let us be ready to do good when we can. God will be our rewarder, and he is ever faithful to his promise. Brethren and sisters in Christ, and all God-loving souls, let us try and with the new year also make a new vow with our Master, to serve him more and better than we have in the past. Let us look back and see how many little crooks and nooks are in the path of our life. Let us try and bid them adieu with the old year, and try with the new to make more sure steps in our duty lest we fail to receive the crown. We must pray to a merciful God, through his Son Jesus, to forgive our past follies, and must press forward with more sure and eager steps, so that if this year shall be our last, it may be well with us, and should this year, as the last, be a year of peace and plenty to most of us, let us not withhold our lips from praising and thanking God our heavenly Father for the same. Forget not thy evening and morning worship. Withhold not the wages of those who reap your fields, help you to gather in your stores, lest their poor children's cries will enter the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth against you. Be not hard to thy man and maid servants, seeing that thou also hast a Master in heaven. Provide and care for those of thine own house, and all that pertain unto thee. Neglect not the church and the needy therein.—Give not thyself over to greediness and filthiness, to riotous living, but live unto the Lord and it shall be well with thee.

Toward Sodom.

The preacher's theme this morning grew out of that sad story of Lot—a story full of lessons to us all

You know when Lot divided the land with his courteous relative, he "pitched his tent toward Sodom."—Why ? Because self-interest as he believed, centered there. He did not go as a missionary ; he had no hope of purifying that pool of iniquity.—He went there for gain. Doubtless the Sodomits knew it and laughed at any moral suasion he may have attempted. The result is familiar to all.

And there are many men to-day pitching their tents toward Sodom.—Men of politics, who make use of unworthy means to accomplish political success ; to whom party gain is greater than the dominance of principle. Men of trade, who indulge undue desires to get on, and who get on unduly—who sacrifice strict probity on the altar of mercantile success.—All sorts of men, who in any form ignore right and just dealing and doing and look first to selfish ends, last to the means which win them.

Toward Sodom! Sodom was laid In ashes, yet Sodom exists even now. in ruins centuries ago, it is still to thousands of people a delightful city of gain and good things, wherein every desire shall be satisfied. Men go towards it as towards a Mecca.—They dwell in it amid its vice, its varied evils, and are content. And when comes the cry of "Up! Get thee out!" and pay little heed.

Toward Sodom! "Every road leads to the world's end," reads an old legend. It were sad indeed, if many were to reach the world's end through Sodom; if selfishness were to overrule all other considerations, until they should become veritable Sodomites of a later day, only to perish as miserably as did the Sodomites of old.—Selected.

Brieflets.

HUMILITY is the solid foundation of all the virtues.

WHAT we win by prayer, we must wear with praise.

FEAR not the threats of the great, but rather the tears of the poor.

HAPPINESS grows at our own firesides and is not to be picked up in the strangers' garden.

MIND this—It is better to accomplish perfectly a very small amount, than to half-do ten times as much.

THE rays of happiness, like those of light, are colorless when unbroken.—Longfellow.

THE earth is fringed and carpeted, not with forests, but with grasses; only have enough of little virtues and common fidelities, and you need not mourn because you are neither a hero nor a saint.—H. W. Beecher.

NOTHING makes a man so miserable as having nothing to do. No men are more to be pitied than those who have their time on their hands, and no employment.

GRIEF knits two hearts in closer bonds than happiness ever can; and common suffering is a far stronger link than common joy.

THE shadows of the mind are like those of the body. In the morning of life they lie behind us; at noon we trample them under our feet; and in the evening they stretch long and deepening shadows before us.

FOUNDATIONS are hidden. It is not the apparent virtues that give stability to character. It is not what a man appears to be, but what he is in the foundations.

IT is said that when one asked Augustine "What is the first article in the Christian religion?" he replied, "Humility." "And what is the second?" "Humility." "And what the third?" "Humility."

"Lay aside every weight."—As applied to Christians, it means they should remove all which would obstruct progress in the Christian course. . . . It is not the same thing in all persons. In one it may be pride; in another vanity; in another worldliness; in another, a violent and ungovernable temper; in another, a heavy, leaden, insensible heart; in another some improper and unholy attachment. . . . Some persons would make much more progress if they would disencumber themselves of the heavy weight of gold which they are endeavoring to carry with them. Even a feather, or a ring, may become such a weight that they never will make much progress towards the prize.

The way in which Christ leads his obedient people is the way of his precepts, "If ye love me, keep my commandments," Christ can never dispense with his own laws; disobedience to them is a proof that we are not his. "He that loveth me not keepeth not my sayings," "He that committeth sin is of the devil." "He that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he is righteous."

Often the believer in Christ feels unhappy in the society of those in whose conversation he finds little to condemn, because the element is wanting which would nourish and edify his spiritual nature. He feels more at home in the company of that poor cottager than of that learned divine; because in the one there is an element of spirituality, which, with all his intelligence and knowledge, the other does not possess.

Beautiful Allegory.

Mr. Chittenden, of Kentucky, was at one time defending a man who had been indicted for a capital offense.—After an elaborate and powerful defense, he closed his effort with the following striking and beautiful allegory:

"When God, in His eternal council, conceived the thought of man's creation, he called up to him the three ministers who constantly wait upon the throne—Justice, Truth and Mercy—and thus addressed them: 'Shall we make men?' Then said Justice, 'O, God, make him not, for he will trample upon the laws.' Truth made answer also, 'O, God, make him not, for he will poliute the sanctuaries' But Mercy, dropping upon her knees, and looking up through her tears, exclaimed, 'O God, make him; I will watch over him with my care through all the dark paths which he may have trod,' Then God made man and said to him, 'O, man, thou art the child of Mercy; go and deal with thy brother.'"

The jury, when he had finished, was drownded in tears, and against evidence and what must have been their own conviction, brought in a verdict of not guilty.

"Christ is Mine."

A man of wealth, while standing one day with a friend on a rise of ground which overlooked his vast possessions, exclaimed, while pointing with much apparent satisfaction to this field and that—to one building and another - "And these are all mine!"

Said his friend, "I know a poor widow in yonder village who can say more than that."

"How so?" inquired the man of wealth.

"She can say," replied the friend. "that Christ is mine."

Dear Christian brother, sister—you whose life is one of burden, toil, or even poverty and want, the "pearl of great price" is yours; there are none so wealthy, but that some time they will gladly acknowledge that your treasures are of greater value than all they possess.

Like the child of a king in a strange land and in present need—you may console yourself with the thought of your Father's love, His wealth, and the palace of glory, which is by right your future dwelling place.

Those who do not know "the truth," may wonder at the patience and cheerfulness with which you endure the trials of life; but if they knew you only waited your kingly Father's good pleasure, to receive a kingdom and crown of glory, they would cease to wonder. Well may we endure, for how slight the sufferings of life in comparison with the glories of eternity.

Sceclected by Hannah Knauff.

Thy Will, O God, be Done.

How easy 'tis while all is well,
A clear bright sky and smiling sun;
And good report our neighbors tell,
To say: Thy will, O God be done.

Our purses filed, our bodies clothed,
From us to beg there is no one;
And if a sorrow, 'tis well soothed,
Whil'st, aye: Thy will, O God be done.

We hear our friends complain, and O!
How hard it is, they say for one,
Who'se sick so much, and sorrow so,
To say: Thy will, O God be done.

We oftimes heard, their story told,
Felt to regret and, and sorrow some,
That they cannot like saints of old
Cry out: Thy will O God be done.

We even doubt, that they love God,
Or that they love his holy Son,
Else, why can't they, beneath his rod,
Still cry: Thy will, O Lord be done.

Then, as I said, how easy 'tis,
For us who sickness have not known,
Whose friends are spared and wants supplied,
To say: Thy will O God be done.

O, let ourselves one time be placed,
The same as that unhappy one,
Who found it hard when crossed—
To say: Thy will, O God be done.

Our money gone, our health decayed;
True friends we can scarcely have one,
Our faults exposed, our virtues hid,
Yet say: O God thy will be done.

O blessed then, will be our state,
If, while deprived of health and friends
We can submit and still repeat,
Thy will, O blessed Lord, be done.

What Ruins Girls.

The Journal of Commerce has no faith in the "pitiful stories" that are told as the invariable preface to the history of depraved young women who are ever represented as fighting alone a terrible battle with want, and clinging to their virtue until hunger, like a gaunt wolf at the door, has rendered them desperate and yielding.

The editor goes to assert, that no young woman in good health, skilled in any womanly accomplishment, need fail of remunerative employment or be driven from this cause to surrender that which should be as precious as her life. He farther says:

"Girls who can do even plain sewing are wanted by respectable employers all the year round, and when one is once proved, the demand for her time is so great that the customers jostle each other in their efforts to secure her services. Those who can fit dresses, or even take old dresses and rejuvenate them, can go out nearly every day in the year into a good family, at from one and a half to two dollars per day, and three good meals thrown in with the price, returning every night if they choose, to their own boarding-house or well-furnished apartments.

"We know a lady who, a few weeks since, even in midsummer, tried to hire a girl to do plain sewing, at one dollar a day, her meals to be taken in the house at the same table with her employer, and who went to more than half a dozen recommended to her before she could find one disengaged, and then secured her only part of the needed time, because she had so many other calls. A smart young girl who is only skilled in plain sewing upon linen and muslin undergarments, goes out with or without her sewing machine at two dollars a day, and a friend at our elbow has been waiting for several weeks to secure a turn at her service.

"The fault is the love of dress and ornaments; a hankering after a life of ease and pleasure, a looseness of moral sense, leading giddy feet along the borders of the downward path; demoralizing books and papers fostering unchaste thoughts; idle hours and empty heads, and a cheek where a modest blush is a stranger."

From the Pious Youth.

Imitate Good Example.

Example is better than precept" is an old and familiar saying. The truth of it is founded upon the fact that children learn nearly all by imitation. The child begins its lisping by saying the words after its mother; the teacher must impart most knowledge to children by requiring them to imitate him. It is therefore, the natural way of learning. Is it not true, dear children, that you love to do what you see others do? When your playmates climb up a tree, or upon the roof of a building, do you not feel like doing so too? Yes you do; I know it. You not only imitate them, but you try to do more then.

Now, dearly beloved children, do you take care what and whom you imitate? What answer can you give to this? Some of you perhaps are ready to say: "Yes we are careful whom we imitate; we follow the example of only those who try to do right." I am happy to learn that some can give me an answer so satisfactory. Never say any thing that you think may be wrong. If you hear a person make use of profane and vulgar language, put him down as one whose example you should avoid. It pains me that some persons can be so wicked as to try to teach you anything bad; but such is the fact, and you must be careful or they will get you to imitate them before you are aware of it.

In most cases you can judge what is worthy of imitation, but sometimes you may not be able to tell whether a certain thing would be right or wrong. When such is the case, go and ask somebody that can tell you, as your parents and teacher. Exercise your power of discerning between the good and the bad. When you are unable to do so refer to your Bible; it will always help you decide whether it would be pleasant in the sight of your Heavenly Father to say or do anything about which you have doubts.

We often hear children say, "It is not wrong to use tobacco or to swear, for a great many persons do it," "It cannot be wrong, for father does it." Here is a sad case. We do not like to tell children that their parents are wicked; but nevertheless it is true when they are guilty of such things. Never say a bad word because you hear your parents or young men say it. No my dear children, rather go and tell them that you do not like to see a person do such sins; ask them to do better. This you can do without giving offence, and you may often do much good. I know of a boy who asked his father when he heard him swearing, "Father, why did you swear so?" The father was stunned and confessed that it was a sermon to him. Here is a noble example for you. Instead of imitating the bad in others, try to do something that will enable them to the error they are committing.

Christ has given us a better example than any other one. Do nothing that you think will not meet his approval. He sorrows to hear little children use profane words, or to see them use rum, or break the Holy Sabbath. Now dear children, do you not think you should love, and live for him who has done so much for you? Yes, oh yes, you should.

A Good Action Repaid

Nearly half a century ago, long before railroads were invented, a stage coach used to run every day between Glasgow and Greenock, in Scotland. One day a lady who was traveling in this coach, noticed a boy walking bare-footed, and looking very tired as he struggled to get along. She asked the coachman to take him up and give him a seat, and she would pay for it.

When they arrived at the inn at Greenock, which is a seaport town, she asked the boy what he had come there for. He said he wished to be a sailor, and hoped that some of the captains would engage him. She gave him half a crown, wished him success, and told him to be a good boy, and try to love and serve God.

After this, twenty years passed away. One afternoon the coach was going along the same road returning to Glasgow. Among the passengers was a sea captain. When they reached about the same spot, just above referred to, the captain observed an old lady on the road, walking very slowly, and looking very tired and weary. He asked the driver to put her in the coach, as there was an empty seat, and he would pay for her. Shortly after, as they were changing horses, all the passengers got out except the captain and the old lady.

As they were alone, the lady thanked the captain for his kindness, in giving her a seat, as she was unable to pay for one. He said he had always felt a pity for poor, tired foot-travelers, for twenty years ago, when he was a poor boy traveling on foot, near this place, some kind-hearted lady ordered the coachman to take him up, and paid for his seat.

"I remember that very well," said she, "for I am that lady; but my condition is very much changed.—Then I was very well off, but now I am reduced to poverty by the bad conduct of a prodigal son."

Then the captain shook hands with her, and said how glad he was to see her. "I have been very successful," said he, "and am now going home to live on my fortune; and now, my good friend, I will settle £25 (that is $125)—upon you every year, as long as you live." God paid her back again more than a hundred-fold what she gave in pity to that poor boy.—Dr. Newton's "Best Loan."

Self-Reliance.

There is nothing more likely to result in the successful career of a young man than confident self-reliance. It is astonishing how much more a youth will accomplish who relies on himself, than one who depends upon others for assistance. Having first ascertained the direction in, and the means by which his object is to be reached, let him put his whole energies to work, and with unflaging industry press forward. The young man, who instead of rising at five, sleeps till seven or eight, and who spends his evenings on the corners, or in the companionship of those who are wanting in laudable ambition, rarely ever wins a position of honor or achieves a reputation above that enjoyed by the common masses.

In a country like ours, where the avenues to honor and wealth open alike to all, there is no reasonable excuse that can be offered for a man's failure to achieve one or the other, or both. Ill health, or extraordinary misfortune may keep him down, but these are the exceptions that establish the rule.

Few men know of how much they are capable until they have first thoroughly tested their abilities. The amount of labor, literary or mechanical, which a person in vigorous health can perform, is almost without limit if a systematic method is adopted, and the proper spirit incited to the effort. An hour of each evening spent with some good author, or in the study of some branch of useful science, will, in the course of a few years, give to a young man who thus devotes this small portion of his time, an amount of information, literary or scientific, which cannot fail to fit him for positions to which he could never properly aspire without this attention to study.

Shaking Hands.

There are two small churches in a little village which I know about.—All the new people who come to stop in the village go to one of these churches and not to the other. Both are neat, both are pretty, both have the pure gospel preached in them, both have good pastors, both have good members.

Now, what draws strangers and outsiders to one church more than to the other? Can you think? Because the people shake hands with them, and are glad to see them. When a stranger comes to town, they take pains to hunt him up and ask him to come to church with them, and make room for him in their pews.—Child's Paper.

Lengthy Obituaries.

It will be observed that our obituary department is very much crowded, and has been for some time We desire to chronicle the death of all our brethren and sisters, and their friends, who are called away from time to eternity. We also sympathize with bereaved friends, and would often feel to offer words of condolence to those with whom we have a personal acquaintance. But as our circulation increases, our circle of acquaintances enlarge, until almost weekly we bear the sad news of the departure of some one with whom we have had some acquaintance, which calls forth our sympathies, which would often manifest themselves in words, if it were thought expedient. But we have learned that among our obituaries appear the names of many worthy persons, whose departure their friends bitterly lament, and yet the announcement has no special effect upon us, or we should be all the time in sackcloth. We have therefore learned that prudence requires us to restrain our grief, and withhold our words. We know this is a delicate matter, and one in which it is hard to act entirely impartial; but we do desire to deal fairly with all.

For the present we will propose nothing more than to use all possible brevity.—Avoid stereotype expressions," such as, "Mourn not as those who have no hope," "To a large circle of sympathizing friends," &c. They are of no special interest to any one. Give the name, time, place, age, text, and minister, and if the person had a station of note or prominence, give it and close, and we believe it will be satisfactory to all interested. Try it a while.

Death of the "Pious Youth."

We have to announce to our readers this week that the PIOUS YOUTH, our juvenile monthly, will not be sustained. At this time there are not one thousand subscribers, by several hundred, and it is not likely that more than one thousand could be obtained during the year. In some places strong and successful efforts have been made, and we are warranted in believing that in many other places equal effort has been made with little or no success. We regret it exceedingly, and we know that many young hearts will be made sad by this intelligence.—We think by all means the church should have sustained a first-class paper, for the special benefit of the rising generation.—But we can sustain it no longer with its present support. We have therefore decided to discontinue its monthly issue with volume two, the December No., of which will be printed the following week. We shall retain the name and copyright, and may issue it in four parts during the Sunday-school season.

Persons who have paid in advance will please inform us what to do with the money. We will send them books for it, credit it to the C. F. C., transfer it to our charity list, to send the COMPANION to poor persons, or we will return it.

Balance of the Year Free.

We made an offer like the above sometime in November last, to which we had a number of responses; but it appears that some did not understand us exactly as we meant they should. We meant to give free what numbers remained from the time the subscriptions were received. We could not possibly furnish back numbers, as we had no means of knowing how many might be required. We made all preparation possible, and sent out every paper that was printed. To those whose names were only received in time for the last two Nos. we made no effort to send, as the postage would have overbalanced the profits.

Hard to Separate.

The names of our subscribers are set up in type, and remain during the year, and if renewed before the close of the year, or very soon thereafter they remain for years. We have some names that have been standing unaltered for four or five years, and have become cemented together by the oil and ink, and the letters are extremely hard to separate. Lately we undertook to distribute a few names that were to be changed, and found the letters could not be separated by the fingers, and we then resolved to communicate the fact to our patrons, hoping they will receive this as a gentle hint not to necessitate us to tear down their names. Not only do the letters cleave together, but we too, become attached to our subscribers so that it is hard for us to have their names taken from our books. Nevertheless we always abide by their wishes. Their desire is our pleasure. We suppose they must have good reasons for doing so when they cease to take our paper. Only we hope none will cause us unnecessary trouble or pain, by neglecting to subscribe—or failing to do so in good time.

A Busy Time.

Our readers will grant that it must look like business at this office when we inform them that for the past week we have averaged fifty-five letters a day.—The highest number in one day was seventy, and the lowest forty-five. We have had as high as thirteen registered letters a day. You may imagine we had a lively time meeting with so many familiar names, and such pleasant greetings, and God-speeds. We feel very much cheered up, and believe we could write an editorial if we could find time; but it takes us from six to twelve o'clock to receive the calls of our friends and attend to their immediate wants. But there is a better time coming when we hope to have something more to say in regard to some of those letters. By the way, brethren and sisters, when you have a word to say for publication, or for the editor, please write it on a separate paper. A piece of an envelope, or the margin of a newspaper, is preferable to having it on the same paper with your business matter. Our time is so precious that we cannot afford to transcribe, even if we would wish to do so.

Hymn Books.

For the last three weeks we have been anxiously awaiting the arrival of a new supply of Hymn Books, but hitherto we have been disappointed. At this time we have over one hundred books on our order list which we cannot supply. We regret it exceedingly, but what will we do? We had given our order in good time to supply our customers, if it could have been filled with anything like business promptness. Brother Quinter's absence from home may have had something to do with the delay. As soon as they come to hand they shall be sent out forthwith.

Almanacs.

The Brethren's Almanac for 1872 is meeting with very general approbation. Thousands have already been sold, and hundreds may still be had, by the single copy for ten cents, by the dozen for seventy-five cents, or half-dozen for forty cents. Address H. R. Holsinger, Dale City, Somerset county, Pa.

Did'nt Forget the Printers.

The COMPANION typos render thanks to their generous friend, J. M. Lichty for a large basket "full to overflowing" of delicious apples. Almost weekly our editors acknowledge the receipt of something "delicious to eat," but they lug it home and never think of offering their half-starved printers any. But friend Lichty seems to take an interest in the printers, in those who perform the mechanical part of the "art preservative of all arts," and shows his appreciation by heaping upon them delicious fruit. May you reap a quadruple harvest from your orchard for years to come, is the wish the printers tender to you for your kindness.

Presents.

We acknowledge the receipt of a box of fine honey from brother Samuel J. Miller; Christmas turkey from brother Jonathan Kelso, and several rolls of butter from brother Emmanuel Lichty, and a lot of poultry from brother E. J. Fadely. Many thanks, brethren and sisters—for we suppose the sisters had an interest in the offering.

Other members of the COMPANION family have thanks to offer for holiday presents.

Still a Little Late.

We are still a little behind time with our work, owing to sickness and other causes. At the present time, and for several days past, two of our hands are off duty on account of sickness, and will not be able to work for a week at best. And as printers are a class of mechanics that can not be picked up in this "neck of woods," we can do no better than to work away, and ask our patrons to bear with us. We are still hoping for the better.

We are pleased to learn that Abraham L. Funk, of Shirleysburg, Pa., is regaining his health. Has been delicate for several years.

A Beautiful Christmas Number.

We are in receipt of the December number of the "People's Monthly," of Pittsburg, an illustrated paper gotten up for the Industrial Classes. It still goes on improving, and now challenges comparison with any of the New York illustrated papers. This number is crowded with Christmas cuts, poems, tales, and original contributions. Among the illustrations, the full page representation of a dog "waiting for the hunter's shot," and the three puppies and turtle are especially beautiful. Price only $1.50 a year. This number has an eight-page supplement—twenty-four pages in all—and gives ample evidence in all its parts of health and vigor.

Chicago and the Great Conflagration.

A book bearing the above title is about to be issued by Hubbard Bros., 723, Sansom st. Philadelphia, Pa., who solicit agents to sell it by subscription. A better selling work, at this time, can not be found. It is written by Messrs Colbert and Chamberlain, of the Chicago Tribune, and will therefore be reliable and accurate.

Answers to Correspondents.

ANDREW COST :—We might possibly come again between this and spring, if a good leader could be secured. Don't consider this as a promise, however.

JOS. D. NEHER. Dont be discouraged. It is the sick that need the physician. You are in the right place. If we had a backward agent in such a place, he could do nothing at all. Accidentally open at James 5, and read first six verses aloud in their presence. Perhaps that might help them.

JOHN M. MOHLER :—You can deduct the expense of registering.

WILLIA :—Some one at Hudson, Ill., sent us money for the P. Y. and Phrenological Journal, and gave only a part of his name. (Willia). Who was it?

I. L. Glass :—Right, we are square.

MICHAEL HOHF :—With the end of the year.

A. L. FUNK :—J. G. Glock was ordered and payed for by G. Eby, Aughwick Mills, Pa. Are there two of the same name? or shall we send two copies, or continue two years?

MARGARET DEARDORF. Yes; Money orders on Somerset will answer us, as well as greenbacks. It is about twenty miles, but we can deposit them in bank, consequently answer the same purpose as checks. That matter is all right. I now understand you clearly, and had anticipated what I new know. Thank you for your frankness.

DAVID GLENN :—All right.

S. H. CAYLOR :—You were all right, but our papers would not reach the demand.

Wie iſt es denn, will ſich noch kein Deutſcher Bruder finden, der ein deutſch Religiöſes Blatt heraus giebt?

John Lohmann.

Nein; es ſcheint nicht ſo. Wir haben einen Vorſchlag gemacht den "Brüder Berichter" zu drucken, und unſer Bruder Lohmann war unſer einzelnen Unterſtützer. Seitdem aber haben verſchiedene andere etwas verſprochen; doch nicht genug einen glücklichen Vortgang zu verſicheren. Es iſt zu bedauern daſz unſere liebe deutſche Sprache nicht mehr Achtung bei uns hatte.

Brother Henry:—I noticed in the last Companion reference made to perpetual subscribers to the Companion. You can enter my name as one of of that number. I have been a subscriber to your noble paper ever since its first appearance among the Brethren, and the older it gets the more interesting it becomes; it appears to be growing in the knowledge of the truth. May the good Lord assist you in your noble work.

I will send you the money by your agent here Bro. Teeter.

B. F KOONS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Brother Holsinger :—I have after so long a time solicited 7 more subscribers for the C. F. C. I did the best I could for your paper. This old brother Carpenter that you see on your list, is blind, and has been unfortunate. If you please send him the paper free ; his wife can read the paper to him. He is a faithful old brother. I know your paper will do him good. We have plenty of rich brethren in the churches, that could send in a few rusty dimes Brethren you that are rich, you that have thousands of dollars doing you no good, please send brother Holsinger some of them. Then he can send his paper to those poor brethren and sisters, who are not able to pay for it.

What amount of good your old rusty dimes would do in this way !—Open not only your eyes but your hearts and hands, and that old chest that has those rusty dimes in. Then brother Holsinger will not have this charity burden to bear alone. Brethren, if we want to be true christians and followers of Christ, we must help to spread the gospel. If our ways and actions do not prove that we are christians, our words will never do it. In traveling over this world, I find all kinds of people. In asking some people to subscribe for the C. F. C. they tell me that they were too poor and at the same time have some novel papers in the house, and some that are just about as poisonous as Tom Paine's Age of Reason. Yet when I ask them to send for a religious paper they are too poor. But if I had told them of some poor man who was hard up for money, and that he could get his farm for half what it was worth, they could have soon raised a thousand dollars. Not too poor to buy a farm at half its worth ? Oh no, plenty of money now. Perhaps enough about riches.

Egypt Religion is below parr at present ; but I will tell you what is above parr : king alcohol ! He has the ruling power in these parts. You can tell any of his subjects ; they all carry a mark in their forehead. You can know any of his members, just as far as you can see them. They have a different voice, and the king has them all to speak about the same, and to act the same. If they do not carry the corn on the toe they carry it in the head. So you can guess what I mean.

J. B. ALLENSWORTH.

Brother Holsinger :—The brethren and friends are generally well ; my own health is to say, tolerably good and has been for some time past ; The brethren here are still contending for the faith and practice of the saints; we had not as many additions to the church during the year which has just closed, as we sometimes have had, in the same period of time ; but our prospect for the present year is good ; and we hope by the grace and help of God, to have an ingathering of souls during the year upon which we have just entered. The year 1871 has now gone down, with its predecessors to eternity, with its ponderous records, among which are our words and our works, to be accounted for in the great day of judgment.

"How careful then ought we to live,
With what religious fear ;
Who such a strict account must give,
Of our behavior here"

. PHILIP BOYLE.

New Windsor, Md.

The Companion has done me good. It has caused me to reflect on the tobacco question, and by its wholesome instruction has caused me to crush the monster tobacco from my lips eighteen monts ago, and I have not tasted it since. May God help, and may the brethren help to oppose it, until it shall sink to rise no more.

GEO. DETRICH.

Terrific Boiler Explosion.

Brother Henry :—Please give the following a place in the Companion the particulars of which I clip from the Trenton "Republican," published in this county, (Grundy, Mo.)

On Monday afternoon Dec., 11th 1871, about three o'clock, the boiler of the Steam saw mill of Charles Skiner, located on Muddy Creek, near Tindall post office, exploded, instantly killing the engineer, David Roberts, and slightly injuring Daniel Roberts. The particulars of the sad affair are as follows : Mr. Daniel Roberts was operating the mill and David Roberts his son, was employed as engineer. At the time of the explosion Daniel Roberts was filing the saw, and the engineer had just started to oil the machinery. The front of the boiler gave way with a terrible force, and in a moment the body of young Robers was torn into a thousand fragments and scattered on the ground for a distance of about one hundred and fifty feet. He leaves a wife and a large circle of relations and friends to mourn his sad and untimely death ?"

The subject of the above notice was a son of brother Daniel and Sister Keisiah Roberts, and brother to the writer. The number of his days was 21 years 5 months and 24 days. In a moment of time he was taken from among us. I often think how true the words : "In life we are in the midst of death." Another solemn warning to the dying sons and daughters of men, and especially his brethren sisters, and dear friends that are yet out of Christ. Once he was like you, blooming with health and strength ; but oh ! how uncertain is life ! In a moment he is gone, the fragments of his body to the silent grave, and his spirit to God who gave it. Beloved relations, and beloved friends, wherever you may be, that are yet living in sin, I pray you to seek the blessed Savior, love and obey him, because he first loved us, and all will be well with you when death, the last enemy overtakes you.

Brother Jesse Sinks made some very appropriate remarks at the house, before the remains were taken to the grave. May the God of all grace and truth keep us in his love, and bring us all to a happy union in heaven, where no sorrows enter, is the prayer of your unworthy servant.

J. H. ROBERTS.

Brother H. R. H :—I always enjoyed the Brethren's Periodicals, but never so much as this winter. Being 18 miles from the nearest church, and those cold, long dreary winter nights make the G. V. and C. F. C. doubly precious. When I read Bro. Cover's correspondence about the Georges Creek Church, Fayette county, Pa., there was one name among those who joined church, that sent a stream of joy to my heart. I thought if it were not for our Editors, and their correspondents, we would often be slow in hearing such happy messages — Though we are thousands of miles apart, if we are God's children, we have sympathy with each other's welfare. We read of the afflictions and trouble of those who are dear to us in christian fellowship; we think of them, and pray for them, and our minds are engaged in what tends to make us better christians. We mourn with those who mourn, and rejoice with those who do rejoice. How could we do this if we did not know their condition, and how could we know it if it were not for the pen—only of those who we come in contact with. If all who are able to take our church papers would do so, they would have good food for the mind, be led to read the Bible more; would understand it better, and then our Editors could afford to send out papers free to all those who are really too poor to pay for it. Then we could all grow in grace, and the knowledge of the Lord, for we are all learners as long as we live.

HANNAH KNAUFF.

Otumwa, Iowa.

To Sister Hannah M. Burket.

Dear Sister:—As you are asking for advice, in your article published in the Companion, volume 7, page 769. I knowing your pressing wants, find it my duty to give you a word of encouragement.

First, you are living in an organized church. Make your wants known to the House-keeper of the district, and we feel satisfied they will care for you. You are deprived of the use of money. It is in the hands of a brother, also in your district of church and therefore there is a way to get it; more especially as the brother referred to is the owner of about 200 acres of land, and cattle and horses. Should not such a brother pay at least the interest of $1.000 to a poor sister who has not seen the bright rays of the sun for more than twenty years, and has no home, and is earning her living by knitting and spinning? Now in conclusion we feel to say, dear sister, be of good cheer, we think there is a way for you to get your money.

We too feel to sympathize with you, more especially as we have been intimately acquainted.

MOSES FRAME.

Elkhart, Ind.

Brother Holsinger:—Please find enclosed $1.50, for which you will please forward the Companion to my address, for I can not very well do without it. I love to read it, and especially the news from the churches, I love to hear of their prosperity, and hear of the "soul reviving feasts" that so many enjoy. I do not get to many owing to pecuniary circumstances, yet I am glad to hear, that others do enjoy them. We have preaching three sundays in a month but since I am no good pedestrian I I seldom meet with the dear brethren and sisters at the house of worship,

"The place most delightful this earth can afford,
The place of devotion, the house of the Lord.

I often wished we could always be together there while here on earth. How delightful to my soul to hear the gospel preached, and help to sing the sweet songs of Zion. I think there was an improvement in the Companion the last year, and think there is still room for more, as well as in ourself. One thing is that the brotherhood is large enough to supply our periodicals with original matter without going out in the world to copy their essays. I would rather read the most meager composition written by a brother, or sister, than read a sermon written by one of the most noted D. Ds of our day. Let it be ever so fluently delivered, and in as flowery style as possible; it does not have the same effect. I am frank brother Henry, but what I have written I wrote in love.

Your well wishing sister in Christ.

ANNA OAKS.

Dayton, Ohio, Dec., 19th 1871.

Brother Holsinger:—As this is Christmas evening, and I have just read the last Companion for this year, and thought how lonesome I would be if I were not to invite it into our house the next year, for I do love to read it, and hear from the church. It has been said to me that if we read the Bible we will do well. I admit we will, and I think we can read the Bible and learn what the Savior has done for us and what he is still doing, and learn what we must do if we are his true followers. By reading the Campanion, I gain knowledge how the church is progressing in the good cause of our Master. I am well satisfied that I have got what it cost me a good many times, although there are some that have different views of the Apostles, teachings. I don't find fault with the paper or the brethren. There were different opinions among the brethren in the Apostles' days — Read the 15th Chapter of Acts.— When they came together to consider the matter they could convince each other of the dispute they were in; so let us not fall out by the way, if we do not see just alike in some small matters, but try to admonish each other in love. So let us resolve upon a holier life, and may the new year find us determined to live more consecrated to God and his Christ than we have been in the past year.

Farewell,

JANE MARQUIS.

Brother Holsinger:—I am rather late sending in my subscription, but hope it will come to hand before the first number of volume eight is sent out, as my subscription expires with the volume, and I would not like to miss any numbers, as I have been taking it from its birth, and was lucky in having missed but one number.— I feel as though I would be almost lost without it; It brings us wholesome instruction, and I love to read of the prosperity of the church.

ELIZABETH OAKS.

Dayton, O.

To Hannah M. Burget.

Beloved Sister:—In much love, and with sympathy, I will try to converse a little with you, through the silent medium of the pen and press. What a blessing it is that we have a medium through which to communicate our thoughts, and thus hold sweet fellowship with each other, not withstanding the distance between us, and thus we each gain an attatchment which we otherwise could not have the opportunity to gain. So it proves in your case. Were it not for this medium I would doubtless never have learned your name, much less become acquainted with your sad position in life, which causes tender pity to gush forth from my heart. Loved sister, do not be discouraged; you have a guardian angel hovering near you, and a good and merciful Father above you, that will never forsake you, for he even notices a sparrow when it falls to the ground; much more will he notice you, who are so much dependent on him for protection.—Though you are deprived of the use of the most valuable members of your body—can not behold the beauties of this earth, yet that does not retard you from beholding with your spiritual eye the richness of the world above, no doubt you can view the glories of that world, with more purity than we that can behold the vanity of this sinful world. We truly wish that you were blessed with the privilege to attend meeting every Sabbath, for it would buoy you up and cause you to be happy. We are sorry that you are deprived of your means wherewith you would procure yourself an earthly home, but if it is not God's will for you to have an earthly home, may it be his will to assist you in obtaining a bright and a heavenly home, where you can see the Father and his Son, and all the heavenly inhabitants, and there none can rob you. That home will be of much more value than all earthly homes combined, and all will be peace and happiness. So sister be of good cheer, rememberin g Christ is your friend.

Your weak Sister,

REBECCA SNAVELY.

Hudson, Ill.

Brother Holsinger :—Please find enclosed $1.50 for Companion, Volume 8. I have been a subscriber from first to last and should indeed be very sorry to be without it, as I am old and can not get out. It cheers my heart to read, and know how the churches are getting along in tne good cause of our Master.

CATHARINE FRANTZ.

MARRIED.

By the undersigned, at the house of the bride's parents, December 24th, 1871, Mr. SAMUEL PAGE and Miss MARY ANN GRIFFEN. All of Cambria county, Pennsylvania. STEPHEN HILDABRAND.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Ottercreek, congregation, Macoupin county, Illinois. November 15th, ELIZABETH A. BRUBAKER in the 27th year of her age. She was a daughter of Samuel Miller, of Tennessee, formerly of Virginia, and the wife of our beloved brother and minister, Henry Brubaker, with whom she emigrated to this place, from Tennessee, about a year ago. She left in Tennessee a twin sister of whom she received a letter a few days before her death bringing the inteiligence that she had united with the people of God, and exhorting Elizabeth also to do so ; but alas ! the letter came too late to be read by her. Her mind had become deranged. Her day of grace was over ; from which may again be seen the danger of procrastination. She leaves a sorrowing husband and four little children, with many sympathizing friends, to mourn her untimely death.

Funeral services by the brethren from the last three verses of the of the 1st chapter of 1st Peter. DANIEL VANIMAN.

In the Conemaugh Congregation, Penna., some time in November, 1871, JOSEPH W. infant son of brother Jacob and sister Sarah McCARTNEY. Funeral services by the berthren. STEPHEN HILDEBRAND.

In Middle Fork congregation, Clinton county, Indiana, December 18th, 1871, our esteemed brother, neighbor, and friend, SAMUEL BRICKER, aged 25 years 3 months and 2 days. Disease Typhoid Feaver. He leaves a loving sister, and two children to mourn their loss. Funeral occasion improved by Eld. Allen Mohler and others, from 1st Peter 1 : 24, to a large congregation.

Also, in the same place, December 19th, 1871, infant daughter of Jacob and Catharine Metzger, aged 2 month and 23 days. Funeral services by the brethren, from Luke, 8 : 21, 42. J. D. NEHER.

Our much beloved sister, SARAH EMMERT GRIMM, in Rowan county, North Carolina, November the 1st 1871 ; aged 29 years.

Sister Sarah was born and raised in Washington county, Md., and was the daughter of our much esteemed brother Samuel and sister Mary Emmert, of Funkstown Md., Though she was surrounded by the fashions of the times, she laid them all aside, and set her hope on higher objects than this vain and sinful world can give, and found Jesus to be her strong hold, not only in health, but in the hour of death. She joined the church while young, and showed the express image of a Saviors love to all around her. Last spring, before she, with her husband Mr. GEORGE GRIMM, and three of her her brothers and their families, moved from our State to North Carolina, we had a farewell meeting at Funkstown, where the words of Paul, were used : "Finally, Brethren, farewell ;" The occasion was very solemn, and we felt then as though our farewell would be final which it also proved to be.

Our sister was well the day before she died, but took sick October the 31st and lived till the next day about noon. Those that saw her in the last struggles of death, say that she was perfectly resigned to exchange this mortal life, for that life which cannot die. After the necessary preparations were made her body was placed in a Metalic coffin, and her husband with his two little children started for Maryland, having sent a dispatch for the funeral arrangements, which was to be on Friday the 3rd of Sept, but having missed the connections, and being robbed of all his money, at Richmond (130) he did not arrive until Saturday the 4th inst. The deep and low moaning of her husband, and mother and friends, showed the grief and anguish of soul that is realized in our parting from one another, the occasion was improved by brethren D. Long, and D. F. Stouffor, from the words, "Prepare to meet thy God."—Amos 4 : 12. Friend Grimm has passed through a trial of which he can truly say that the Lord was his helper. May his affliction lead him to his Savior, who is able to restore every loss, and there enjoy the company of his dear wife, with all the shining hosts of heaven, is our prayer.

ANDREW COST.

In the Duncansville branch, Blair county, Pa., Dec., 10th 1871, brother JACOB H. STIFFLER ; aged 65 years 7 month and 16 days. Disease, Dropsy. His general health was impaired for about one year. He was confined to his room ten weeks, suffering at time, what pen cannot describe, and can be best imagined by those who waited upon him. Yet all this he bore with more than ordinary resignation.

He leaves a sorrowing widow who showed herself a companion indeed, through his long and lingering sickness by ministering so cheerfully to his many wants.

He lived a strictly moral life, and won the respect of all who knew him. He was sensible of a still higher duty that he owed to God, but put it off to a more convenient season. But divine grace did not forsake him in his declining age. When disease was preying upon him, and he felt that soon he must leave the scenes of mortality, he consecrated himself to the Lord, and was immersed, in obedience to his command.

Funeral services by brother J. W. Brumbaugh, from the Clover Creek branch, from Rev. 14 : 13 to a large collection of neighbors and friends. James A Sell.

December 1st in the Lamotte Prairie, Illinois, Miss SALLIE WRIGHT ; Aged 13 years 4 months and 11 days.—Her disease was Typhoid Fever, which changed to Brain Fever. She was the youngest and the pet of the family, and much beloved by all who knew her. Funeral discourse from the words : "All things shall work together for good to them that love the Lord." by Mr. Baird of Robinson Illinois.

J. P. HORNING.

In the upper Beaver branch Augusta county, Va., Dec., 24th 1871, brother JOSEPH BURKET, supposed to be about 80 years of age. Disease, Gravel. He was a great sufferer, with great patience and christian fortitude.

Funeral occasion improved by the writer, and Levi Wanger, from the 90th Psalm, 12th verse, SAMUEL DRIVER

In the Manor branch, Indiana county, [illegible] 1871, DAVID OLIVER son of friend Joshua FRY, aged 3 years

8 monts 10 days. Funeral discourse from 1 Tim. 4 : 10, by J HOLSOPPLE.

"HOW TO GO WEST."

Forty years ago, Illinois was as far West as most people wished to go, and journeys were made in the legendary "Prairie Schooner," but in these days of Progress and Improvement, the word West has come to mean Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Colorada, California, and the Territories, and the Traveler reaches almost any point therein by a splendid Line of Railroad.

This Line of Railroad is the Burlington Route, which starts from Chicago over the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R., from Indianapolis, over the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western Short Line, and from Logansaort, over the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw R. R., and running through BURLINGTON, reaches Omaha. Lincolen, Nebraska City, St. Joseph, Atchison, Leavenworth and Kansas City, connecting with the Union Pacific, Kansas Pacific and other Railroads running from those cities.

Always go "By way of Burlington" and you will be sure to be right.

The Burlington Route has admirably answered the question, "How to go West?" by the publication of a truthful and interesting document, filled with facts in regard to Time, Connections, Accommodations, rates of Fare, and other interesting items and illustrated by a large map, truthfully showing the whole West, which they distribute free of charge. Copies, and additional information can be obtained by addressing, General Passenger Agent. B. & M. R. R, Burlington, Iowa.

THE PIOUS YOUTH.

A MONTHLY PUBLICATION

Designed to Promote the Welfare, and enlarge the number, of the class of persons whose name it bears.

One dollar a year in advance.

THE Christian Family Companion.

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

Temptation.

Half the sickness, misery, and sin, that fill and curse the world are due to the influence of human tempters, who use their powers to overcome the sound judgment and conscientious scruples of their fellow men. Many a man who would go home sober if left to himself, goes home drunk through the importunities of those who entice him to partake of the intoxicating cup; and many who to-day might have been virtuous, upright, and happy, have yielded to the enticements of the sinful and the vile, and been swept away to utter and irretrievable ruin.

Especially is the evil visible when, under the guise and with the feelings of hospitality, persons press their guests to indulge in unhealthy food till they become gluttonous, surfeited and diseased.

"Eat a little more." "Have another piece, it will do you good." "Nonsense! You are too particular." "It will not hurt you at all." "I believe in people enjoying themselves, while they do live, and not starving themselves to death, to gratify some foolish notion." And so, plied with these importunities, at last the victim yields, and sickness, infirmity, and death, are frequently his reward.

Whoever remembers seeing a healthy person rise from a well-spread table, where he was made welcome to satisfy his hunger, and go away with his hands on his stomach, groaning, and saying, "I am afraid I have not eaten enough?" But who has not seen five hundred persons rise thus from the table where they had eaten to repletion, and go away saying, "I am afraid I have eaten too much?"

Human appetites and desires are balanced by the understanding and conscience. Each person must decide for himself what is for his good. Most people, left alone, will learn by experience to abstain from those things which do them injury. When the scales hang even, it is not difficult to decide the case as it should be decided. But when personal influence is cast into the balances on the side of indulgence and excess, the equilibrium is destroyed; the will, which was strong enough to resist the cravings of appetite, becomes too weak to withstand the additional power of social attraction and kindly entreaty; and so the ill-judged kindness of well-meaning friends works ruin to those on whom it is lavished.

Hundreds of preachers of the gospel have doubtless been broken down in health, and utterly wrecked and ruined, as it regards efficiency in their calling, by yielding to the importunities of those excellent Marthas who think that "nothing is too good for the minister," and insist that he must digest everything which their cunning brains can invent, and their cunning hands prepare.

We have no right to yield our judgment to the seductions and temptations of our friends. Every man must bear his own burden; and if we, by weakly yielding to the influence of others, impair our health, diminish our usefulness, or peril our lives, we must endure the results of our folly; and none of those who have misled us can feel the sufferings which their temptations have occasioned.—The Christian.

For the Companion

To the Readers of the Companion,

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

A joyous New Year to you all—joyous in being good and doing good. Joy is more than happiness, as that which is fundamental is more than that which is contingent. Christ never made use of the word happiness, and only once of the word happy, and this in connection with what was special. No one is any the better for being happy unless he be at the same time joyous. "Good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people," is the annunciation with which the angels greet the shepherds. Notes of joy heralded the Saviour's advent, and the same strain bears His aloft to the Mediatorial Throne: "these things have I spoken unto you that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full."

He was "a man of sorrow," but more of joy. The sorrow was dependent on temporary conditions, while the joy is an essential feature of His eternal perfections. His Testament is the product and embodiment of joy, which is to be the Heaven of His saints, in foretaste here, and in glorious fruition hereafter. His parting prayer is a summation of His mission, and of all that is to result from it: "and now come I to Thee; and these things I speak in the world that they might have my joy fulfilled in themselves." "For the joy that was set before Him He endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the Throne of God."

He that expects joy without holiness, will find, when perhaps too late, that he has been gathering grapes from "the vine of Sodom," and gleaning in "the fields of Gomorrah." "The plain of Jordan," where luxuriant vegetation determined Lot's choice, owed its fertility to subterranean fires, which, while they warmed and fructified the soil, also threatened with destruction. On the edge of hell grows many a poppy, whose roots are the devil's nerves and whose fruit his everlasting torments. Beautiful, fragrant flowers can grow on a grave, but they have their root and nourishment in Corruption. There is no joy but what can smile at death. Happiness fades and vanishes when the Pale Monarch offers his cold skeleton hand, and sternly bids us follow into his dark dominion. Joy has much happiness, but a happy, sunny life may be destitute of joy. Those who are not in "the secret of the Lord," have an impression that the Christian Life is a dull, dry, hard, husky experience. Some time ago, I was written to by the unregenerate son of an eminent ministering brother, and was told, as a matter of justification to persevere in sin, that if the brethren knew how sinners enjoy themselves in their forbidden pleasures, they would feel less inclined to disturb them. Poor soul! We all "walked according to the flesh," and drank the muddy cup to the dregs in some form, and we know what a crispy, ashy, burned-out, nauseous life it is. It is a cup of wormwood, with a thin scum of honey on the surface. Joy respects the person himself, in that which is deepest in his constitution, and vests in our essential being, and in our necessary relations to God. Joy is the apprehension of an intelligence created immortal, of the Being who is inherently immortal. It is communic between the Divine and the human, the correl tion of immortality between the Infinite and t finite. It is a present, living, full, glorious sweet clasping of "the Everlasting Father" a the reconciled prodigal.

If we would have a joyous New Year, w must work for it "with fear and trembling We should "fear" lest we "come short" of t promised inheritance, and yet so wholly comm ourselves to the Divine keeping and disciplin as to be sustained by the "perfect love that cas eth out fear." We fear constantly lest "tru in the inward parts" comport not with the tern of final salvation; and are running over wi joy in the confidence of the all-sufficiency "the truth as it is in JESUS." Joy comes n like the air we breathe, but like the bread w eat. In the sweat of our brow we must obta and cherish it. If we would "eat our meat wi gladness and singleness of heart," and be "fill with all peace and joy in believing," and at l be "presented faultless before the presence His glory with exceeding joy," we must h arms with Christ, and keep step with Him, a fix our gaze steadily on His world-life, so as catch every expression of His character. L begets joy, and acquaintance begets love, and t Object and emotion being both eternal, we " joice with joy unspeakable and full of glor Then we need not trudge to the well of Syc to draw water, and be thirsty and faint again tore we reach home; for we will have in us well of water springing up into everlasting li Health cannot bring joy, neither can weal though in the one men forget their destiny, a in the other "drown themselves in destruct and perdition." Both are evanescent, and not appropriated by joy as manure by the vi they become fuel for Tophet. If we are not j ous in the absence of the transitory, it is evid we are looking too much to "things seen temporal," to the exclusion of "things uns and eternal." "God is love," and the joy of l is abiding. In the midst of trial, disappointm destitution and suffering, we may be blissf conscious of lying in the embrace of the Div Bridegroom, and have our lips ever moist our hearts ever thrilling with the kisses of beginning, unending love, Sol. Song. 1

Jer. 31 : 3. "Rejoice evermore." "Rejoice in the Lord always : and again I say, rejoice."

If we "walk with God," have "the testimony that we please God," have all our impulses from God, and all our aims and achievements in God ; if we are in Him and He in us, and this dear loving, soul-beautifying intercourse is "peace and joy in the Holy Ghost," think you not, fellow-pilgrims, that the year 1872 will be a joyous, fruitful, Christ-honoring one, even if it be spent in the "inner prison, with our feet made fast in the stocks"? Happiness and unhappiness comes and goes with occasions, but joy is the life of God, and is the rhythm of the soul with the everlasting music of the Holy Trinity. Joy must vent its "praises unto God," and love sing its pean, "at midnight" as at midday. The child-life, cradled in trust and embosomed in confidence, cannot help breaking out in hosannas,—which often none but God and His angels hear —and should these "little ones" hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out."

We need "precept upon precept, line upon line, here a little and there a little," to keep us from sinking into ourselves, and losing all relish for religion of any kind, or subsiding into "will-worship" and "voluntary humility." But "faithful is He that calleth us." No sooner do we sink into the dominion of sense, and the eye grows dim and the ear dull Godward, and passion and greed and selfishness become rampant, than we hear Balaam's ass "speak with man's voice," or some "stone cry out of the wall," and some "beam out of the timber," to interpret to us the presence and reproof of an offended God. Let us "draw nigh unto God," and then not only will He be nigh unto us, but we will be blended in Him as the pulverized grains in the loaf. Let every intractable element, and every bone of contention, be dissolved in the menstruum of Divine blood, so that we may settle into fixed unity, and become as nearly homogeneous as our individuality will allow. Then will our "peace be as a river, and our righteousness as the waves of the sea," and the joy of the Lord be our everlasting heritage.

They who doubt the truth of religion because they can find no Christian who is perfect, might as well deny the existence of the sun because it is not always noonday.

Be Ye Ready.

"Therefore be ye also ready : for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh." Matth. 24 : 44

When we have a knowledge of an event, that will take place at some time in the future, not specified, the only safe way to meet that event, is to be always ready ; at any moment. The above text speaks of such an event ; the coming of the Son of man ; which is of the greatest importance, because it will be of a Divine character, and because it will bring to a close all earthly career. Now this truth should sink deep into every mind : that "of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but the Father only." He may come with the summons of death prior to making his advent into the world, but if He does not, we shall then be changed "in the twinkling of an eye ; in a moment of time ;" there is therefore no difference as concerning us, whether He will come to us universally, or individually. In either case it will terminate the days of our probation ; i. e. the time allotted to us in which to prepare to meet our Savior—do the things that

He has commanded us to do. Therefore, seeing that life is uncertain, (consequently death certain), and that "Heaven" and "Hell" are set before us, one of which will be the destiny of every man, and that our destinies will be regulated by the deeds done in the body, "what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hastening unto the coming of God." Observation, and experience tell us plainly that "now it is high time to awake out of sleep,"—"The night is far spent, the day is at hand." Therefore to those who have not made their peace with God, I would say with Paul: "To-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, as in the provocation;" but make haste to insure the one thing needful. Now in order to do this you must offer your bodies "a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." This can not be done, short of a strict compliance with the Gospel of Jesus Christ; you must become converted—changed—"fit for the Master's use;" this is your reasonable service; certainly there is nothing unreasonable about it; "for Christ also hath loved us, and hath given for us an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savor."

Now, behold for a moment, the great contrast of things as they really exist! Christ is one of the greatest characters spoken of in Holy Writ; and died the most shameful death upon record; all the ignoring that could be devised accompained his crucifixion and death. And what was it for? for us; "who are blind and cannot see afar off," and who—it is to be feared—"often forget that we were purged from our old sins." See what He has done for us, and then how little He requires of us! He has given us things to do, that are easily understood and performed; therefore if there is a soul lost Jesus cannot be blamed for it; according to the scriptures He has never promised to save us at all events; whether we do the things that He has commanded, or not; but every one shall be rewarded according to his works. If therefore our reward is to be reckoned from our works, if our eternal destiny is to be determined from the deeds done in the body, how strictly necessary it is, that we keep ourselves unspotted from the world! Therefore I would ask those who are yet outside the kingdom of Christ; have you ever deeply considered and meditated upon your souls salvation? If you have not, do it now; and you will discover that there is something to be seen to immediately, between you and your "Maker." You will frandly admit that there is a soul within you, that will never die. Although your body will die, and return to dust, your soul will live; and live forever. And you know that it cannot live on earth; now the question is: where do you want it to live? There are two destinies, assaidabove, oneortheother will be the habitation of every man; the one is "Heaven," the other is "Hell." Just as contrary to one another as "right', and "wrong" are.

I will venture to say that the invariable answer would be: "Heaven is the place where I want it to live." Many of you have near and dear relatives who are evidently gone there; their walk and conduct in life are sufficient evidence to you, that they are gone there; and your sorrowing after them is quelled by the bright rays of hope that you have, because of their godly walk, and chaste conversation, whilst in the body. But we will reverse this; we will suppose it had been you, instead of them, would they have had that "assurance that you were among the "Blessed"? You dare not say "they would." But they would have had to sorrow as those who have no hope. Therefore in the former case, your sorrow is abated on account of their good works; but in the latter, their sorrow would be augmented on account of your evil works. Some of you may think that you are in possession of some elegant trait of character, that consequently God would spare you—suffer you to live long upon the earth; does not observation teach you that this is false? It makes no difference who you are, how elevated your standing in life may be, nor what your literary attainments, or physical productions may be, you must die; you are on a common level with the humblest "peasant" in this matter. And the thought which should cut you to the heart, is: that you know not how soon it may be. You no doubt sometimes think of death, but is it not true: that you try to think as little of it as you can? and when you do think of it, you put yourself off with the thoughts, that you are young, that your health is good, and that it is more likely that you will live long, than die soon. But beware: this is one of the Devil's traps; he dictates such thoughts to you ;—surely it is not Jesus.—he will cause you to hate the church, and the scriptures if possible, and cause you to hate to go to meeting. If you are in the habit of hating the church, or the scriptures, there must be something wrong with you. If you stay away from meeting, for fear of being converted, your case is a lamentable one ; and a dangerous one. You ought therefore to become alarmed about your condition. I would advise you. —as one of the first steps toward salvation—to use violence against yourself ; for Christ says "the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence and the violent take it by force." Adam Clarke in his note on this passage says : He that will take, get possession of the kingdom of righteousness, peace, and spiritual joy, must be in earnest ; all hell will oppose him in every step he takes ; and if a man be not absolutely determined to give up his sins, and evil companions, and have his soul saved at all hazards, and at every expense, he will surely perish everlastingly. This is well said , as long as we are not decided in our minds to fully renounce sin and all ungodliness, or make a reserve of anything that is of a worldly character, we are not wholly converted ; and more than that, we are not fit for the kingdom ; and if we do get in, and get the name of "christian," it will not prepare us for the coming of the "Son of man ;" but we would be like the "foolish virgins" were, when the bridegroom came ; they had taken no oil with them, and their lamps had gone out : "And while they went to buy the bridegroom came ; and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage : and the door was shut. And the foolish "virgins" were not permitted to enter in. We also manifest to the world that we are trying to serve God and mammon, which Christ declared to be an impossibility. The world can see that we are not only weak in the flesh, but also weak in the spirit. And when this is our condition, we are just as nauseating to Christ as the angel of the church at Laodicea was. John was commanded to write unto him saying "I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot ; I would thou wert cold or hot. So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth." So the conclusion is : that we would be more tolerable in the sight of God if we made no profession at all, than to assume the intermediate state. (lukewarm). But if we make no profession, we are not prepared to meet the Lord Jesus. Therefore if we make a profession it must be a true one if it is to avail anything. When we are in a lukewarm state we are neither a worldling nor a christian ; but we are more like Satan than anything else, mixing light with darkness ; truth with error ; &c.

A man may do many good deeds without making a profession, and he is respected for it ; and then he may make a profession, and do more good deeds than before, but fails, willingly, in some things, he is not as much respected for it as before ; such a profession will do him no good. "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all." We of course sometimes come short in performing things as we ought, through weakness ; but there are provisions made for this ; that if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father ; Jesus Christ the righteous ; and he is the propitiation for our sins. But the fact that we are weak should not discourage us, nor make us careless in our pilgrimage ; for there is nothing required of us that we are not able to perform. Neither should the fact that Christ is the propitiation for our sins become a cloak under which to commit sin. "For if we sin willfully, after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, but a fearful looking for of judgment, and fiery indignation."

Now having taken into consideration, these things, let us be watchful, and keep ourselves in the "narrow way," and be "wise as serpents, and harmless as doves ;" if we do not, the subtility of that serpent which deceived Adam and Eve in the garden, will also deceive us ; if we have not been careful, and have not plucked up by the roots every weed in us, Satan will cultivate it ; and if he is let alone he will finally make us his certain victims. It is to be feared, there are too many of those weeds left standing in us, who claim to be members of the mystical body of Christ and if we are not violent against them to pluck them up, they will render salvation a failure, and greatly retard the prosperity of the church.

For the COMPANION.

The Covering, and what it Signifies.

We purpose in this essay to offer a few thoughts upon that portion of God's word contained in the fore part of the 11th chapter of 1 Corinthians. The apostle here makes some plain and positive assertions. The authority from which they proceed is so high as to leave no doubt in our minds as to their correctness. We at once admit them to be true, though we may not in the least be able to know the reasons. Faith in God, firm confidence in his wisdom and love, will enable us to acquiesce in all he does or says. True faith can ever look up and say, Lord, command, and I will obey, lead and I will follow.

Yet if it has pleased God to reveal unto us at least some of the reasons for his commands, surely it is our privilege to investigate those reasons, and we are assured that such investigations meet with his approval, for it is written, then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord. Hosea 6, 3. Again, "If any of you is lack ng in wisdom, let him ask of God, who gives to all liberally and upbraids not, and it shall be given him." James 1, 5.

But in making these investigations, if our views differ, we must exercise mutual forbearance, for only in this way can we keep the unity of the sp r t in the bond of peace. Eph. 4 : 3.

What Paul says in the third verse, is in the present state of things somewhat difficult to understand. We will now try, in the fear of the Lord, to look at this matter of headship a little

Perhaps there are few subjects, respecting which a greater diversity of opinions pertain, than the one now under contemplation. In all climes, and in all ages it has been a query in the human mind as to what was the proper position of the sexes, or in other words, what is each ones true sphere.

In looking at the history of the creation we find order and system prevail throughout. In the first place, we behold this beautiful orb emerge from the hand of the great architect. He furnishes it with lights, fits it up in a most magnificent manner, peoples it with myriads of animate creatures. Now a pause ensues, a deep solemn pause. An order of beings is now to be formed of intelligence sufficient to appreciate and enjoy all this. For this purpose Jehovah decides to make an intelligence in his own image.—Gen. 1: 26, 27. What a wondrous being! made but a little lower than the angels, made to possess and control this planet, then in all its beauty and perfection.

That man originally filled a place in God's universe suited to his dignity, we doubt not, though we may not now know just what that place was. "Male and female created he them." Two sexes were formed, each designated to fill a distinct and prominent place in the scale of God's creatures. By referring back to that period when God's works were unmarked by sin, we may ascertain what each one's proper position was.

After everything was prepared for man's reception he was created and placed over this to govern and enjoy it. Woman was taken from him, not from the dust of the ground from whence he was taken. She was brought to him; he at once recognized her, and gave her a name perfectly significant. She shall be called woman, or female man. Why? Because she was taken out of man, because she was of the same species, the same order of things.

Man was made from the dust of the ground, showing that here he should preside, control, govern and subdue. God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and he became a living soul. Thus he is a two-fold being, and while he has dominion over all terrestrial things, he is in communion with the celestial world. Such a being was man originally.

Woman was taken from man, showing that she is more delicate, more refined; taken from near his heart, showing that she should be the object of his most tender affection; taken from beneath his arm, showing that he is to be her stay, her support, her protector.

We now have quite clearly defined what was originally the mind of God respecting the position of the two sexes. Man's is an outward exposed position. It is for him to come in direct contact with the outer world, to face its storms and brave its dangers.

Woman's is a retired, secluded place, not exposed to the roughness of the outer world. God has furnished her with a beautiful token or sign of this seclusion. Paul alludes to it in 1 Cor. 11 : 14, 15. His language here is very pointed. He appeals to our common sense and asks the question, "Does not even nature itself teach you that if a man have long hair it is a shame to him? But if a woman have long hair it is a glory to her, for her hair is given her for a covering. Neither can take the place of the other without degrading themselves, hence says Paul, it is a shame, a disgrace for man to wear long hair, as that is the peculiar mark given to woman as the token of her retirement. It is a shame or disgrace for man to occupy the place which God has given to her.

Equally so is it a disgrace for woman to occupy man's place. Oh, that our sex understood this, for then would they no longer strive for the right of suffrage. They would feel the disgrace. The opposite sex no doubt feel it, & that is perhaps the great reason why they so strenuously oppose it.

Having noticed what was originally the mind of God respecting the two sexes, we shall next try to notice what position he designs for each to fill under the gospel dispensation. In the fore part of the chapter now under contemplation, the Apostle is instructing believers, in a church capacity. Verse 3, 'And I would have you know,' that the head of every man is Christ, and the head of the woman is the man ; and the head of Christ is God." The language here used must be understood in a somewhat restricted sense. Paul does not mean to say that man sustains the same relation to woman in every sense that Christ does to man. Elsewhere we are told that Christ is the great head of the entire church, and that in Him there is no male or female, but all are one. Christ is the only spiritual head of the church, from him, and from him alone flows that life giving stream that animates every christian. H mself alone presides over the heart in that inner temple, he permits none else to rule. There he sways his own scepter, his golden scep er of love. It is merely in the outer court that man has the preeminence. The outer government of the church, and the administering of her outer ordinances, belong exclusively to him. But in all acts of worship, we believe, or understand, that the gospel gives her equal rights.—She has, we think, the same right to pray, the same right to prophesy that man has. If it were contrary to the Gospel for her to prophesy or teach, why does the Apostle instruct her now to appear when so exercising." Surely in this place he is speaking of public worship. Verse, 4: "Every man praying or prophesying, having his head covered,dishonors his head." Under the law man worshipped with his head covered, as a token of his dejection, his fallen state. Christ paid for him the awful debt, and emancipated him. No longer is it proper for him to wear this token; by wearing it now, he shows his want of appreciation, his want of gratitude toward his great Benefactor. Hence the Apostle would say he dishonors his head, Christ Verse 5, 6; "But every woman praying or prophesying with the head uncovered, dishonors her head; for it is one and the same as if she were shaven. For if a woman is not covered, let her be shorn; but if it is a shame for a woman to be shorn or shaven, let her be covered." Paul here alludes to a custom prevalent in his day. The ladies of his time would have considered it a great disgrace to have had their hair cut short. This was only done as a punishment to those who by their conduct had brought shame upon themselves, and upon thost connected with them. But says Paul to pray or prophesy uncovered is equally as shameful, equally disgraceful.

From the above, how plainly can it be seen, that Paul means some other covering than the hair. This latter every lady then knew it was an honor to wear; silly fashion had not then, as now,caused such perversions. But the covering which he now speaks of, they did not seem so well to understand. If he had said no more on this subject, we might have concluded that a covering was only to be worn at times of public service. We will have him again presently. Verse 7: "For a man indeed ought not to cover his head, being the image and glory of God; but the woman is the glory of the man." The Apostle here, again alludes to the original design. That design was, that man should bear his image, and manifest his glory upon this planet. When he transgressed that image was defaced, and he could no longer manifest that glory. He is now incapable of answering the ends of his creation.—The second Adam, the Lord from heaven, fully accomplished, that which the first Adam so signally failed to accomplish. In him dwelt all the fullness of the God-head; upon him was stamped the divine image, and from him shone the divine glory.

Mankind are again through Christ permitted to bear that moral image, and reflect in their spiritual lives that glory. Each recipient of his love is equally responsible, and each is equally called upon to manifest his glory, by carrying out in their lives the principles which he taught. Man bearing the physical image of the great God-man, in deference to that, and also in deference to his original design, it has pleased God that he should outwardly rule, both in the family, and in the church. Hence says Paul he ought not to cover his head. Verse 9, 10: "And the man was not created for the woman, but the woman for the man. For this cause ought the woman to have the token of power upon her head, because of the angels." Again brother Paul alludes to the original design.—For this cause, for what cause, because the woman was created for the man. It is now impossible, perhaps, to fully understand the exact position which God originally designed for each.

We think it altogether probable that the first design was that woman only hold converse with God through man. He to be in direct communion with God, and she to receive divine instruction through him. But man having fallen became incapable of imparting instructions, for himself was without knowledge. No longer is he all-sufficient for her support, and nourishment, for he is now himself in need of help. In this wretched, and helpless constitution, when there was no eye to pity, and no arm to save, help was laid upon one that was mighty to save, and strong to deliver. Whatever might have been their social position, all is now chaos. Christ the second Adam, re-arranges everything. Only through him does God now reveal himself to the human family.

All now have an equal right to approach him, and through him, to approach the great Jehovah. He is the only source from whence all may obtain wisdom, strength, or any help. In him is life, and the life is the light of men. Woman under the gosple having equal privileges, in all spiritual things, equal access to a throne of grace, Paul would have her wear a token of this power. Because of the angels. Paul also informs us that angels are ministering spirits sent forth, to minister unto them who shall be heirs of salvation.

Woman has been the greater sufferer by the fall. Her delicacy, and helplessness under sin has been the cause of her wretchedness. How often have our eyes filled with tears, and our bosom swelled with indignation, as we have read of the cruelty, and injustice done her by those who were physically stronger than she, especially among those nations where the light of the blessed gospel has never penetrated. By examining God's word we find that it is his will that man should outwardly rule in the church, and in the family, but that woman has equal spiritual privileges.

The covering of the head, signifies two things, it is the token of her subjection to man in outward things, and also, a token of her equality in spiritual things, or as the Apostle terms it, the token of her power.

And to be worn, because of the angels. These celestial messengers seeing upon her this token, are ever ready to help, and comfort her. Some, however may object, and say, do not these heavenly beings know the state of the heart? Why then, is it necessary to wear this outer badge? Brother Paul thinks it necessary. We doubt not, but this may be worn without being in possession of those inner qualifications necessary to receive their help, yet we do not know that this assistance will ye given us if we wear not this token, and as this is one means through which our kind Father sends us comfort, we certainly ought to place ourselves in a proper position to receive this comfort. Where, and when do we most need their help? Is it when we are making use of the appointed means of grace? Ah, then it were comparatively an easy matter to direct our thoughts heaven-wardly. Is it when engaged in worship at home? Then also, can we more easily controll our minds. We need their help most, when occupied with our daily cares, and trials. How many a sensitive wife, burdened with suffering, and care, fails to receive from him who vowed at the sacred altar, to cherish, as well as support her, that tender sympathy, which she so much needs, and without which she is so wretched, wretched indeed, if spiritual help were withheld. Our heavenly Father, will never leave us comfortless, if we obey, and trust him, let outer circumstances be what they may.

To wear a covering in times of public service is a plain injunction: to wear it at all times is a privilege, accompanied with the promise of Angelic assistance.

What Shall I Give in Exchange?

"For what is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul, or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?"—Matt. xvi. 26.

The above mentioned scripture has a great bearing upon those who profess to be followers of Christ. I often read it, and then stop for a moment and consider what will become of us, or at least a great many of us, who have made a promise between man and God that they would forsake this worldly lust. And how often do I think of our promises to our God.—I might ask once a day, or once a week, or only when we come together at a place appointed for worship. I am afraid the latter is too often the case. I am afraid that this world has a great bearing in some of our christian friends, perhaps so much so that they will lose their souls. And what a pity! "What will they give in exchange for their souls," could they only purchase it again. Gold and silver, house and land is no object. If a man has the possessions of all the world and all its goods, he could not pay for his soul, could not exchange for it, if it is in the hands of the adversary.

Now, christian readers, consider a little and see where we are. Do not tarry too long. The wheel of time waits on no man; every day we are one step closer to our years. Let our first move be to save our souls.—I often thought that if our friends would rise only one-half as early to worship God as they do to cultivate their acres, a great many of our difficulties would not be. Brethren and sisters, "watch and pray;" watch first; to watch you may avoid many difficulties. The enemy is watching you closely; he sees you daily; he is rich, rich enough to buy your soul, and perhaps you will not know it until you are bound in articles which you cannot break. What a pity this would be! Let us examine closely our hearts, and see what a dreadful state we are in. Our time of departure is near at hand, and our friends are standing around and weeping to see that one so near and dear must leave. That one must reap the harvest which he has sowed. And perhaps 'tis nothing but tares. On the other hand, how rejoicing if we know that his harvest is nothing but pure wheat,—if we know that he has tried to make peace with God,—if he has always been on his watch to serve his Master before he would provide for his living here on earth. Plenty of time is given for man to provide for both. "But seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you," Matt. vii. 33. This is a happy consolation for every christian professor. I say again there is plenty of time to provide for both body and soul, but seek first for God and his righteousness. Seek to save that which neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, nor thieves break through and steal. I have often seen that people lock up their earthly treasures on account of thieves, and am sorry to say that the safes which contain the most valuable property are daily left open. Now, let the readers of this essay consider for a moment; read the text, read it with an understanding, and see if it does not give promise of a mansion above. And I would farther say try to build up the church of Christ; you can do a part of it, and we all can do a part of it, and if all these parts are put together, it will be finished, and there is nothing more to be done. If every one has done his or her part, the work is finished.

I would now say to the editors of the Companion that I was well pleased with the instruction which I received during the last year. I often read of the brethren and sisters, where they were, how they were getting along, and that they are still trying to serve their Master more diligently, which I think done me as much good as though I had went eight or ten miles to meeting. But I hope to meet them all where parting shall be no more. Brethren and sisters, let us all aim for this. And in order to get our friends and neighbors to join us, try to induce them to take the Companton, which I think cannot fail to help them on the road to Zion.

The Lost Power.

Dear Brother Henry:—I rejoice to learn that there are many brethren in the church who not only believe but earnestly desire to see the time return when the signs promised by the blessed Savior "shall follow them that believe." Some years ago I published several articles under the above caption in the Companion, and which produced some sensation at the time. My mind has not changed. I would be glad if every brother and sister would prayerfully examine God's writen word on the subject of gifts, and claim, with confidence, a literal fulfillment of his promises. I know that many of the old brethren condemn any one who expresses his belief in a manifestation of the truth and power of God by the working of a miracle; yet those same brethren will go eight or ten miles and pray over the sick, anointing them with oil in the name of the Lord. Do they go because it is a fashion or custom in church? or do they believe the Apostle James when he says, "And the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up, and if he has committed sins, they shall be forgiven him"? There is no dodging the issue. If sick are restored by faith, prayer and anointing with oil, it is a miracle, and there is no getting away from the fact. I am fearful that unbelief is the besetting sin of a large majority in the church. The blessed Redeemer, in his commission, just before he ascended to heaven, said, "And these signs shall them that believe in my name shall cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents, and if they drink deadly therein, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." What followed? We read in the last verse of St. Mark's Gospel, from which we extracted the above,—"And they went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following."

I am aware that the unbelieving portion of the church (in miracles) assert that these signs, which followed believers, in the Apostolic age, ceased with the Apostles, by God's appointment. Where do they get their information from? Not from God's Word, I feel assured. If they have no, "thus saith the Lord," for their believing that the power conferred by Jesus on the diciples ceased with the diciples, and was not practiced by those who heard and obeyed the Word, we prefer to believe God's word to the ipse dixit of any man, even if he be a "pillar of the church." It is passing strange that brethren will contend for a literal obedience to the command of the Savior, to "believe and be baptized" in order to be saved, and that the Holy Ghost will immediately follow, although the commission does not so declare. We believe, yea, we know from blessed experience, that it does follow obedience to the commandments of Jesus.

My advice is this: let every member of the church pray for, and believe that God is just as able and willing now as in the days of his incarnation to own and bless his word, by doing that which he has promised shall follow them that believe. I feel assured that by conforming our lives, faith and practices to God's requirements, looking for and expection his divine promises to be verified to us, in demonstration and power, we have nothing to lose, but everything to gain.

For the present I leave the subject, ardently desiring that some one more able than myself will throw more light upon the subject.

Yours in the Lord,

L. J. GROVE,

Contentment

And be content with such things as ye have. Heb. 13 chap middle claus of 5th verse. In the above scripture is contained not only a wholesome admonition but a positive command. It seems necessary for the promotion of our happiness in life?—for us to be content with our lot: and from the reading of the scripture it is evidently binding upon us as professed christians to endeavor to be resigned to the appointments and trials of life. Dark and gloomy may seem our prospect, our fair hope and expectations all blighted. Those whom we value as our comfort and support, removed by the hand of death, or proven false and faithless to our fond trust? Honor, riches, pleasure and many friends among the things that once were, how often we see the cherished treasures of earth thus pass away. No marvel it the first impulse of the heart be who can bear all this weight of sorrow. And yet how much to be preferred the example of those who, instead of whinning and freting and filling the ears of all around with a rehersel of all their sorrows and disappointments, endeavor to search for the bright side and to cultivate a cheerful contented disposition. I admit that some persons are naturally of a more desponding disposition than others but I am confident that we all (especially those who are assisted by the grace of God) can do much toward cultivating our disposition, I claim there are few persons placed in such adverse circumstances, but that they may better their situation by trying to forget the dark and dwell upon the light side? Some persons think that one who has passed through deep sorrow and yet possesses a bright countenance and cheerful disposition must necessarily possess a hard heart. They probably have little idea of the effort on the part of that person to refrain from despondency and dispair. It is the lot of some to have many more trials and disappointments in life than others, and what ads to their sorrow they are oftimes reproached and evil spoken of by those who imagine themselves well informed on the subject, who in reality are speaking from mere fancy or report. How useless to worry and grieve about those things which injure us in this life only and cannot marr our future happiness, and instead of regarding such persons as enemies, flatter ourselves that they are laboring under mistaken ideas and comfort ourselves by meditating on the many favors and blessings we enjoy above our merits, instead of coveting what our neighbors enjoy above us, and instead of murmuring let thankfulness be our theme.

Trip lightly over trouble,
Trip lightly over wrong,
We only make grief double
By dwelling on it so long.
Why clasp woes, hands so tightly,
Why sigh o'er blossoms dead;
Why cling to forms unsightly
Why not seek for joy instead·

A Few Words to Bro., Heckler.

Dear Brother :—I see there is no use in saying anything more on the subject of our controversy, for we are not any more of one opinion now than at the commencement. But I would like to ask you some questions before we close our controversy, and I shall look for you to answer them. You quote the words of the Savior, when he says: "there shall be great distress in the land, and wrath upon this people, and they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led captive into all nations; and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." I understood you to admit that the Gentiles time will be fulfilled when "the Lord shall descend from heaven with the voice of an arch angel, and the dead in Christ shall be raised first, and we which are alive will be caught up with them to meet the Lord in the air." This you must admit is the first resurrection. Well more you admit the gentiles time is fulfilled, and then you say it seems the Lord wanted us to know what was left unfulfilled, and sen and signified it to his servant John on the isle of Patmos. Now let us see what John says: He places one thousand years between the resurrection of the saints, or first resurrection, and the resurrection of the rest of the dead. Now what I want to know is, in what state and condition do you suppose the world will be during the thousand years, when satan will be shut up in the bottomless pit?

John gives us plainly to understand that the universal conflagration will not take place before the thousand years have expired, when the devil will have another chance to use his hurtfull means to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, and gather them to gather to battle; the number of whom will be as the sand of the sea; but the devil will be taken and cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and false prophets are, and then will the universal conflagration take place, and the rest of the dead raised and brought to judgement, and the new heavens and the new earth created. Now what condition will Jerusalem be during the thousand years, and the world in general? What will be going on? Will there be any religion, and of what kind? Will the city be inhabited? if so, by whom? Or will the gentiles still continue to tread it down, regardless of what the Savior has said? Or do you believe as some do, that the heavens being on fire will be dessolved, its elements melt with fervent heat, and the rest of the dead raised and brought to judgement and the new heavens and new earth created immediately after the saints have been caught up to meet the Lord in the air?

Now brother until you answer these questions I will be in the dark, as to what you really do believe.

Christian Family Companion.

DALE CITY, PA., Jan. 19, 1872.

How is This?

D. R. Stutzman informs us, that at a church meeting, in the Sugar Grove branch, Indiana, on the 29th of December last, "some six or eight Bishops met, and expelled thirty seven members, for the simple reason that they would not compell a few sisters to wear caps." Now if this is not true we want such slanderous reporters to be gainsayed. And if it be true, it is a case worthy of serious consideration, and farther investigation. Does the Companion circulate in that branch? Who will give us farther information upon the matter?

In Earnest.

One of our correspondents who has failed in getting his Almanac for 1872 says: "Send me the Almanac; if it can't come through without some pilferer nabbing it, have it registered."

We have forwarded another copy, and will continue sending until our patron gets his Almanac.

Brother Henry:—At our last Annual Meeting, it was said that at the next Annual Meeting that all the facts should be brought together, on Monday, and action taken to bring about a reconciliation. In view of that fact would it not be proper for each arm of the church to instruct their elders how to vote on that question, as all the elders are invited to attend? If it should be left to a vote to know whether the majority is to rule, and whether the minority will be satisfied with the majority. Let us know through the Companion whether there shall be any action taken at home, and what that action shall be

We think it highly important that every elder should ascertain the sentiment of his congregation, upon the subject, before he goes to the Annual Meeting. And let them decide which would be the most scriptural mode, as well as which is the most ancient order. We shall have something to say upon this subject shortly.—Editor C. F. C.

New Books.

We have added to our stock of Books for sale at this office, a work entitled Theodocia Earnest, or the Heroine of Faith. It affords the strongest arguments on baptism by immersion that we have ever read.—The first volume consists of conversations upon the subject of Baptism and other kindred subjects. The second volume presents the subject in the form of ten days travel in search of the church. The two volumes will be sent together for $3 00, or either volume separately for $1,60.

We have also a few copies of the Book called Grace Truman, which we can send post paid for $1.60. It reasons powerfully in favor of Immersion. Address all orders with the cash, to H. R. Holsinger, Dale City, Somerset county, Pa.

Deaths.

We have intelligence of the death of Elder Jacob Kurtz of Ohio.

Also of the departure of sister Hildebrand, wife of brother David Hildebrand, of Conemaugh congregation, Pa.

Obituary notices, are promised.

The Brethren in Spring Run congregation, Pa, will please take notice that the notice of their proposed series of meetings did not reach us in time to do them any good, consequently was not published. Sister Myers sent it, but it was delayed until the last No. of last year had gone to press.

Brother F. M. Hobbs, of Blue Sulphur, Green Brier county, West Va., wants us to send them a preacher—We have none just at hand, at this time, to whom we can say go and he goeth. When we get a supply we will accommodate him. By the way, would it be wrong for the District Meetings to make provisions for such out of the way places? Say we would all contribute ten cents a piece to our District Treasury for the purpose. We will subscribe for ten poor members on that fund, annually.

Answers to Correspondents.

J. H. Roberts. We think you are mistaken. One thing is true; notices from our neighborhood are received a little earlier than those sent from a distance, but when once they reach the office, all are held equal.—At least we desire so to do, and it seemeth to us we do it.

Amos S. Chamberlin:—We would take pleasure in making a trip to New Jersey, if means and time would permit. We are trying to make arrangements by which we will be enabled to travel a little more.

C. Bucher:—The Almanacs were sent; if they do not reach you let us know.

Phebe Davis:—Brother A. B. had not paid the first subscription.

J. R. Cullen:—What.

Noah Longanecker:—Seventy five cents; including G H. $2.25.

Josiah Gochnour:—They were sent; but we send again.

Wm. N. Clemmer:—The C. F. C. was sent regularly to Mrs. A. G. at Reading, Pa., since No. 10 of Vol. 7. We will continue it according to order.

Me:—We received a letter containing $1,50 from some person, with the following instructions: "Please send your paper to me: send it to Poplar, Crawford county, Ohio,"—Who is me?

Jas. A. Sell:—Yours of December 19, and the other of January 9, came to hand tied together with a string, on the 15th inst. Rather slow mails down your way.

V. C. Fisher:—We cannot supply you with No 49 of Vol. 6. Have almost all the other numbers of that volume.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Brother Holsinger :—I will write you a few lines for the C. F. C., hoping they will be interesting to some While thinking what to write about our memory carried us back to the days of our boyhood, when going to school at New Vienna, O., with some of our neighbor school mates; the school superintended by brother Jas. Quinter, and taught by brother Miller and Sister C. A Haas. There brother Landon West and myself, room mates at brother Quinter's would often kneel at our bedside and pray, as we were both young in the church. After going to school awhile brother Landon took sick, and had to leave school. O, how I missed him; How oft I prayed for him; He had a long and serious spell of Typhoid Fever. When school was out I visited him often; when he was almost a skeleton. His physician would allow him to eat but little; but he lingered along and got well. During his sickness his father died with the same disease. Now brother Landon is a worthy Minister in the church. His influences have been different from mine. He lived with a brother laborer and surrounded by the brethren. I came west, and for some time was growing cold, as there was no preaching of our order here, and but few members. Have no organized church yet I took the C. F. C. last year, and thanks be to the Lord, it has been a companion to me It has encouraged, and strengthened me in Grace. This year I will take the Companion and Pious Youth. We would love for brother Landon and others to obey the injunction of the Savior more strictly, when he says go ye therefore and teach all nations. We would love to hear his voice again; and do believe that he could do much good here to the cause of Christ.

Yours in Love,
C. G. GARMAN.

On Reading.

Brother Holsinger :—Through the mercy of our Heavenly Father we have again lived to another New year. And therefore we have great reason, to be thankful to him that watches over us daily. We don't feel ourselves tired of reading yet, and we wish the Companion to continue. We think it our duty to read the good news and glad tidings, that come before us, supporting the cause of Christ, And we think where our reading interest is, there our hearts are inclined to be also. And we don't find anything in worldly ritings, that is inclined to draw our minds heavenward. I acknowledge that we are too ready to pick up the news of the day or week. But by reading such news, we are not gaining one step on our way heavenward Brethren and sisters let us try, as the poet says: in the 711th hymn.

Thus let us still our course review.
Our real state to learn;
And with redoubled zeal pursue
Our great and chief concern.

We many times read things in our periodicals, that do not correspond with our feelings, but we also can read in the scriptures things that we know we have not been obedient in, and our feelings are not suited. But if we be followers of Christ we must subdue that self-will, and not think that we must have all to correspond with our own feelings. And then when brethren write on different subjects, either tobacco or any other evil habits we are guilty of, we must surrender and confess our guilt, and pray to God for help to be relieved from all such as is not acceptable in his sight.

And now my brethren we have again lived through another year, but we don't know who or which of us will be here through this year.

Let us say with old brother Paul, that we all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among us, but that we be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment. 1 Cor. 1 : 10. This alone is enough to convince us all, that we are to live for the help of each other's welfare. And for my part I always feel ready and willing to be instructed by the brethren's good admonitions, that come to us through the Companion.

JAMES MCBRIDE.
Hazel Dell, Ill.

Brother Henry:—We have been a constant reader of the Companion, and it comes a very welcome messenger, with its exhortations and divine instruction to more diligence and perseverance in the work which lies before us; and as each has his work, as we have talents, so let us be faithful to our calling, and try to encourage one another. I have often been cheered by reading correspondence from different parts of the brotherhood, of the progress of zion, and the enlisting of soldiers for Jesus Christ to work in his vineyard.

Our church here in Coventry is a pretty large one; meeting every Sunday; one Sunday in the Coventry or Price's meeting house, and the other at Lawrenceville, where brother Isaac Price is in usual attendance, besides two other places at school houses.—We enjoyed a week's meeting when our loving brethren Grabill Myers and Joseph R. Hanawalt were with us, and so faithfully labored among us, for the encouragement of the people of the Lord, by showing the beauties of that heavenly kingdom which shall subdue every other kingdom.—O, what a tower of strength has he who has declared that all power is vested in him, in heaven and earth. Let us submit ourselves to him, and fully put our trust in him, that we may, as the apostle John in his first epistle 1st Chapt., declares that if we walk in the light as he is in the light, even Jesus Christ, there shall be no darkness at all, and the blood of Jesus will cleanse us from all sin if we make the application on our part by obeying his commands, and so obeying and beleiving on him as the scriptures hath said. Of these things our brethren have labored to put us in remembrance, and knowing the day of the Lord is coming, tried to persuade men to flee the wrath to come. We hope that good may result, that some good seed sown may spring up to everlasting life. May the Lord reward them for their love and interest manifested toward us in this place is my prayer.

JACOB CONNER.

H. R. HOLSINGER; Dear Friend :—The answer to the Query of D. A. Lichty in last week's Companion can be found on record in the 15th verse: and the third chapter in Genesis.

J. LEFFLER.
Myerstown, Pa.

Brother Holsinger: — We moved here from Miami county, Ohio, the 15th of November, and intend to make this our home for some time, if we can enjoy ourselves in this wild community. There are no members of our church within forty miles of us, so you, brethren and sisters, that have lived in the same situation, know the loss of the privilege of going to meeting; but by the grace of God we will try and live as nearly right as we can. Hope and trust when it goes well with you, that you will remember us here among the unbelievers.— We hope, too, that some minister will be moved by the spirit of God to come to this place and try to start a church Jesus says, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." Come, brother minister, this is one of the places that the true Gospel of Christ has not been heard. Fill your calling. This is a good, productive country, and easy to farm. Any brother that feels it his duty to come here and preach can write to me, and I will give him instructions how to get here. My address is Independence, Warren county, Ind.

J. B. WARD.

Brother Holsinger:—As it was made known through the Companion that our brother Adam Hollinger, of Adams county, Pa., was suffering from a tumor in his side, the brethren and sisters, friends and acquaintances, will no doubt be glad to hear from him, how he is doing, etc. We were to see him a few weeks ago; found him quite sick, his flesh wasted away and back laid open. He is obliged to lie on his back all the time, and has been confined to his bed eleven weeks. His bed sores appear worse to me than his side, although not so dangerous. But I feared it was Gangrene and thought he would never preach for us again. My husband was to see him since and found him a little better, and yesterday we heard he was still growing better.

I have been trying to raise a list of subscribers, and at this late date am obliged to send you a smaller list than I expected.

I thought when I read brother L. J. Grove's letter, how pleasant it is to have the Companion. We hear news that we do not expect. We had heard that J. D. Trostle was on a visit to Cumberland county, and thought he would likely pay us a visit on his way home. But when I saw by brother Grove's account that he was going to preach in Baltimore I knew we need not expect him. In brother D. M. Holsinger's letter he speaks of Elder George Long, from whom we were glad to hear, but sorry that he is in delicate health. Hope he may soon be well again, and am glad the Brethren visited him. I often think of the dear brethren and sisters in the West, that have so few visits from the Brethren and seldom any meeting, and often feel sorry for them. We here, in this neighborhood, may well say our lines have fallen in pleasant places. We have meeting-houses within a few miles, and have preaching every Sunday, and for these and all other blessings we have every reason to be thankful.

SUSAN B GILT,

Abbottstown, Pa.

Conemaugh Congregation.

Brother Holsinger:—By your permission I will give your readers a short account of the Conemaugh congregation, in Cambria county, Pa.— I shall not, at this time, go back to the time when it was first organized. I may, however, in some future time, give some account of its progress in earlier days. At the present I will commence with January first, 1871, at which time we started in with from two to four hundred members, seven preachers, and I think fifteen deacons. Said church was then, as it is now, under the supervision of Elder Solomon Benshoff and Samuel Brallier. During the year just passed there were about twenty added to the church by baptism. We had from one to four places of meeting every Sunday, with four Sunday-schools, all superintended by the Brethren.— We built one new meeting-house during the year, and concluded to build a communion meeting-house next summer in place of the old one. If we succeed in this we will then have one large and three smaller meeting-houses. During the year seventy-one cases of sickness and death were within the bounds of the church — Some of our friends were called to try the realities of the other world.— Some of the brethren's children had to pass from time to eternity. I think only two of the members of the church fell victims to the king of terrors, namely, sister Agnes Dimond, and Ann Angus. In the death of those sisters the relatives lost two who were dear to them, the church lost two of her members, and as you will observe the Companion lost two of its regular subscribers, and we firmly believe that all those losses put together will not compare with with their eternal gain.

At this time of writing, January 1st, 1872, we start in with the same officers of the church, not knowing whether we shall all live to see this time another year; but one thing we do know, that if we live in the Lord we will die in the Lord, and find rest from our labors.

One thing more and we close. As we have several meeting houses, and are always ready to open them for the brethren to preach in, and as we have quite a number of people here that we think should belong to the church that do not, we will say that suppose some of the ministering brethren come and preach for us a week or ten days, and we will board you free of charge and make up a purse to help pay you for your time.

STEPHEN HILDEBRAND,

Mineral Point, Pa.

Dear Brother Holsinger:—I will here inform you that Jacob Hollinger and I arrived home this evening, from a short visit of Love to the out skirts of the Big Swatara church, Dauphin county, Pa., in the Fishing Creek Valley. The brethren go there only every 24 weeks. I went there the first of last February, there were then only a few members a few miles east of that place. I was also there in the latter part of April. This fall they received 4 members by baptism. We met with brother Jacob Eshelman of the White Oak church, Pa., and also with brother David Etter from the above church who helped us to labor. We had very fine meetings, good turn outs and good attention, and I think I have never seen as many tears shed in a meeting as were last evening. We heard of several that said they had made up their minds to serve the Lord. There was an old lady of 75 years that attended our meeting, and she walked home last night after meeting, a distance of three miles. On our way home we stopped with sister Margenthal at Harrisburg. She would like for brother Grabill Myers to stop with them, and preach at Harrisburg. She says they can get a church (the Bethel at any time :) or any other brother that can make it suit to come and preach for them, just so they can have a few days notice. Address friend Levi Margenthal, Harrisburg Pa. They are easy to be found.—Just take the street car at the depot, and stay on it till they come to the end of their track ; then you are, to say, in front of their house. My love to all. From your brother,

JOHN BRINDLE.

Brother Henry :—We wish to let the brethren and sisters know that we are alive, and have had the satisfaction of hearing the Gospel preached in its ancient purity once more. Brother David Brower and family from South English, Keokuk county, Iowa, arrived at Albany, Linn county, Oregon, on the 12th of October.—After visiting some of the brethren in and around Albany, and being present at two Meetings, they made a visit, in company with some of the Linn county brethren, up to Rogue River Valley, Jackson county, Oregon, a distance of two hundred miles or over. Returned to the Linn county brethren, on the 7th of November.

On the 17th, brother and sister Brower, in company with brother David Peebler, came over to our house, near Sublimity, Marion county, and had meeting in our District school house, on the 18th, and 19th, of November. There was three persons immersed, and we believe quite a number more was almost persuded to be christians. Brother Brower and family have gone to Rogue River to make that his home for the present, and we are without a speaker. There is a speaker by the name of Peter S. Garmon, living in Linn county, thirty miles from here. We need a speaker to live with us here. Brethern pray for us, pray that the Lord may send us a speaker, that we may have a church organized, so that we may attend to the ordinances of the house of God DAVID WORKMAN.

Brother Holsinger :—In harmony with previous engagements, I left home on the 22nd of December last, for Fayette county, to hold meetings for the brethren in their Meeting House, at Fairview. We began our meeting on Saturday the 23d, at 11 o'clock, and continued it every evening and part of the time during the day, until Tuesday night, the 2nd of January 1872, when we closed at Fairview. On Wednesday, started for sister Johnston's near Uniontown, where we had an appointment in the school house, but on account of the inclemency of the weather we did not attend, no person turning out. I arrived home safe on Sunday morning, at 6 A. M. the 7th of January, and found all well, but only middling well myself. May the Lord bless the dear brethren and sisters, and friends every where, for their unbounded kindness to me while laboring and visiting a mong them. I feel that I have during my short visit, added many dear names to my circle of friends, whom I hope the Lord will help me never to forget in life.

While I was away, we had quite a serious affair in our little village, the circumstances of which are about as follows :

A number of young folks had collected in town, and after drinking till a little intoxicated, quarreled, when a young man, named Lowery Kirkland, drew a revolver and shot Simon Burket, so he died in less than an hour. Young Kirkland was promptly arrested, and now confined in the Western Penitintary, awaiting his trial, while his unfortunate victim lies asleep in the church-yard, not far from our meeting house.

Non Resistance.

The following is from the columns of a local paper published in Maryland. The correspondent is one of our contributors. It explains itself. We are glad to see our brethren valiently defend the truth, by the sword of the spirit, and would be pleased to have copies of all papers containing such correspondence.

Mr. Editor :—May I claim space in your columns, by virtue of being a subscriber, to repel a misrepresentation occurring in the discourse delivered on Thanksgiving day by the pastor of the Reformed Church, who stepped aside from the broad beaten track of generalities to indulge in a little special misrepresentation to become food for the digestion of unwary souls, who may unconsciously devour it as yea, and amen, to the detriment of those at whom was hurled the invectives of prejudicial hostility. With all due deference to the magnificient attainments in theological lore, and the beauties of formalism looming up before his capacious conception, I feel induced even in my humble capacity, to resent wilful aspersion and odium sought to be cast upon those with whom I fraternize in the bonds of christian fellowship.—Nor would I be characterized an apologist for him whose malignity was hurled even at my most inveterate enemy, when savoring so strongly of misrepresentation.

The assertion I refer to was, "that the Quakers and Tunkers, so called, maliciously ignore civil government." This I must truly confess, developed a new feature in our organic faith quite foreign to the views we at least profess to entertain—the discharge of the broadside salute to the contrary notwithstanding, which has failed to make even the slightest indentation. Feeling fully assured that our most holy faith will never be shipwrecked upon the shoals of wilful malignity and unfounded aspersion, having no foundation in fact. If I were to throw the veil of commiseration over this absurd attempt, I would simply suggest, "I wot through ignorance ye did it ;" which only gives birth to the more suggestive sentiment, that "error, wounded, writhes in pain and dies amid her worshippers." We claim as your text so pertly admonishes us, to "render tribute to whom tribute is due, honor to whom honor, but especially unto God the things that are God's," whose superscription and laws we profess to have written in our minds and enstamped upon our hearts, through an active living faith, by which we have access into his grace wherein we stand and rejoice in the hope of the glory of God, having the love of God shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, which is given unto us through the holy exercise of that faith which leads to repentence and baptism for the remission of sins, with a full conception of all the holy benefits he proposes to confer upon us by rendering obedience to his will, in all the fullness of the significance with which he has so wisely ordained it. And at the same time we endorse fully Paul's exhortation to Timothy, that, first of all, supplications, prayers, intercession and giving of thanks be made for all men, for our rulers and all who sway the sceptre of temporal authority over us, praying that the Lord may so direct and prosper them in their counsels and deliberations that they wisely rule and administer the affairs pertaining to our common nationality, that it may redound to the advancement of the glory of God, the good of the Church, the safety, honor and welfare of all the people, so that we may be enabled to lead quiet and peaceable lives in all godliness and honesty, looking unto Him as the great author and finisher of our faith, the all-wise and supreme arbiter of our eternal destinies.

This is but a portion of our tribute we render unto Cæsar, because Paul, an inspired medium says this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior. If this, a part of our faith and practice, savors of disloyalty or infidelity toward our civil government, I fail to recognize it.—When the word ignore is used in its broad, comprehensive sense, as conveyed in this discourse, we must regard it in its lawful and technical sense. In law a jury ignores a presentment when there is no testimony to sustain it; and in that sense I do most equivocally ignore, or set aside, the charge as preferred against us as lacking evidence to sustain it. If it can be shown where we, as a religious body, have failed to sustain any legally enacted law pertaining to our civil government, except in the peculiar sense of non-voting, (which can only be applied in an individual capacity); and as the government has no compulsory laws, neither our church, to that effect, I fail to see where the transgression comes in.—Where there is no law there is no transgression: which will apply as well in a temporal as in a divine sense.

If we are conscientiously opposed to becoming warriors personally, we sustain our fealty to the government by paying the equivalent the laws of war demand; and I am not sure there have not been members of the gentleman's own peculiar fraternity who were glad of an opportunity to avail themselves of the very same thing, as did many others claiming connection with the various church organizations extending over the domain of civil and religious liberty.—A few words in reference to the implication, as applied from the rendering of the word "ignore," as used in close connection with that portion of the subject matter under consideration, impeaching our fidelity to the government. The Quakers and Tunkers, in the estimation of the speaker the law, civil and divine, are not regarded as good citizens; hence, impossible to be good christians. As regards our good citizenship, we submit it to the arbiters of the government; and as to our being fit subjects for the kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, we submit into the hands of the divine Judiciary, whose judgments are all done in righteousness, equity and truth.

Reply to Query in Number 50, Volume 7.

"Repent therefore of this thy wickedness, and pray to God if perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee." Simon was not rebaptized, nor would Anaias and Saphira have been if their lives had been spared, and all their followers may be thankful if they escape their doom in this life, for "God is not mocked."

Reply to Brother Moser's Query, Volume 7, Number 50.

This query is of a singular character, and should not be disposed of without serious reflection; and it that demands immediate attention.—My advice in the case is this. Let the body of the believers who are acquainted with the circumstances be interrogated at once; they are no doubt better qualified to decide in the case than any other. As for my part I can see no impropriety, nor inconsistency, in rebaptizing the individual, he having been very young, and as is confessed, did neither believe nor repent. His baptism in my opinion is of no more utility than infant sprinkling; therefore my sentiment is that which is contained in Acts 19: 4.

Brother Holsinger:—We find in Companion Vol. 8, page 11, the query: "Where do we read that the seed of the womon shall bruise the serpents head? I have not found those words as they head in the query, but in Genesis 3rd chapter 15th verse, I read words similar, where the Lord said, "And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; It shall bruise thy head and thou shalt bruise his heel." In german it heads as follow: "Und ich will Feindschaft setzen zwischen dir und dem weibe und zwischen deinem Samen und ihrem Samen; derselbe soll dir den kopf zertreten und" du wirst ihn in die ferse stechen. If J. A. L, has something else in view, let us have it. We are not too old to learn, and always willing.

THOMAS GRAY.

Brother Holsinger:—I enclose 10 cents for which you will please send a Brethren's Almanac. I am glad for any reading or news of the church as I am so far removed from its companionship. I moved here nearly two years ago, from Frederick county, Maryland, and since then I have not seen a member of our church. If there are any in the State, I never heard of them. I think the ministering brethren forget to travel South.—While every one is moving Westward there are none coming South—There is no danger of the climate, I think, as it is a very healthy country here in Georgia. I am living about four miles from Atlanta, near Kirkwood Station, on the Georgia Rail Road. My Address is Drawer 17, Atlanta, Georgia.

SARAH HAPE.

Brother Henry:—A few days ago brother Emanual Coughnour and I were to visit our brother Adam Hollinger, who was sick and in a suffering condition for a long time, and at his request I will make a short statement of the condition in which we found him. He is still confined to his bed and in a suffering state, attended with much pain when shifting about from one side to another; but from what I could learn I think he is some better, and my opinion is that if it is the Lord's will that he will recover, but it may require a long time yet.

And farther I would say, that the family, (that is) his wife and children are all well again. I can truly say that it made me glad to see them restored to health. There I also met our old and beloved sister Elizabeth Peters (Aunt Bet assy she is called generally,) quite lively and well, seems to be well contented which is a great blessing. JOSEPH MYERS.

Died in the Waterloo congregation Black Hawk county, Iowa December the 21st 1871, EMMA daughter of brother Joseph and sister Mary SAYLOR aged 4 years 4 month and 24 days. Funeral services by the writer and others from John 14 h chatter (1, 2 & 3) verses. Jacob A. Murray.

On Tuesday evening December 12th, 1871, between the hours of 7 & 8 o'clock, our nephew, and well respected physician J. A. MILLER, of Westmoreland county Pa. It can truly be said, "In the midst of life we are in death." The sad news concerning Dr. Miller caused general mourning and lamentation among the people of the borough of Legonier, where he was practicing. His friends and relations could hardly realize it, nor sympathize enough with his parents as he was the only one left out of four. Disease Diphtheria. In the short time of six days, the monster death had accomplished his work although there were four physicians in attendance. This will again speak to us, "Be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not, death may come."

D. D. Horner.

Within the bounds of Spring Run congregation, Mifflin county, Pa., JOSEPH H., son of brother George and sister Elizabeth MAGILL, aged 8 years 5 months and 15 days.

Text;—Revelation 2: 12th verse. Funeral occasion improved by the brethren.—Hymns 587 and 574 were sung.

This is the first death in the family of our brother and sister. They had 12 children. Josie died of Typhoid Fever, and an older one was sick with the same at the time of his death.

An old maxim runs thus, "The old must die, but the young may die," and we see the truthfulness of this saying verified in the above instance, as well as upon many occasions.

Christian Family Companion.

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Martha.

Bethany, and the Mount of Olives, are noted in Scripture as being the Savior's resting places; and also, as the place of his assension. At Bethany, his disciples saw him for the last time. There he lifted his hands and blessed them. And in this, his last act upon earth, he was parted from them, and carried up into Heaven.

Amid the shades of Olives, he often rested his weary body, and from there, when his work was finished, he entered into Heavenly rest.

Bethany and Olivet was a favorite retreat during his ministry in Judea. "In the day time he was teaching in the temple; and at night he went out and abode in the mount that is called the Mount of Olives." Leaving the traffic and turmoil of Jerusalem; and the crowds that fill the courts of the temple, and pressed upon him. Some to hear the words of life, and others endeavoring to catch something out of his mouth that they might accuse him, and still others forced their way near him that they might be healed of infirmities—leaving all this tumult, at the close of the day, he wends his way to the quiet village of Bethany at the slope of the Mount of Olives. Thou Bethany art not least among the cities of Judah; for in thee Immanuel oft times found shelter.

At Bethany, Jesus was always certain of repose and welcome; for there dwelt the family who loved him, and whom he loved. There loving, busy Martha was ever ready to serve him. There he would meet his friend Lazarus, and Mary, whose great joy it was to sit at his feet and hear his words.

There is not very much recorded in scripture concerning the little family at Bethany; but what is, brings them so distinctly to view—so marks their characters, that we seem to know them. Martha seems to have been eldest, she was as the housekeeper. Martha recieved him into her house. She bears the distinction of being one whom Jesus loved. There are only two others, besides this family, who are thus mentioned—the beloved disciple and the young ruler. There must have been some congeniality of nature—some unison of feeling between this family and Jesus, that united them in closer bonds of friendship than the other persons that were daily with the Savior. There must also have been something peculiarly loveable about this family, that caused the Savior to bestow upon them his special affction, and often honored them by his presence in their home.

On one occasion, when her Lord visited them, Martha loses the calmness of her spirit, and is cumbered about much serving; and complains to Jesus that her sister had left her to serve alone; She appears to have been a little jealous of Mary, she says: "Lord doest thou not care that my sister has left me to serve alone? bid her therefore that she help me.' Her words are such as we would use in speaking to a familiar friend, and show how intimate the intercourse was between this family and Jesus. The Savior answers her; "Martha, Martha, thou art careful, and troubled about many things; but one thing is needful.' While Mary was feeding her soul, laying up store for future use, Martha was anxious about the meal she was preparing for the Master. Her intentions seemed good and yet the Lord reproved her. It is not probable that the meal she was preparing was much like we often see on tables at the present day. No doubt it was very simple in comparison. The Marthas of our day could not offer so good an excuse for being cumbered as she could have done: for certainly the exalted character of her guest was some excuse for her. How different is a modern meal from that which Abraham set before the three angels. That consisted of bread, meat, butter, and milk. It would make quite a list to enumerate the different dishes of a modern meal. "To serve tables" seems, now, to be the life-work of many women, and like Martha of old, they grow anxious and cumbered about it. Constantly laboring for the body, they forget to to feed the soul. That of which Martha was anxious was only temporal; but the food that many Mary was recieving from the Savior she would but for the glory of God." The symptoms of carry with her into the eternal world. Such food is worth being anxious about, and laboring for. From the last mention made of Martha, we suppose that after this occasion she needed no more reproof for being cumbered; but that she more earnestly sought that good part.

The sisters apperaed to have had the most entire confidence in the Master's love for them. When Lazarus falls sick Jesus is far away at Bethabara, beyond Jordon. They doubtless very much wished that Jesus was then ministering in Jerusalem, that he might come out and heal their brother.

At last they dispatched a messenger to Bethabara, bearing a message full of hope and trust; "Lord behold he whom thou lovest is sick." We hardly think Martha worded that message, She would have been more likely to have made a direct appeal, and said: "Lord come to us, we are in trouble, come heal our brother." It is such a message, as we would expect Mary to send. We imagine Martha proposed to send to Jesus, and Mary gave the message to be delivered. The message shows how certain they were that Jesus loved them all. They believed that it was only necessary to inform him of their brother's illness, and he would come to them; or heal him while far away, as he had done others. How they must have watched and longed for his appearance as the days wore on, and Lazarus still grew worse. Perhaps the messenger returned and told them he had seen Jesus, but did not know whether he would come, but that he had said: "This sickness is not unto death." Lazarus's disease still increases. They see that he will die; but still they watch, and wait, hoping that he will come yet.

What a test of their faith. How many of us would have said: "I cannot believe that he loves us, or he would come when we are in so much trouble."

Still Jesus tarries, and finally Lazarus dies. They no doubt wonder why he did not come, but they love, and believe in him still. When he does come Martha hastens to meet him, certain of receiving his sympathy. There is a shade of reproach in her first words on meeting him. "Lord if thou hadst been here my brother had not died. But I know, that even now, whatsoever thou wilt ask of God, God will give it thee." How her faith glowed when she uttered those last words! But directly it flickers and almost dies when she remembers that Lazarus had been in his grave four days already. She seems hardly to have understood the answer Jesus made; but confesses that she believes he is the Christ. And believing that,—she knows whatever he says is true, though she cannot comprehend it. Here is true scriptural faith. No caviling because she cannot understand; but with child-like simplicity she accepts his words as true. The scriptures appeal much more to our faith than to our understanding. There is really no more mystery in the word of God, than there is in the book of nature. But seeing the latter with the natural eye we believe it all without reasoning about it. But, because spiritual things cannot be seen with the natural eye, great minds lay hold of the Bible, and wonder "how can these things be!" and reason upon it until they disbelieve. Martha being blessed with woman's simple faith believed Jesus though she could not understand how one that lived and believed in him should never die. Lazarus was dead and he had believed. That was enough to cause her to doubt.

Presently when Jesus asks for Mary she returns and brings her sister. Mary's first words are exactly the same as her sister's, but she falls weeping at Jesus' feet. And when the Lord sees her weeping he weeps with her: "Jesus wept." How simply, without comment, the apostle states the fact that our Savior wept with those who weep. And how much comfort there is in those two words: "Jesus wept." At the grave of his friend he wept. Oh! mourner restrain not your tears, thinking it sinful to mourn for the dead, Jesus wept, and he sympathizes with you, as he did with Mary, and Martha: "For we have not a high priest that cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities."

When Jesus commands the stone to be taken away from the grave, Martha, supposing he wished to see the body of his friend, says: "Lord by this time he is offensive; for he hath been dead four days." These words show that she did not understand Jesus when he spoke of the resurrection of her brother. 'Said I not unto thee, that if thou wouldest believe, thou shouldest see the glory of God?" She makes no reply, but she did see the glory and power of God in the resurrection of her brother.

During the last week of our Savior's ministry we find him again at Bethany : "And there," in the house of Simon the leper, "they made him a supper, and Martha served." But this time she does not appear to be cumbered. She had passed through the deep waters, since the first feast, and looked into the gloomy depths of her brother's tomb. She had realized, that "but one thing is needful." She serves, as was her duty to do, but she does it with patient calmness, and thus furnishes all her sisters, who are cumbered as she had been, with an example worthy of imitation. Neither does she complain of her sister. When others find fault of Mary, for wasteing the precious ointment, her voice is not heard against her.

This is the last mention we have of Martha. Her name is not found among the women mentioned who followed Jesus to Calvary ; or that went, on the first day of the week, to anoint his body. But we think : "and other women," may include her. We hope we have studied the character of Martha, not without profit, but that we will all be more diligent in seeking "that good part which shall not be taken away from us."

The Path.

"Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth, and the Life : and no one cometh to the Father but by me." John 14 : 6.

Job speaks of a path which no fowl knoweth ; the vulture's eye hath not seen it ; man knoweth not the price thereof, neither is it found in the land of the living. The depth saith it is not in me ; the sea saith it is not in me. "It cannot be gotten for gold ; it cannot be valued with the gold of Ophir, with the precious onyx or sapphire." "Whence then cometh wisdom ? and where is the place of understanding ? Seeing it is hid from the eyes of all living, and kept close from the fowls of the air. Destruction and death say, we have heard the fame thereof. * * * God understandeth the way thereof ; for he looketh to the ends of the earth he seeth under the whole heaven." See Job 28.

God in his wisdom had prepared "a Path" in which he would be glorified. It was at this time yet unseen, but seems to have been somewhat known to the spirit of darkness. This path is light ; and the light is a terror to darkness, because it comprehendeth not the light. The path is wisdom, not the wisdom of this world, but "the fear of the Lord is that wisdom, and to depart from evil is understanding." Job 28 : 28.

This path is no more kept unknown in the world. In the fullness of time God brought it into light—"a light to lighten the Gentiles and the glory of my people Israel." Luke 2 : 32. The path can be found in the New Testament only ; it is Jesus Christ himself revealed to man ; "who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." 1 Cor. 1 : 30. No wonder Job, in his prophetic language said of the path, that it is invaluable : there is nothing in the world can compare with it ; "it passeth knowledge," (Eph. 3 : 19,) and "all understanding" (Philippians 4 : 7). And oh, what a consolation to us ! we can have it "without money and without price." "If any of you lack wisdom let him ask of God, that giveth liberally and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing doubting," James 1 : 5. Jesus saith, "Ask, and it shall be given you ; seek, and ye shall find ; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." Matth. 7 : 7. Who will not be wise ? Are we not in a dangerous position while we stand outside the path ? The door is open day and night and Jesus is inviting you by his word and the church—"The spirit and the Bride." Oh, what benighted creatures, who are groping their way through this dark world as though there was no light to be found, while so beautiful a path is near by. In the path are many steps which the christian must take heed to ; "for even hereunto were ye called, because Christ also suffered for us, an example that ye should follow in his steps." Peter 2 : 21. The path though incomprehensible in its nature, is illuminated with the glory of the Most High, strewed with the best gifts of Heaven's store, upon which the soul may feast and be joyful ; yet we find by the way some rugged cliffs, bearing thorns and briars, and fierce lions lie in wait to devour us. But on we go, fearing no harm ; for "who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good." 1 Peter 3 : 13. Come dear young pilgrims, let me entreat you, when you meet those frightful objects turn not away from them ; don't be frightened ; be courageous, and the lions will flee from before you ; and if they do tear the flesh, it will heal again ; and by and by the path will become level and smooth ; and the enemy will not be so fierce, and soon we will be able to shout Glory to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord—the path.

What I Know About Preaching. Number 3.

In Companion Volume 7, page 645, there is an article, written by occasional, headed, "How to have good Meetings," which I do not, and can not altogether endorse, from the fact that he conveys the idea that one speaker should do all the work. This may do very well for those that like to be heard speak, but we have not so learned Christ. But again, he thinks that the speaker should select his text one week before, and study it in all its bearings, and if there is any thing in it that he does not understand he should refer to commentaries, from which I infer that he thinks that the brethren are all very rich, and have nothing to do but study and preach. In this he is mistaken, for I wish him to know that there are brethren in the ministry, that have large families to support by their own labor, and have no commentary to refer to. They must work hard from Tuesday morning until Friday night, and then on Saturday morning start and travel ten fifteen, or perhaps twenty miles to preach, and that not in a buggy but on foot as a general thing, and preach three sermons and get home on Monday evening, tired and worn out, ready to go to work on Tuesday morning. Now under circumstances of this kind, how are we to follow the counsel of Occasional. His counsel will do very well to tickle the ear and the fancy, but I had rather have our speakers enter into their closet and then go to the House of God, and let Occasional and all those that complain of poor meetings, and profess to love the Lord, do as Aaron and Hur did with Moses, hold up their hands by their regular attendance and their earnest prayers to God, in behalf of their poor servants. Perhaps we would have better Meetings and less complaints. Brethren pray for us.

The Lord's Prayer.

In volume 7, page 748, of Companion, brother Henry Spicher interrogates: "Would it not be more appropriate in repeating the Lord's Prayer, to say 'thy kingdom has come, may thy will be done on earth'"? In answer to this we say not,—for two reasons: 1st, We discover Christ was speaking of God's kingdom, not his, or the kingdom of grace. 2d. We think God's kingdom is triumphant in the future, and is there to be enjoyed and possessed by the saints, not here on earth. "Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Matt. xxv. 24. Notice after the separation of saint and sinner; the kingdom was delivered for a possession, the coming of which we are to pray for, saying, thy kingdom come. We claim a difference between God's and Christ's kingdom, Christ's kingdom consists of Himself as king, the world his teritory, the disciples his subjects; His commandments his rule of government. God's kingdom will be in the New Jerusalem, an everlasting life.

However, we discover no inconsistencey, in praying thy kingdom come, if Christ meant his kingdom on earth, for his kingdom is continuously coming; and being extended, by men repenting, and being baptized.

"Agent" for the Companion.

This is something which not every one has the pleasure of being. It is quite a pleasure to go around and call upon brethren and friends, and solicit subscriptions to the C. F. C., and hear their different arguments presented. Brother A. says: Well, I like the Companion, it is such a consolation to me to hear of the prosperity of the church, and to read the many instructive lessons contained therein, written by the brethren. I wil lhave it.

Brother B says: I would like it pretty well, but there are some things published in it, which I think should not be; and I think the Companion has done more harm than good, so I won't have anything to do with it.—I will not take it any more.

C says; I am too unlearned in the English language to take it; I don't understand it, hence it is of no use to me.

D says: I have no time to read the papers, if I want to read, I will take the Bible or Testament to read in (But he seldom gets to read them either).

E says: I get a Local paper, and I can't afford to get another. Times are pretty dull, and it costs so much everywhere. (He is too poor. If he is worth from 2000 to 10,000, and spends 5 or 10 cents a day for Tobacco and Segars).

It is quite soothing too, to one's mind to send off a list of subscribers to the editor, and one out of every three not get his paper, especially when they have paid in advance.—They very soon conceive the idea that the "Agent" forgot to forward their name, and appropriated their subscription money to their own use.

The word "Agent" means something, at least with some people. It sounds high toned to be called an "Agent," and some also thinks it makes money, getting 15 cents from each subscription and we might think so too; if we would get all the money in advance, and have no more trouble about affairs thereafter. But some entertain fears, of being "takeh in," so they want the paper to come first, before they pay; and then it some chance times happens that they forget to pay it at all, and if the Agent has paid their subscription to the Editor or Publisher, he may soon become minus of his commission, besides his time of writing for corrections, &c., &c.

The above may seem a little flat to some, but I have just written what a good many have thought. I suppose all will understand me without any further explanations.

LEVI ANDES.

Lincoln, Pa.

THE PRAYING CHILDREN.—An early Reformer, named Melancthon, was once very much distressed and cast down about the cause of God, but one day when taking a walk, he heard some children's voices, and listening, found they were engaged praying for the great work of God.—He at once returned to his brethren and, entering the room, exclaimed, "Brethren, take courage, for the children are praying for us."

LIARS.—We don't see why a man should fall or rise into a passion when he is called a liar. If he is not a liar the man who called him such is one himself. If he is a liar the truth should make him ashamed and not angry.

For the Companion.

Our Brethren.

What they Believe, What they Preach, And what they Pratice.

The above has been suggested to our mind by the frequent calls for more preaching. Many times over have we read in the Companion, language like this: "Let some brother or brethren, come and preach in our part, for there are many here who have never heard the Brethren preach." These writers say farther that there is a wide open field there, but no one to improve it; and they realize the truth of that saying, "The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few." This request has been urged so often, and with such earnestness, (but with what effect we cannot tell,) that our mind has been impressed with this subject, which is certainly one of great moment, both to those who make the request and to those who reciece the call. We wish now to ask every one who may read this: Are we doing right?

We will now review our belief, our preaching, and our practice, and then let the reader decide the question for himself.

We believe that the scriptures are the word of God; that the New Testament is the better covenant, that God has made with the world through the person of his Son; that it is the new and the living way, and that those words of eternal life are sufficient to make all men wise unto salvation. We not only believe this promise is made to us, and to our children, but to them also that are afar off, and that this is the last revelation that will ever be made from Heaven to man; that there is no more offering for sin, and that no other place of redemption will be found, so long as the earth remaineth. Is this not our bleief? certainly we belive it.

We preach that the whole world lieth in wickedness; that God is angry with the wicked, and makes no allowance for their sins; that men everywhere should repent and turn to God and live; that for them he has opened a fountain for sins and uncleaness; that the blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin. We preach that the life of Jesus was a perfect living picture of the doctrines he taught; that men should repent of their sins and forsake them; that unless men do repent they will certainly perish, and the faith is so important, that a lack of it, makes it impossible to please God. We preach that after men and women have faith in the Son of God, have repented of their sins, and have been baptized by trine-immersion in water for the remission of sins, they are subjects of another kingdom, and have come from darkness to light, and they have then obtained forgiveness of sins; that hence the christian race begins, that to faith must be added virtue knowledge, &c., until we have in our possesion all those christian graces that are to give us an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of God's dear son. We preach glorious rewards and a brilliant crown that no eye hath seen, and an eternal life at Gods right hand in heaven, which are sure to all the faithful; but everlasting shame and contempt in the regions of darkness, where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched, for all those who know not God and obey not the Gospel. We preach that the promise of this life and that which is to come, with all the joys and raptures of the Golden City, are on condition that men hear the sayings of Jesus and do them; and then it is that the house we are building is founded on a Rock. Also, that we should not only start right, but should folllow our Master in every path of humanity, hour of trial, and even to death itself, rather than surrender one principle of truth that our leader taught. That among these duties are enjoined, prayers for kings, and for all men, visiting and anointing the sick, washing one another's feet, and the holy kiss, or the kiss of charity, and last but not least, charity itself, every sense of the word. In short we believe and preach that "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God," and is very profitable to guide our faith, reprove follies, correct our mistakes, and instruct us in a holy and righteous life, and that all men may be perfect, and are thoroughly furnished for every good work

The reader may now ask, Is not this enough? No, certainly not; for we trust that our brethren preach the word We have possessed over one thing that we preach, that we may bring, it before our minds more clearly, so that an impression may be made, or at least some thought be given. We preach and believe that the most important duty enjoined on the people of God, is, to labor for the extension of His kingdom over the world, by peaching the Gospel in all nations, to every creature; that this Gospel must first be preached to all men, or in every nation, and then shall the end come. And our belief and preaching is not built upon one word or command of our Master alone, but we have it in every sermon he preached; he urged it on sea, and on land, in the temple and in the field, that he was the Savior of the world, that he desired all men every where to know that he had come that we might have life and that we might have it more abundantly. Is not this what we believe and preach, with all our heart? And is it not what we love more than anything else? And do we not pray for the same? It certainly is, or we do not love the Savior as we should. For he said "If ye love me, keep my commandments." We love our nation and we are glad to hear of its prosperity, and we rejoice when we learn that liberty's tree is growing in other lands and among other people. And there is no sect or ordor of people anywhere who do not wish their cause to prosper. Well brethren, we have the best of all causes to love and advance, the most excellent of all orders or sects to labor for; and why should we be so slack to go into the vineyard and work for the Masters cause?

Brethren, have we not said enough to make us see that our duties and responsibilities are very great? And should not our zeal be more warm and our labor more extended? Should not our efforts be more constant, at home and abroad, in season and out of season, but always abounding in the work of the Lord, for asmuchas we know our labor is not in vain, in the Lord?" The very nature of our religion teaches us that our labors should be life-long and not to close with a day's work, nor a month's, nor a year, not till we have fought a good fight, and have finished our course. This is just the kind of life we enter when we embrace the christian religion; and we can never say, truly, that we love Jesus and his kingdom, until we labor by some means or other to advance that kingdom by winning soul's to Christ

Well, now for our practice We cannot notice all that is practiced by our brethren: neither do we think it necessary at this time to notice more than relates to what we have done and are now doing to spread the gospel.

And we wish to say first, that we regret from our heart, that we cannot give a more encouraging report of our Brethren's labors for the advancement of the Master's cause than present facts will allow. In offering these thoughts to the brethren, we do not wish to discourage any one, or to speak lightly of what some brethren (and sisters too) have done, are still doing to advance the cause of that which is nearest to their heart: but we wish to speak to those who have done nothing, as yet, and to those who oppose the efforts now making to push on the great work. That our brethren have not done as much in preaching the gospel throughout the states of our own country as they should have done, all will allow, to say nothing about preaching it in other lands; and considering the advantages a free country affords, and that our brethren have been in this country about 150 years, we think they have not shown the effort nor the desire to proclaim the pure and unadulterated word of God to the nations, that should have been seen in those who claim to be the followers of King Immanuel.

But little has been done in this work, that should have been done, we think, when we take into view the fact that others have done more, and some a great deal more, whose whole life, as religious bodies, does not date back near so far as 150 years. And what we regret most is, that many of our brethren oppose the missionry effort that has at other times been made by our brethren, so that but little has been done in that direction. And some have gone so far that they censure a meeting that would continue longer than one or two days. While a cost of them have fought the Sabbath-school cause, whose whole effort is to try and sow the good seed in the fruitful fields of youthful minds, before those fields are filled with tares and thorns. This certainly is a grand mistake, in Brethren to oppose these efforts, when no duty is more clearly marked out in scripture, than to tell children what God has done for the world, for its people, and for children two. Experience has taught, and scripture teaches that youth is the seed-time of life. And we need not wonder, when we see in a few years our country filled with wicked men women, if we reflect that there has been a gross neglect somewhere in the training of these same people when they were young. All the wicked men and women in our world, who cause so many sorrows and so much trouble to church and state, were once innocent children, and a large majority of them, might have been kept so, if they had received the proper training, and had been instructed from the word of God. It could not have been otherwise, unless we say that Solomon's words have lost their meaning, and that Paul was mistaken when he said, "Evil communications corrupt good manners." Brethren, farewell, for this time.

LANDON WEST,

For the COMPANION.

God Is Love.

Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God; therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not.—1 John 3: 1.

Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, who have received Christ through faith, and were willing to forsake our sins, and embrace the doctrines and precepts of his holy will. For as many as received him, he has given power to become the sons of God, to become his spiritual children,—adopted into his family, and conformed to his image. "For as we have born the image of the earthly, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly," in both soul and body. "Beloved, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." Although, the fullness of our future excellence and bliss can not be known here, yet we can have the hope of being like Christ and seeing him as he is. "And every man that hath this hope in Him, purifieth himself, even as he is pure." He now strives to be pure, perfect and holy, even as Christ is pure. But as we are now in our present, earthly state, we see through a glass darkly; our knowledge of God and divine truth is indirect and obscure, when compared to what it will be in our heavenly state, when we shall see him face to face, clearly, as one looks on the face of another directly in his presence.—Now we only "know in part; but then we shall know even as also we are known."

Brethren and sisters, let us prove faithful to our high calling; let us be more faithful than ever. When trials and temptations rise before us, if we have faith as a grain of mustard seed we shall be able to remove mountains. Then let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us "run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who, for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God." "For if we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him:" and our light afflictions which are but for a moment work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. And "if God be for us, who can be against us?" Then let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; for he is faithful that promised; and let us consider one another, to provoke unto love and to good works; that we may all be found faithful at the day of Judgment; for "for it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God."

Fix Up.

Some may say that there are too many "fix ups" now. We think not. Every church would be more prosperous if more of her members were "fix ups." You ask "Who ought to fix up?" Every Christian, because Christ says the hypocrites are of a sad countenance and disfigure their faces (do not wash their face nor dress their hair) that they appear unto men to fast. A christian is not a hypocrite. When he comes to God in fasting and prayer he will do nothing to attract the notice of men; but he will wash his face and dress his hair that he may appear unto God in supplications for his grace, that he may wash and be clean, that he may be anointed and wholly dedicated to his service. Our appearance may cause some to think that we are christians, yet the all seeing eye of God may know that we have only cleansed the outside of the cup and platter.

But we intended writing about our fixed up meeting-house. The stove flues had been on the sides of the house. From this cause the smoke annoyed the audience very much.—Last week the brethren took these flues down and put one in the center of the house. And run the pipe from each stove into it. Other repairs were made, the sisters scrubbed, washed and brushed until everything was clean; or in short everything was "fixed up." "Will it pay?" A hundred per cent. On last Sabbath there were morning and evening services in the house. We do not remember a time at our regular appointments when the audience was so large, so attentive and quiet, and the preaching so good as it was at the two services on last Sabbath. Elder Joseph Leedy preached in the morning and evening; In the morning from the words "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them," and in the evening from the words: "Prepare to meet your God."

Brethren if you have dull meetings, fix up, and you will have a larger and a more attentive audience, and better preaching.

Closing Sunday Schools.

BY J. S. M'FADDEN.

In several Companions I have seen expressions like this: "We have closed our school till spring." "Owing to inclement weather we thought it best to close our school till spring, &c."

From the above texts I derive the following questions:

1st. Does the closing of Sunday schools through the winter advance the Sunday school cause?

2d. Does the recess prepare pupils that they may the better receive the truth?

3d. Does the devil through the winter shut himself up in his temple and prepare his batteries for a vigorous summer campaign, or does he think the weather too inclement to work?

Now, my friends of the quill and Sunday school, here are three questions which are somewhat knotty, but I shall answer them all negatively.

Therefore, 1st question. It does not. Practice makes perfect. It is a known maxim that the more we practice a principle the more efficient it becomes, either for good or bad—Theory and no practice is a dead letter; so if the Sunday school theory is not practicable the year round, it is shorn of most its strength. Sunday schools are second to no other way for evangelizing the world, and should be in every community.

2d. It does not. The body must receive daily food to sustain life; so with the mind, except that it will be fed either with good or bad thoughts all the time, and the idea should be to let it have all good and not let it run on in its nature. The mind is always grasping and never satisfied. Were this not the case there would be but little difference between man and the lower animals. Man is constantly devising and gaining more knowledge, but the lower animals make no advance, but have a limit to their instincts, while man's mind is infinite.

3d. He does not, for he goes about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour. His influence is not bounded by zones or times, but he is always vigilant, always active and never fails from "going up and down among the sons of men. He knows his time is short, and therefore works wile it is called to-day. This industry is worthy our following. No, no; the devil is always on the alert and does not sleep or rest, but will when King Jesus comes again, cease his work; but now it requires daily work to counteract his influence.

True it is that we have much inclement weather in our latitude, but we should make a virtue of it and only be the more zealous in the great work of redemption, and use all the means in our power to counteract the evil influences in our land, by gathering the young into schools and instructing them in the way they should go; for if good impressions are made in their youth they will be food for them in mature years, But now as the Sunday schools are closed, would it not be well if parents would give daily instructions from the Bible to their children, for thus are they commanded—talk to them of Jesus—of God—of heaven—have family worship, and God will certainly bless them with you. I speak not of all; some are daily teaching them, but I would stir up others to a sense of their duty.

To you that are holding on in the good cause of Sunday schools, I bid you God speed—go on and God will abundantly reward you. For the giving of a cup of water in the name of Jesus will be rewarded. My heart and hand to all lovers and workers in the cause of Sunday schools.

Christian Deportment.

A haughty, severe, stoical deportment and an unrelenting strictness of opinion in the social and cheerful enjoyments of life, are far from giving a just and true conception of religion to such as are adverse to it and devoted to the pomps and vanities of life. This severity, instead of convincing them of their errors and recalling them to the God of mercy and goodness, may harden their minds still more by representing the worship of God as a system of unceasing hardships and mortification.—Many good but mistaken people too often seek to convert and reform others by exhibiting in their own practice certain acts of self-denial. But it is not in these that true religion consists. When used in moderation they may indeed be innocent and sometimes useful, but God is not to be served only with the word of mouth, or the bending of the knee. It is the pure and upright heart that he requires and with which alone he will be satisfied. With this pure and upright frame of mind we may live in the world and cheerfully conform to its reasonable customs, and yet observe the most strict subjection to our duty to our God. This is true religion and the service of God who made the world and all things in it, and who, although a jealous God, is the God of love, who delights in the happiness of his creatures. All other ways of serving him are but outward forms and empty bubbles founded on ignorance and superstition.

Design and Mode of Baptism.

After hearing a great many discourses delivered by our Pedo-Baptist friends on the subject of baptism, and seeing with what earnest zeal they endeavor to sustain their position in the last twelve months, we feel as though we have something to say also, by way of encouragement, through the columns of the COMPANION, to our brethren, and more especially to the younger brethren and sisters, who have recently enlisted under the blood stained banner.

In the first place we will notice the design as prefigured by the washing under the old covenant, with an application to the new; and secondly we will briefly notice the true mode.

In order that we may properly comprehend, we will commence with the origin of types—the time and place.

The first commandment given to the Israelites after they had come out of Egypt, was at Mount Sinai, at the time that God was going to appear on Mount Sinai in the sight of all Israel, and just before the delivering of the law. That commandment was for them to wash their clothes. Ex. 18 : 14. We will notice a few passages of scripture to show that garments were used as symbols. See Rev. 7 : 14, "And have washed their robes." See also 9th verse, "Clothed with white robes." Also 3 : 18, "That thou mayest be clothed and the shame of thy nakedness do not appear." Also 6: 11, "And white robes were given unto every one of them." Again 19 : 13, "And he was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood." Jude 1 : 23, "Hating even the garment spotted by the flesh." Luke 15 : 22, "Bring forth the best robe." All of which, we think, represent the robe of righteousness, Therefore, if garments are used as figures, why not then the washing of clothes be used as a figure? We can see nothing to the contrary; and for this reason we say that the washing of clothes at Mount Sinai had its own prefiguring, which we think was baptism. So the washing of clothes at Mount Sinai was the first washing; and the second washing we find in the book of Numbers 19: 8, "And he that burneth her shall wash his clothes in water and bathe his flesh in water." So here we have the bathing of the flesh with the washing of clothes, and both in connection with the preparation of the water of separation, which is for purification from sin.

Permit us to notice in a few passages the word "wash," which is frequently used in the place of baptism. "And such were some of you; but ye are washed." 1 Cor. 6 : 11. "That he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word." Eph. 5 : 26. "He saved us by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost." Titus 3 : 5. "Which stood only in meats and drinks and diverse washings." Heb. 9 : 10; and says in the 9th verse, "Which was a figure." See also 10 : 22, "Let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water." We think the last passage quoted is certainly plain enough to convince any rational mind that the sprinkling of water as a baptism is out of place, and was never intended as such by the great head of the Church. The language is too plain for us to misunderstand it; and yet our sprinkling friends will tell us that it is the head which should be sprinkled, while the apostle tells us that it is the heart, and that the body needs no washing in the operation of cleansing, while the apostle tells us in unmistakable language that the body is to be washed, and we think in baptism is what the apostle means.

We will now notice the third washing under the old covenant. Lev. 8 : 6, "And Moses brought Aaron and his sons and washed them with water." So we see in the consecration of the priests it was necessary for them to be washed with water before they could officiate in the office of priesthood. But we see from the 12th verse that he had to be anointed: "And he poured of the anointing oil upon Aaron's head and anointed him to sanctify him."

We have noticed the three principal washings under the old covenant, and will now make the application to the new.

Mark 1 : 4. "John did baptize in the wilderness and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." We see that God is again about to appear to the children of Israel, and he therefore sends his messenger to prepare the way by the washing with water unto repentance. This being the first washing under the new dispensation, it answers to to the washing of clothes at Mount Sinai.

The second washing under the new order may be found in John 3 : 22, "After these things came Jesus and his disciples into the land of Judea and there he tarried with them and baptized." There appears to have been a stronger attraction in his baptism than that of John's, from the fact that John's disciples said, "All men come to him;" and it was said "that he made and baptized more disciples than John." He had power to forgive sins, which power John did not possess. Consequently there must have been something about his baptism to attract the attention of John's disciples. Then as the washing of clothes and the bathing of the flesh in water, was a prerequisite in the application of the water of separation in the purification for sin, so now the use of water is a prerequisite to the application of the blood of Christ in the purification for sin.

We will now pass to the third washing under the new covenant.—Then Peter said unto them: "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." The Jews very well knew what Peter meant by repentance. So then as it was necessary to use water in repentance and in the remission of sins, it would naturally follow, that it would be necessary to use water in order to receive the gift of the Holy Spirit; for Peter said, "Repent and be baptized and ye shall receive the gift," &c; as we have noticed that it was necessary, for the priests to be washed before the anointing with the Holy oil, which we think was a figure of the Holy Ghost.

The apostle Paul in his letter to the Roman brethren says: "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life; for if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection."—So Paul testified to both Jews and Greeks, repentance toward God and faith in Jesus Christ. So then we have repentance where God has intended it. And do we not see the design in the commission as given us by Matthew fully developed?

"Baptizing them in the name of the Father," unto repentance; and in the name of the "Son" "for the remission of sins;" and in the name "of the Holy Ghost," for the anointing of the same.

We will now proceed to briefly notice, as promised, the true mode.

It is universally acknowledged, I believe, by all denominations, that there is a baptism with water commanded. You may ask the Roman Catholic, the Methodist, the single immersionist, the Presbyterian, with all the Pedo-Baptist fraternity, where they get the commandment for baptizing ,they will almost unanimously tell you, "In Matthew 28: 19, 20." My beloved and friendly reader there is where I will go. "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Teaching them to observe all things whatsoevor I have commanded you; and Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen."

It is an evident fact, from the reading of the commission as quoted above, when viewed with the scrutinizing principles of language, that it is an elliptical sentence; because the noun "name," being placed there in the singular number, it can only be the representative of Father; and followed by the conjunction "and" and the proposition "of," and specifically designated in the singular "the Son," and still followed by the words "and of the Holy Ghost," shows clearly to the unbiased mind, that we are to be baptized in the name of the Father, and baptized in the name of the Son, and baptized in the name of the Holy Ghost.

The language of the quotation does not tell us to be baptized in the essence of the three in one, but positively declares that we are to be baptized in the three separate names, by saying, "In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." The word "name," being placed there but once, and in the singular number, only belongs to and is modified by Father, hence it is that the word "name," must be supplied as a modifier for "Son," and in like manner for "Holy Ghost," to make the language plenary, and full.

We will here present an example, which we think, perhaps, may open the understanding of some who do not duly weigh the matter as they should. See Mark 10: 35. "And James and John the sons of Zebedee came unto him."

Here we see James and John are singular names, yet being connected by the conjunction "and," the noun "Sons," their representative, must be a plural noun, according to the rules of syntax. But to say, James and John the Son of Zebedee, would be incorrect, and would sound very awkward. So in the language of the quotation under consideration; for if the words Father Son and Holy Ghost are nouns connected by the conjunction "and" then according to the above rule, and according to the principle which requires "Sons" in the example presented to be in the plural and not in the singular, the syntax will be, in the names of the Father Son and Holy Ghost. But as we cannot change name to names, but must leave it as couched in the text, we only read, "name of the Father;" leaving us to supply name before Son, giving the Syntax, "name of the Son;" leaving us to supply name before Holy Ghost, giving the Syntax, "name of the Holy Ghost." It is an evident fact, that we cannot without violating the rules of Syntax, join the words Father, Son and Holy Ghost together, and make them all modify name, for they will not agree with name as the rule requires them to do. So do we not see when examined by the principles of language, that the quotation is an elliptical sentence? And if an elliptical sentence, then it demands an action by baptism in each name of the Holy Trinity.

"Well," says one, "why does your peculiar church dip your members face forward in baptism?" In answer we would say, simply because we are instructed from God's word to do so. For we read in the Apostles letter to the Romans, 6: 5; "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." Can we be planted together in the church by baptism, in the likeness of Christ's death by falling backwards in the ordinance of baptism? Nay, verily. How then are we to be placed in a condition so as to be planted together, and be baptized, in the likeness of his death? Answer: By bowing the head forward, and in no other position; for the Lord of Glory, when extended upon the Cross on Calvary, bowed his head and died. So do we, when baptized in the likenes of his death, bow the head in death to sin, as he did in death to the world; and buried in water from light, as he was interred int he tomb from all eyes; and wise to a newness of life as conquerers over sin, the devil and his adherents, as he arose triumphant conqueror over death, hell and the grave. Thus do we imitate the likeness of his death by bowing the head forward as Christ bowed his head and died. Nowhere in sacred writ, do we read of persons going or falling backward in obedience. I think if I mistake not the word backword occurs in the Old and New Testaments about sixteen times, and nearly every instance in disobedience. But in all worship, since the world began even until now, do God's followers fall upon the face, or forward, and worship. We will give a few instances of falling backward.

Isaiah 1: 4; "Ah sinful nation, a people laden with iniquity, a seed of evildoers, children that are corrupters: they have forsaken the Lord, they have provoked the Holy One of Israel unto anger, they are gone away backword.

Jeremiah, 7: 24; But they hearkened not, nor inclined their ear, but walked in the councels and in the imagination of their evil heart, and went backward, and not forward.

Lamentations, 1: 8; "Jerusalem hath grievously sinned; therefore she is removed: all that honoured her despise her, because they have seen her nakedness; yea, she sigheth, and turneth backward."

John, 18: 6: "As soon then as he had said unto them, I am he, they went backward, and fell to the ground."

Out of the many passages we could find to prove a backward motion disobediance, we have presented but four, which we think sufficient. We will let this suffice for the present, leave it to the earnest consideration of the reader, and pray the Lord to help us with understanding minds and willing hearts, to search and do his will. Oh, that no seeker of the Lord may desire to pursue the way with Naaman of old, who wanted to be cleansed of his leprosy, and yet did not like the prescriptions of Elisha, who had commanded him to wash seven times in Jordan. Naaman said "Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel? may I not wash in them, and be clean? So he turned and went away in a rage." 2nd Kings, 5: 12. O seeker, who wants to be cleansed from the leprosy of sin, we beseech you therefore in Christ's stead, be reconciled to God; by using the perscriptions of him who can cure a sin sick soul, and his prescriptions are believe and be baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, with an observance of all he has commanded.

A Word to Customers.

We are doing a pretty large business in the book trade through the mails, and still expect to increase our trade. It looks like a simple and easy task to put up a package of books, write on it the purchaser's name and address correctly, and put it in the post-office. So it would be if all persons who send for books would write plainly and give their address properly. But here lies the difficulty. A good many people do not write plainly; others neglect to give their full address; and some forget even to sign their names to their orders. When we get an order that is obscure or uncertain, we write to the person sending it for an explanation. It frequently happens that an old customer will fail to give his proper address, because he supposes he has done enough business with us to have us remember his address; but we must remind our friends that when they send to this office, it is necessary they should write their address in full on every letter. We receive so many letters every day that it is impossible for us to remember the Post-Office, County, and State where any particular person receives books. No matter how often you write, put on a plain direction where we are to send the answer. Name Post Office, County, and State.

Still Somewhat Disarranged.

Our office is still somewhat confused and demoralized, in consequence of sickness and a lack of sufficient mechanical aid. Since our last apology, others of our typos have been unable to make full time on account of affliction. Add to this the extra labor attendant upon the change of subscribtion list, and we think a plausible excuse can be manufactured. We ask the indulgence of our patrons a little while longer.

In this connection allow us to remark that in all probability some of the disappointments of our patrons will be blamed upon us that do not at all originate from any fault or mistake in this office. Some have already complained of the non-appearance of their papers, when we know that they have been sent. Postmasters sometimes commit blunders; patrons fail to pre-pay their postage—in which case the conscientious postmaster dare not deliver their mail matter; or they fail in making the proper demand, and giving the necessary information. When you have subscribed for a paper, at once pay the postage and take a receipt, and when you expect it ought to come, ask for the CHRISTIAN FAMILY COMPANION, for which you have paid postage.

Reasons for Separation.

Elder Michael Forney, under date of Hudson, Illinois, 15th instant, says: "In looking over the Companion I notice that the types are hard to part, and I will say, you would not have been required to distribute my name, had not the messenger of Death separated my wife and me.—That has broken up my home, and now I am out on a mission, and so cannot subscribe."

Yes, so it is with our unions formed in this transitory world. Even if we could manage to hold a subscriber for life, and have his name cast in a solid block of adamant, and his son, and his son's son should perpetuate his subscription, finally all will pass away as though it had not been. Let us therefore endeavor to cultivate those qualities that will endure forever: Peace and love.

Almanacs.

The Brethren's Almanac, for 1872 may still be had. Price 10cts, 75cts, per dozen, and 40cts, for 6. All postpaid.

The Pious Youth.

There are still a few subscribers coming in for the PIOUS YOUTH, and some even with the money. Will all our patrons please take notice that the YOUTH has been discontinued for the present. The December No. for 1871, will, we hope, be forthcoming shortly.

A Few More.

We are still lacking a few names to make the full number with which we closed the last volume, and we can furnish back numbers to all who subscribe within the next month.—After that time it is not likely that back numbers can be had. Now is the time to subscribe.

Hymn Books.

One box of the long looked for Hymn Books has come to hand, and so far as we could do so the orders on our books have been filled. But the German and English have not yet arrived. Below we give a list of those shipped, for the satisfaction of our customers.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

To Sister E. R. Stiffler.

Your missive of a recent date was received with joy and gladness; as it always affords me pleasure to hear from the home of my childhood and loved ones far away. You urge me affectionately to write more for our publications, and wonder why the effusions of my pen are so few and far between." It is not for want of inclination to occupy the talent intrusted to me, neither is it absence of love to the general Brotherhood or to the brethren Editors, who send out weekly the Companion which makes its way to thousands of homes, like an angel of light to comfort the feeble minded and to support the weak.—But circumstances over which I have no controll, frequently cross my way paralyzing my hand and mind, so that writing for publications is out of the question. Cares without, and sorrows within, besides all, the care of churches, which I find is no small matter.

The passage of scripture you ask me to give my views upon, through the Companion, is one on which theologions differ. Romans 14 : 5.—"One man esteemeth one day above another: another esteemeth every day alike; let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind." This is the verse you spoke of being a little difficult in your mind. Those characters that think Paul meant the christian Sabbath, are surely mistaken.

God made the world in six days, and rested on the seventh, but we have no account of that day being kept by the children of men, before the flood. After the Israelites were brought from Egypt, there was a code of laws given them, among which was "remember the seventh day to keep it holy; thou shalt do no servile work therein." But we also notice by referring to the law that the first day of the week was also enjoined upon the people to observe as a holy convocation. Lev. 23 : 5, 7. Thus we see the first and seventh were to be kept for an holy convocation. No work to be done. He that would go out to gather sticks, or that he would fill his pot with manna, was to be stoned to death; but as the law was weak in that it could not make the comers there unto perfect, God sent his son to give the human family "a perfect law of liberty." When he went through the corn field, on the Sabbath, his disciples plucking the ears, he was censured for violating that holy day, but the meek answer was, he was Lord of the Sabbath also. He also "healed the sick on the Sabbath day," but we have no account in all the New Testament where Christ enjoined this law, given by Moses, as to the first and seventh day, to be kept as an holy convocation to the Lord; but the Jews kept the Sabbath as given by Moses, after that Christ had been slain and risen again from the dead; but the disciples coming together at various times and places upon the first day of the week, this day seems to have been set apart by the Christians, at that early age, and it should be a day strictly kept in meditation and prayer, doing no matter of servile work therein. This was the day kept by the first Christians as the Lord's day. "Brown" says: "It is called the Lord's day, and thence the primitive christians met for public worship, and made their collections for the poor." "Still it must not be forgotten that the Jewish Christians payed respect to the ancient Sabbath, for Paul very often took opportunity of preaching on it to the Jews in their assemblies," as we notice in acts 13th chapter. The first day was observed by christians, as their Sabbath, for almost 1600 years, without being called in question. Browns Bible dictionary, word Sabbath."

And this seems to be the voice of all historians on the subject; and as there was no dispute in Paul's day about the sabbath, I am inclined to think that Paul had no allusion to the sabbath; for he does not name any day. There were disputes gotten up; some of the Jewish Brethren thought that the gentile converts "must be circumcised and keep the law of Moses," for which Paul and Barnabas had no small dissention and desputation with them, (Acts 15) It is evident that the days referred to by Paul, were the observance of those festival days, as taught in the law, which some of the Jewish Brethren taught ought to be observed And as this involves no doctrine, Paul says: "Let every one be fully persuaded in his own mind." Whether they observe it or not, it was nothing to Paul. Just like I would say to my brother, that would be conscientious about keeping Christmas to the Lord I certainly would find no fault with him. Not to regard the first day would be going contrary to the practice of the disciples and Apostles

By order of the Church,

WILLIAM LEATHERMAN.

Brother Henry :—Some of our brethren from Miami county, not far from where our elder Peter Nead resides, are with us, conducting a protracted meeting for the edification of the church and conversion of sinners. We feel very much disappointed because we cannot be with them this evening. However we have some reasons to rejoice. A few have got tired of sin and are going to be baptized "for the remission of sins." We don't wonder at them at all; but we do wonder at those who resist, and with Felix of old say "go for this time and when I have a convenient time I will call for thee." Why? Because to reject the counsels of the blessed Jesus, is rejecting a home in Heaven at the price of His own precious blood.

Being so busily engaged in teaching, I could not attend as much as I wished, but they have my well wishes. I was with them last evening and thought of handing brother A. Detrick, the following text: "Lord why cannot I follow Thee now." John 13: 37. But fearing that some might not view the act as consistent, I declined; but I must confess, the words struck our mind very forcibly, and perhaps some minister who reads those lines and whose heart bleeds for the unhappy sinner, will give our text its due consideration. As yet, it is unknown what the precise fruits of our brethren's labor will be; but we are truly glad to see them manifest so much zeal. We thought those brethren had become opposed to protracted effort, they being vindicators of the old order; but now I see that they as well as the young writer see the importance and propriety of protracted meetings. Yes the writer wishes to see a revival, not only among us here in Ohio; but he hopes to hear of hundreds coming forth from the beggardly elements of a vain world, and accept the gospel of Christ. I wish to see the day come when all will have access to the gospel as preached by the brethren. Christ has said: "go ye into all the world." to preach his mighty power to save. And shall his command be in vain. Great God, thou who hast created man in thine own immage so divinely fair, and hast given him such a comprehensive mind that he can both behold thee in thy dazzling throne, in thy word and thy tender pity, will not thou reveal through thy holy spirit to those whom thou hast chozen for thy ministers, the great necessity of promulgating thy everlasting, thy saving gospel to the children of men, in the four quarters of a sin-polluted, a deceived world, that all may know and realize the blessings of undefiled religion. F. M. Snyder.

Dear Brother :—The branch now, in Fayette county, has been of late much encouraged with frequent additions. Through the tender mercies of our Lord, we have been spared to enjoy life, health and strength, temporally, for which we try to be very thankful to God our Savior. The faith of the Brotherhood is growing stronger. The Lord has deemed it good to send our brother-beloved, J. P. Hetrick, of Oakland, Armstrong county, Pa., to labor with us in the cause of our risen Savior. He spake wholesome words, and the community took knowledge of him that he had been with Jesus;" the order and attention were very good. After his second interview they began to come. On the 3rd of December 17 souls were added by immersion. On New Year's day 10 more entered the deep; and the day following 2 more, leaving 4 others who were not prepared for baptism. Of course this is not all that have become sober and reflecting. There are still others pressing into the kingdom; and we pray the Lord to send forth his good Spirit, that the word may be spoken in all truth and power, knowing that this work is the "Lord's doing, and it is marvelous in our eyes." May the annointed one see himself in those dear followers of his, and keep them in his loving embrace, that they fall not away to renew the former sins; neither should we, who are farther advanced in the divine life, set them examples of unchristian fellowship.—These are evil days—very evil, continually; and we watch and pray so that temptations of evil overcome us not. May the Lord aid our beloved brother's labors to do good wherever he may go. God be thanked for his zeal, and may all our beloved colabors take courage to "go and preach the gospel to every creature." May the churches be alive to their duty, and the spirit of the living God defend his own cause; and may the hearts of the true believers be active in reading the Scriptue, and resigned to carry the cross daily in obedience to our Savior's command. Here is the place, I think, brethren, we all fail. Therefore let us hear Paul what he says to his beloved brethren: "Give no offence to the Jew, neither the Gentile, nor to the church of God. I have not written this to boast but rather to comfort the churches; knowing very well that there is danger on every hand– even this, that "many are called but few are chosen;" but even the "called according to his purpose" we beg leave to abide.

Sunday evening, January 7th, 4 more were baptized, 33 in all in the week, 60 for the year. May God's blessing still follow. May faith be pure and unmixed, and love be unfeigned till death comes, is our prayer.

Brother Henry :—Not long since as I was reading the C. F. C., Vol 5, No. 5, Page 75, third column I found the cheering words, "When such as are in straitened circumstances, desire the paper but cannot pay for it immediately, we gladly take their promise of payment during the year." Now dear brother I felt rejoiced when I read those lines for I have so long desired to have the dear Companion and Phrenological Journal. Then began a course of study, to find where the needful, would come from. I soon came to the conclusion to deny myself of coffee, and tea, and thus save enough to pay for the papers. I then spoke to husband about the matter; he readily agreed to my proposal. We have now tried the plan a week and find no inconvenience arising from it. If you will send the papers, I will see that you get the pay if I live. Perhaps you wonder why I am writing for the paper while husbandsays nothing. My husband is a paralytic. Has been afflicted for something more than three years He can not read nor write, so any one can get the understanding of it, although a good scholar prior to his sickness;) but I can read to him and thus cheer and comfort him

I love the Companion and the precious truths it teaches. There are but few members in this neighborhood, and we only have meeting every eight weeks and don't often get away to distant places to hear the word expounded and we dearly love to hear what the Companion says.—I have read them all the year by borrowing of brother Marr's but he thinks he will take the Visitor next year as he likes to support both C. and V., but does'nt feel able to take both at once, and has not time to read so much.

Now dear brother we bid you God speed in your labor of love and pray that you may not only receive plenty of this world's goods but that you may win precious souls to Christ that they may be as stars in your crown of rejoicing forever.

Yours in bonds of Love,
GEORGE & DELIA E. BOLIN.

Report of Expenses, &c., of the Annual Meeting of 1871.

Wheat 100 Bushels.
Oats, 200 do.
Beef, 4706 pounds.
Butter, 404 do.
Coffee, 100 do.
Sugar, 170 do.
Rice, 60 do.
Tea, 5 do.
Pepper, 2 do.
Apple butter, 84 gallons.
Milk, 40 do.
Salt, 1 sack.
Nails, 1 Keg.
Paper, 60 sheets.

The above figures show the amounts actually consumed. The aggregate cost being $1519.00.

JOHN E. MERKY, Treasurer.
BENJ. BALSBAUGH, Clerk.
ELIAS P. ZIGLER, Asst. Clerk.

At the request of some brethren immediately concerned I will add a few remarks:

Included in the above amounts are the losses sustained in buying and selling boards for the tent, which was covered with boards, and large enough to hold about 400 persons at one sitting; and on some of the foregoing articles, of which an undue proportion was laid in, which had to be sold afterwards at a loss, such as butter, wheat, &c.

We notice that Eld. D P. Saylor has cast some very unpleasant reflections on the brethren composing the committee of arrangements, and that most severely, with regard to the provision made for the standing committee. Well, their quarters may not have been all that might be desired, yet they were selected by an elder from a distance, who has frequently been on standing committees, and his advice acted upon, and carried out.

ys to the distance from railroad, the brethren say they took the example in Aughwick, 1855; Washington county, Maryland, 1857; Antietam, 1866; and other places, when the distance, or the hills were more, and greater, and no means of conveyance provided, at least not sufficient, which left the brethren but one alternative—walk it; while in 1871, they had two, walk or pay.

This was written by request, as I was not on the committee of arrangements, and consequently not hurt by the said reflections. More than that I thought they were unnecessarily severe. S. R. ZUG.

Home Again.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—Through the tender mercies of God I am enabled to announce our arrival at home, or where we call home, on the second instant. My last regular report was dated at Goshen, December 2nd. I attended five more public, and three church meetings in said county.

In the Elklick branch, Somerset county, Pa., I attended five meetings. Thence to the Berlin branch, where we attended five appointments.—From there were conveyed by Elder Jacob Blough across the Alleghany mountain, to the Dunnings Creek branch, Bedford county, where we attended four more appointments, and thus the labors of a long, tedious and somewhat perplexing mission closed.

On the 2nd, of January, brother C. S. Holsinger conveyed us home; that we once more met our family connections, after an absence of six months and a half. What the result of the mission will prove to be, time must declare. At present things look rather gloomy, but I still hope the Lord of the harvest will dispel the gloom, and cause sunshine to cheer and revive the drooping plant. Some have demanded a full report, which I do not feel justified to give through the press; but am prepared to report to the authority that sent me. My address now is Clover Creek, Blair county, Pa.

DANIEL M. HOLSINGER.
January, 11th, 1872.

Brother Henry:—Inasmuch as I have had the pleasure of reading church news from various parts of the brotherhood, which I do love to read very much, and have been a reader of the C. F. C. for several years, I thought a little news from the Union City District, near Union City, Indiana, might be encouraging. Our church is progressing slowly.—We add from ten to fifteen some years. Last year we received ten by baptism, and seven by letter; and we are glad to see the ark of the Lord moving, and sinners coming to the Savior, willing to learn of him, and thus prepare themselves for the eternal world.

In conclusion I would say to Ministering brethren, whether traveling East or West, when coming by way of Union City, Indiana, to stop, if they can, and help us a little by way of preaching, as we have a good house for that purpose, one and one half miles from Union City. May the Lord bless the labor's of the ministering brethren, or servants.

T. B. HENRICK.
Union City, Ind.

Dear Brother:—I am an advocate of our periodicals. I think there can be much good done with them. But keep love and charity in view at all times, and the good cause. I have thought you might enlarge your circulation a great deal by sending the Companion to the north, and south, to different post-offices, and get them to distribute them, and act as agents. I have thought that there might be a great deal of good done in this way, and souls might be brought to the true light, and might cry, and say, "Sirs, what must I do to saved." Was there ever any sent to Maine, to see after those inquiring souls? It is great to be feared that we are not discharging our duty according to the greatly commission of our Savior. But we all think we have enough to do. But the Lord's ways are not our ways. If we would study his ways more, we would be more ready to go into the work. We are still increasing slowly in our arm of the church. I think the feeling towards the brethren is growing more favorable. The people are reading more in our country. Yours in brotherly love.

SAM'L. H. MYERS.
New Market, Va.

Brother Holsinger:—By reading over my report I noticed several mistakes. Please correct. In the 2nd column 5th line from bottom, i ought to read, "was handled," instead of handed. In the 4th column and 12th line from the top, read send instead of set. Same column 15th line from the top, read condemned instead of "concerned." Same column, 21st and 22nd line, read, how could I have felt to bless them, instead "For I would have felt to bless them." Same column, 28th line, from bottom, omit the word "the."

Many prayers were offered to God the preserver of life, by our young brother and bereaved parents, and surviving sisters, that she might recover from her affliction ; the most skilled physician was called to their assistance to keep the king of terrors from accomplishing the work of death, but all of no avail.

On the 5th we received a message to come and assist the ministering brethren, at Pipe Creek in the funeral services. We arrived at the house of brother Yon at the appointed time, where our young brother, and his companion had lived since their marriage which was not quite one year ago. The first one that met us at the door was the weeping mother, with tears rolling down her cheeks, exclaimed "O how different now to when you were here before. From what we learned from her father she had not accepted the means that God has devised to constitute her a member of the church, but she was a very obedient daughter, seldom going into the way of sinners, and taking delight in reading the word of God. May all our young friends who read this notice, prepare for death, and not put off for to-morrow what can and ought to be done to-day.

"HOW TO GO WEST."

Forty years ago, Illinois was as far West as most people wished to go, and journeys were made in the legendary "Prairie Schooner," but in these days of Progress and Improvement, the word West has come to mean Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, California, and the Territories, and the Traveler reaches almost any point therein by a splendid Line of Railroad.

This Line of Railroad is the Burlington Route, which starts from Chicago over the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R., from Indianapolis, over the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western Short Line, and from Logansport, over the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw R. R., and running through BURLINGTON, reaches Omaha, Lincolen, Nebraska City, St. Joseph, Atchison, Leavenworth and Kansas City, connecting with the Union Pacific, Kansas Pacific and other Railroads running from those cities.

Always go "By way of Burlington" and you will be sure to be right.

The Burlington Route has admirably answered the question, "How to go West?" by the publication of a truthful and interesting document, filled with facts in regard to Time, Connections, Accommodations, rates of Fare, and other interesting items and illustrated by a large map, truthfully showing the whole West, which they distribute free of charge. Copies, and additional information can be obtained by addressing, General Passenger Agent, B. & M. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

The Finkle & Lyon Sewing Machine, with Drop Feed, new Take-up, new Hemmer, &c., is now offered to agents on more liberal terms. Also, Second-hand Machines taken in exchange, or the new improvements applied.

Every Machine is warranted FIRST CLASS, and if the purchaser does not so regard it after a fair trial, he can return it, and money refunded.

of Berlin, Pa., has caused a great excitement in the County by bringing into our midst the very popular and far-famed WEED (F. F.) SEWING MACHINE. All who have tried it give this as their decision: "The Weed runs lighter, has less gearing, is more easily managed, and takes less time to understand it than any other machine now in the county."

The WEED has no cog-wheels, no spring or compound levers, and is sold at prices ranging from $60 to $150. Each machine is furnished with a tucker, quilter, baster 3 hemmers, feller, corder, ruffler, fringer, braider, and a self-sewer, gratis.

THE

Christian Family Companion.

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

The Gospel Market.

Why stand you here idle, my friends all the day,
Your moments are fleeting they'll soon pass away;
The market is open, the stores you may see,
Then come take in welcome, all things here are free;
Here are all things provided for sinners undone,
And your'e all invited and welcome to come.

Here's mercy and pardon, here's love and free grace,
Here's strong consolation, here's great joy and peace;
Here's hope for the hopeless, the weary find rest;
Here are all things in plenty for the poor and distressed.
And the market is open, the stores you may see,
Then come take in welcome, all things here are free.

Here's clothes for the naked, here all may be clad;
Here's bread for the hungry, your souls may be fed;
Here's Manna from heaven, this food is divine,
Fat things full of marrow, and wine well refined.
And the market is open, the stores you may see;
Then come take in welcome, all things here are free.

Here's oil, milk and honey, a plenty in store,
Sufficient for thousands, yea, millions and more;
Here's balm for the wounded, here's strength for the weak,
Here cordials divine are prepared for the sick.
And the market is open, the stores you may see.
Then come take in welcome, all things here are free.

Here's med'cine for healing, all given out free,
Here's eye-salve for eyes for to make them to see;
Here cripples are healed, the lame made to walk,
The deaf made to hear and the dumb made to talk.
And the market is open, the stores you may see.
Then come take in welcome, all things here are free

Here the lepers are cleansed, and purged from their sores,
Here sinners are pardoned, and souls are made pure;
Here bond-slaves are ransom'd and free'd from their chains,
Here all that are willing are eas'd of their pains.
And the market is open, the stores you may see.
Then come take in welcome, all things here are free.

Here's armor and weapons for soldiers to wield,
A breastplate, a hemlet, a sword and a shield,
The poor receive riches, a crown for the head,
Eternal salvation and life from the dead.
And the market is open, the stores you may see.
The come take in welcome, all things here are free.

Then come all ye needy, ye poor and distressed.
Come and receive freely and be ever blessed;
O come without money to Jesus and buy:
Then love him and praise him forever on high.
Here are all things provided for sinners undone,
And you're all invited and welcome to come.

For the Companion.

To a Family in "the Valley of Achor."

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH

I am feeble and attenuated, and writing is a task, but I feel as if the Lord wanted me to "stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance." I knew a man, many years ago, who, in a state of intense excitement, was anxiously seeking an article which he thought he had lost. He was told that the object which he was in such hot pursuit of, was in his hand. So we sometimes need be reminded, when the enemies of God "breathe out threatenings and slaughter," and "gnash" on the righteous "with their teeth," that "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble," and that "the Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon Him in truth." "Lo, I am with you always."

I rejoice that you are not ashamed of "the reproach of the cross," "contending earnestly for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints," despite "the blasphemy of them which say they are christians, and are not, but are the synagouge of Satan." Every object in nature, every event in providence, every circumstance in life, which Christ employed as vehicles of His wisdom and love in unfolding the scheme of redemption, the arch-fiend can wield as instruments of his malice in harrassing saints and luring sinners into endless perdition. The very Tree which God specified as the test of man's fealty, and the turning-point of his destiny, is the easy means of his Satanic Princeship to effect his ruin. The crowing of the cock can be the signal for some diabolic act, as well as the call of God to repentance. "The messenger of Satan" is not always "a thorn in the flesh," but may come in the form of objects dear as our own life. It "a man's foes shall be they of his own household," no marvel if our man-converted, man-worshipping neighbors turn into swords and spears.

Sectarianism is one of the ugliest, most relentless devils that confronts the church of God. Just as certainly as the brethren adhere to the principles of the Gospel, presenting the truth in its naked severity, holding the torch of Heaven into the face of the "mother of harlots," we will be "defamed and made as the filth of the world, and the offscouring of all things." Antichrist is full of heads and horns—ingenious in devices and unscrupulous in their execution—and "full of names of blasphemy." Every head, every horn, and every name are leagued together for the discomfiture of the "little flock," and thirst for the blood of those who know but "one Lord, one faith, one baptism." Whosoever "believes man rather than God," is hitched to the devil's car, holds loose the reins of pride and prejudice, drives with the fury of Jehu and the ruthlessness of an Arab, and paves his way with those "whose names are written in the Lamb's Book of Life."

But God can draw a camel through the eye of a needle. The "faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation," includes those who "persecute the church of God, and waste it." Saul, the "chief of sinners," and the most malignant persecutor, may become Paul the chief apostle. Out of the foulest pool the sun can raise a dew drop as "clear as crystal." Out of the foulest clay the Great Potter can mould a "vessel unto honor" for the palace of His glory. The murderers of the Lord of Life and Glory were to have the first offers of reconciliation. "Beginning at Jerusalem." When your enemies spit their venom at you, return the affront with "milk and honey." When they spill their gall, show them the blood that embodies the patience and long-suffering of God, and demonstrates the power and glory of the cross in returning good for evil. Kindness kills more promptly than poison. Be just as bold as a good conscience and a righteous cause will allow; and as humble and self-sacrificing and pacific as only a follower of the crucified can be. If you can drive a splinter of the wood of Calvary into the quick of some persecutor, the whole cross may follow, enmity will be slain, and Christ will "see of the travail of His soul and be satisfied." Be not disheartened. To Zion is published the "good tidings," "thy God reigneth." "Fear not, thou worm Jacob * * * * I will help thee, saith the Lord, and thy Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel." Eighteen centuries have not made Christ decrepit. He is still the "Wonderful," "the Mighty God," the depositary of "all power in Heaven and in earth." In Him is still garnered "all the fullness of the Godhead bodily." His heart is still warm with sympathy for those who are bone of His bone, flesh of His flesh, and spirit of His spirit. His arm is sinewed with omnipotence for the preservation of His elect. "Fear not," is His message of comfort. "I will help thee," is His gracious promise. "Saith the Lord, thy Redeemer," is the guarantee that "all his promises are yea and amen." "BELIEVEST THOU THIS"? When your burdens are heaviest, and your trials most harrassing, and you are greeted with scowls and hisses and taunts when you go abroad, put Christ to the proof, and see whether He is not as good as His word. "Said I not unto thee, that if thou wouldest believe, thou shouldest see the glory of God." Go forward, and "roll away the stone" at His bidding, no matter how much corruption may be uncovered by your fidelity. "Take hold of his strength," and hesitate not to undertake great things for Him when you have only the means of doing a little. Hand the loaves and fishes to Him, and He will return them with a benediction that will work wonders. Worms may become the executors of the Divine behest, sparrows the expositors of the Divine goodness, ravens the almoners of the Divine beneficence, and pitchers, lamps, and trumpets, the media of Divine power, and the instruments of deliverance to the Israel of God. Jonah 4 : 7. Matth. 10 : 29. 1 Kings 17 : 6. Judges 7 : 20. Not more certainly will a wheel turn when placed under a waterfall, than the soul will become "mighty to the pulling down of strongholds" when placed in "the way of righteousness." Be in the Divine order, and you will be in the Divine movement. You will be in the all-comprehending economy as "a wheel in the middle of a wheel." Ezekiel 1 : 16. "Whithersoever the spirit is to go, you go." God will be in your impulses, in your aspirations, your wrestlings, self-sacrifices, self-searchings, and holy endeavors, by His spirit, as He is in the sunrise by the laws of nature. Stand in the princely rank of God's begotten, exhibit the true nobility of an heir of the Most High, pluck out your eyes and cut off your hands and feet to maintain your position, and you will be "more than conquerous through Him that loved you. Study "the good word of God" diligently, and give yourselves anew to Jesus every day. Be "in nothing terrified by your adversaries." To them your serenity and steadfastness may be the "evident token of perdition," but to "you of salvation and of God." NEVER STRIKE YOUR COLORS. Lift up "Christ Jesus, and Him crucified," though earth and hell combine to intimidate you. Let the dear Name Emmanuel glow in letters of living light on your foreheads, that angels and men my know that you "are sealed unto the day of redemption." Keep your altar ever smoking, your lamps ever trimmed and burning, and await with patience the coming of the Bridegroom, and the glorious day of your coronation.

Treatment of the Bible.

Infidels strike their penknife through this Book, because they say that it is cruel and indecent. There are things in Ezekiel and Solomon's Songs that they don't want it read in their families. Ah ! if the Bible is so pernicious, just show me somebody that has been spoiled by it. A thousand dollars reward if you will show me a man who has been made cruel or obscene or reckless by the Bible ! While you are trying in vain to pick out such an one, I will show you five hundred men in this audience who have by it been tamed out of rudeness and lifted up out of sin, and enriched with innumerable virtues.—De Witt Talmadge.

The Bible should be endeared to us not only because of its inspired contents, which have been the support and comfort of so many on their way to eternity, and of ourselves also, but because it has passed through and triumphantly emerged from so many conflicts with enemies of the truth and righteousness. How numerous, fierce, determined, and mighty have been the efforts made to destroy it !

When we sit down in the quiet of our homes to read the dear old Bible, we little think of the struggle that was made to bring treasure to light, and break the clasp and remove the seals imposed by priests and Popes. Precious treasure ! It is the story of shed blood ; its history is written in blood.

More things are wrought by prayer
Than this world dreams of. Wherefore let thy voice
Rise like a fountain for me night and day.
For what are men better than sheep or goats
That nourish a blind life within the brain,
If knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer
Both for themselves and those who call them friend ?
For so the whole round earth is every way
Bound by gold chains about the feet of God.—Tennyson

No Home.

There are thousands who know nothing of the blessed influences of a comfortable home, merely from the want of thrift or from dissipated habits. Youth was spent in frivolous amusements and demoralizing associations, leaving them at middle age, when the intellectual and the physical man should be in its greatest vigor enervated and without one laudable ambition. Friends long since lost, confidence gone, and nothing to look to in old age but a mere toleration in the community where they should be ornaments. No home to fly to when wearied with the struggles incident to life ; no wife to cheer them in their despondency ; no children to amuse them, and no virtuous household to give zest to the joys of life. All is blank and there is no hope or succor except that which is given out by the hands of public or private charities. When the family of an industrious and sober citizen gathers around the cheerful fire of a wintry day, the homeless man is seeking shelter in the station-house, or begging for a night's rest in the outbuilding of one who started in life at the same time, with no greater advantages ; but honesty and industry built up that house, while dissipation destroyed the other.—The Golden Censer.

NOT ALL ALIKE.—We shall find it very useful to ourselves to remember this lesson. We must not expect all believers in Christ to be exactly alike one another. We must not set down others as having no grace because their experience does not entirely tally with our own. The sheep in the Lord's flock have severally their own peculiarities. The trees in the Lord's garden are not all precisely alike. All true servants of God agree in the principal things of religion. All feel their sins, and all trust in Christ. But in minor matters they often differ widely. Let not one despise another on this account. There will be Marthas and there will be Marys in the church till the Lord comes.—Ryle.

For the COMPANION.

Great is the Mystery of Godliness

"God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory." 1 Tim. 3:16.

The unity existing between God and Jesus Christ is in such close connection that it is hard to distinguish or to separate them. That Jesus Christ is the unoriginated and eternal God cannot be proven by the scriptures. Christ is termed the Son of God. Son supposes Father, and generation and time—antecedant. Consequently the man Christ had a beginning. The term son was not applied to the divinity of Jesus Christ, but to his humanity. If we make the distinction between the divine and human nature of Christ, there will not be much difficulty in the way.

Jesus never desired to impose upon the Jews that his fleshly body was the great God. There was the mystery. The Jews did not understand him. But in him that is in the human body of Jesus dwelleth the fullness of the Godhead bodily. Col. 2: 9. And if the body of Jesus Christ is to be understood as God, where was our God while Jesus was in the tomb? Had the divine nature of Jesus remained with him, all the powers of hell could not have put him to death. Hear humanity cry out upon the cross: "My God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Here you discover that God, the divine essence, had fled, and left Jesus in the hands of his murderers; but the third day that divine power returned, and Christ rose triumphant out of the tomb. The glorified body of Christ is represented as sitting at the right hand of the Father, making intercession for the saints. But, says Jesus, "I and my Father are one;" one in essence, one in the great plan of redemption.—"God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself." Here again is the distinction between the Father and the Son, that is the glorified body of Jesus. The term Son cannot be applied to the divine nature of Jesus Christ with any propriety whatever. That Jesus Christ was the eternal, unoriginated God is absurd. He was, as regards his birth, conceived by the Holy Ghost and born of the Virgin Mary. The person of Christ was not the eternal God. The scriptures inform us that Christ shall reign until he has put all his enemies under his feet and the last enemy shall be death; then he shall deliver up the kingdom to the Father, that God may be all in all. Then the Son will be subject to the Father.—Here again you see the distinction between the Father and the Son.

ELDER HENRY KOONTZ.

For the COMPANION.

Universalism not of God.

There are men in the world, who have attached themselves to a society, or fraternity, known by the name of Universalists; who claim that they believe all mankind will be made happy in heaven, and made to bask in the sunshine of eternal felicity with the power of an endless life; though they repent not. And to the great grief, and sorrow of the unworthy writer, he has near relatives who are strong advocates of the doctrine.

There was sometime since a minister of the fraternity in our vicinity, and tried to preach a few sermons as they call it; and, we fear, has sown some seed which may terminate in the utter destruction of some poor soul, should no remedy be applied. This fact causes serious thoughts to roll across our mind, and upon these considerations we feel like penning a few thoughts upon an investigation of the subject, though with some delicacy, for we do not like to differ with any one; but we feel that we should vindicate the truth upon all occasions and at all times.

Universalism has all the marks of being the doctrine of Satan, which attended the temptation in Eden. Its purpose, and its result are the same.

Universalism answers very well to the false teaching, which in the days of the Apostles and prophets seduced men from the path of truth to the way of death. In no way can Universalism be so well described as by reading carefully, with the scrutinizing principles of obedience, the prophets and all the Epistolary writings of the apostles. It fulfils the prediction of the apostles in respect to the errors of the latter times.—For such are "false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ. And no marvel; for Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light. Universalism makes the Bible an unmeaning, a deceptive book.

If Universalism be true, the Bible has misled the great mass of mankind; the most devoted students, for over eighteen hundred years; and even Martyrs at the stake have died in defence of sentiments which were false.

Universalism is disproved by the Bible, that death is the penalty of sin, which men may escape by repentance. The penalty is not natural death; from that no man can escape, though he does repent. The penalty is not spirtual death; for that is the crime. It is eternal death. When God said to our first parents: "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die," the term death, does not mean annihilated or extinct: but simply to be separated, for the righteous die a natural death as well as the wicked; hence the spirit is separated from the body, for a short season. But the spirit of the righteous never dies, because it is never separated for God dwells in the righteous, while tabernacling in the flesh. We are taught by the apostle that if we have not the spirit of Christ we are none of his; hence it is that if we have not his Spirit here in the flesh, there is a separation to take place, beyond the tomb, when it shall be said by the great Judge of the quick and dead: "Depart from me, for I never knew you."

Universalism is computed by the large class of texts which run through the entire Bible, and which compare this life to a race, or warfare; which presents conditions to salvation which leaves the event doubtful, and the danger certain.

Universalism is contrary to the repeated declarations of Christ, in respect to the certainty, nature, and endless duration of future punishment, as found in the first sermon, and in the entire record of his teachings.

We will first notice briefly, some of the Savior's warnings in his sermon referred to, and his teachings generally.

In that sermon he describes the class of men who are blessed and accepted of God, and during his teaching here on earth, he adverts to the broad way through which the thronging multitudes go down to death, and points out the narrow way, in which few travelers are found.

He mentions sins, the commission of which exposes men to hell fire; a fire which shall never be quenched.—He urges men to lay up for themselves treasures in heaven, for so only can they have inheritance there. He very plainly teaches that all who heed not his words, will, in the last day, resemble the foolish man who built his house upon the sand, and was ruined in the hour of tempest, and storm. He further tells his followers not to fear them who can kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him who can destroy both soul and body in hell.—"But I will forewarn you whom ye shall fear. Fear him which after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell; yea I say unto you, fear him."

We will now notice for a few moments, the rich man, and Lazarus. Luke 16: 19–23, "There was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day. And there was a certain begger named Lazarus, which was laid at his gate, full of sores.—And desiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table: moreover the dogs came and licked his sores. And it came to pass that the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom: the rich man also died, and was buried. And in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torment, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom." Nowhere in the holy Scriptures is this circumstance, recited by the Savior, called a parable. Neither was it explained, as was the parable of the wheat and tares, in the 13th chaptar of Matthew. If there is no punishment beyond death, why did the Savior present the circumstance, of the rich man and Lazarus, to the children of men, as a warning for them, to escape a something after death? And not only so, but he presents it as literally so. He says: "they both died, but Lazarus was comforted, and the rich man tormented. In the whole recital, is there one word which intimates that it was an allegory? Or a word to justify the interpretation of universalists? Does inspiration in any place come to their aid? Not one passage that I can see. will justify this doctrine, instituted by Satan, and practiced by his captives.

I think no man can rise from an honest investigation of the subject without the firmest convictions that universalism is net of God. It does violence to the plainest teachings of scripture, and makes the inspired penman either incompetant or dishonest. It demands the sacrifice of the faith of the church; the piety and learning of eighteen centuries; it invites you to mock at sin, to laugh at the judgement, and scoff at threatened danger.

It is not our purpose to slip around, and select out a few passages to try to condemn the doctrine, but we maintain, that the Savior, in all his teachings, does positively condemn it.

Suffer us here to give another quotation of the Savior, as recorded by Matthew 7: 21: "Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Here we have positive language, dropped from the lips of him, who is able to kill, and to make alive, that all men should not enter there—only "they who do the will of his Father which is in heaven.

Come friendly universalist, take council from him who descended from heaven with his Father's will, and do that will for if we do not his will, we can never enter the kingdom. The language is plain, and explicit, and his promise sure. He came down from heaven to set up his kingdom, to establish his church; and left the solemn words, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned."

Providing for Children.

"I do not mean that my children shall ever have to work as I have done," says some prosperous father or mother, while planning for the ease and comfort of those they love

But do you know who it is that has appointed that man should work? Do you know that it is not the result of chance or of circumstances, but the special and direct appointment of Almighty God? Now, what will you do about it! He has said, "In the sweat of thy face, shalt thou eat thy bread," and six thousand years of twisting, and turning, and contriving, and inventing, have not been able to change the decree or evade its execution. Thousands of men have said, "I will not work for a living," and they have worked ten times as hard to get it without work as they would have worked to earn it, and finally have come to the penitentiary with its toil and poverty, and had hard work no pay, and poor keeping, as their reward.

It is hard to change the course of nature or the decree of God. God says man shall work. How are you going to help yourself? And if you cannot help yourself, how will you help your children?

You may work yourself to death to leave them rich, and they may be glad when you are dead and out of the way. But do riches abide? Do rich people have no care and labor? Do not lazy folks take most pains, and idlers feel the most weariness? Pleasures are laborious. The nobleman who follows the chase all day, works harder than the ditcher under the hedge. The gay lady wearies herself more in the ball-room than the servant does at the wash-tub. So, also, where food is rich, appetite is often poor, and where food is plain, hunger always makes it taste sweet. A hard bed gives soft sleep to a laboring man, whether he eat little or much; but no couch of down ever affords sweet repose to a person jaded by indulgence in lust, luxury, and vice.

It is true you may spare your children some of the hardships you have endured. Perhaps you might have escaped them yourself if you had not wanted more than you needed, and exhausted your strength to feed your covetous desires. But you will benefit your children, not by gratifying every desire, but by teaching them temperance, frugality, and self-restraint: not by freeing them from the necessity of laboring, but by training them in such habits of diligence that labor will be to them a joy and not a hardship, a pleasure rather than an irksome toil

The surest way to degrade your children to the depths of poverty, shame, and crime, is to bring them up in idleness, and teach them that they are too good to do hard, dirty work. Thus trained, adversity will find them without trades, without thrift, economy or skill, and in the scramble for daily food, they will be crowded to the wall by their hardier compeers, who have been trained to fight their own battles and earn thier own bread.

God loves man. He cursed the ground for his sake: sowed it with thorns and thistles: and thus gave man something to do to keep him out of mischief. Do not rebel against God. The allotment of work is the best thing He could do for man under existing circumstances. Idleness breeds mischief, crime, feebleness, poverty, sickness, death. Do not covet such heritage for your children. God's only begotten and well-beloved Son was a carpenter, a humble working man. I asked no better lot for my children. Their ancestors, thank God, have been working men, and none of their descendants are too good to earn their bread. The Savior worked with his hands; let our children follow his example and be blessed.

Death of Dear Friends.

Death has again visited the land, and has called one of its inmates away; one that was near to us, and very dear to her friends; but though she has left a husband to mourn her loss, and four dear little children to miss their mother's care; though her departure will be mourned by many; yet their loss is her gain. She has gone to meet her sainted Mother in a world of glory, to sing praise to the Lamb of God. Cruel Death. Who of the readers of the Companion have not had death visit their dwellings, to take in its cold embrace some of its inmates. Who has not seen the grave hide from view some beloved object? Some one that has been near and dear to them. I have stood by the grave side of a dear brother, who was called from time to eternity in a moment's time, without a last good-bye, without a parting word!

Who could withhold to say when the cold clods, which sound so dreadful to the mourner's ear, fell on the coffin which held his dear body fast; Cruel, Cruel Death! Go to the palace, Death enters unceremoniously there, and with rude hands drags some of its wealthy inmates to the grave. Go to the humble cottage, Death enters there, and tears asunder the dearest of our sympathies. Go to the cities, every year breaks up its families, and we see the society of earlier days fast passing away. But what though afflictions repeated and overwhelming lie along our path.—Is it not the path marked out for us by the wisdom that cannot err? It is a belief of mine that while traveling through the scenes of time afflictions are the means which our Heavenly Father uses to recover us from the influences of sin; that our sufferings in this world are just, and they are designed for our good, to promote our usefulness here, and our happiness hereafter.

Often do we go into a house and see a vacant chair. Some familiar face in that family group is missed; some smiling face is gone.

I once knew a little girl who was very dear to me. When I would go to her house she was the first one to meet me; always with a smiling countenance and a hearty welcome. Often did she fold her dear arms around my neck and tell me she loved me. I was absent a long time, and when I returned again other dear little children welcomed me; but ah! one face was not there; one chair was vacant. And when the little voices joined in singing, one voice was not there, one voice was hushed. Death had been there and had taken one of their tender branches. Mattie had fled; she never could welcome me again in this world; but she has joined the bright angelic band. There, with my darling little sister, a bud which blossomed on earth to bloom in heaven, she can join the sweet choiristers in Heaven's garden, and suffer no more the pains of sickness. Thank God that the hope is given us to meet them again.

Few indeed, who have not been called by the inscrutable Providence of God to part with dear friends. But if they have left evidence behind that they loved Jesus, consider for a moment the happy change which they have experienced, and you will realize their gain. When a weeping mother asks in her agony, "where is my child?" nature only answers deback the question, with a more spairing emphasis. But turn to the word of God, Revelation replies: "it is well with the child."

I have stood by the bedside of a young man in the bloom of youth, who was dear to his parents and friends. Imagination can not reveal, neither can pen describe his sufferings; but, though his body suffered great pain, his mind was centered in heaven; he had laid up his treasure there, and in a dying hour he could say to his weeping friends: "Meet me in Heaven."

Dear brethren and sisters, may we all meet those dear ones gone before, in that mansion above, where parting will be no more, and where we can praise God forever.

A Grand old Poem.

Who shall judge a man from manners!
Who shall know him by his dress?
Paupers may be fit for princes,
Princes fit for something less.
Crumpled shirt and dirty jacket
May beclothe the golden ore
Of the deepest thoughts and feelings—
Satin vests could do no more.

There are springs of crystal nectar
Ever welling out of stone;
There are purple buds and golden.
Hidden crushed and overgrown;
God, who counts by souls, not dresses,
Loves and prospers you and me,
While he values thrones, the highest,
But as pebbles in the sea.

Man, upraised above his fellows,
Oft forgets his fellows then,
Masters, rulers, lords, remember
That your meanest kinds of men,
Men by labor, men by feeling,
Men by thought, and men by fame,
Claiming equal rights to sunshine,
In a man's ennobling name.

There are foam-embroidered oceans,
There are little weed-clad rills,
There are feeble inch high saplings,
There are cedars on the hills;
God, who counts by souls not stations,
Loves and prospers you and me;
For, to Him, all vain distinctions
Are as pebbles in the sea.

Toiling hands alone are builders
Of a nations wealth or fame:
Tilted laziness is pensioned,
Fed and fattened on the same;
By the sweat of other's foreheads,
Living only to rejoice,
While the poor man's outraged freedom
Vainly lifted up its voice.

Truth and justice are eternal,
Born with loveliness and light;
Secret wrongs shall never prosper,
While there is a sunny right:
God, whose world-heard voice is singing
Boundless love to you and me,
Sinks oppression with its titles,
As the pebbles in the sea,

On Repentance.

"O Israel, return unto the Lord thy God; for thou hast fallen by thine iniquity." Hosea 14; 1st.

When God created man and placed them in a beautiful garden, eastward in Eden, they were holy beings while in this primitive state. Their labors were light, their wants were all supplied. They had privileges in which they were to use their righteous judgment, and which they could enjoy to their mutual satisfaction. They were living in full favor and friendship with their Creator. Their home was one of heavenly felicity, a place where their God met with them to converse together face to face. But their happiness soon ended. They partook of the forbidden fruit and were driven out of their beautiful home.

When the children of Israel were traveling to the promised land, by their disobedience they were forty years on their journey, and but two souls were permitted to enter the promised land. Moses their faithful leader could stand upon the mount and view the promised land, could behold the hallowed and much longed for place, but could not enter.

Through the disobedience of the prophet, he was slain by a lion; a striking proof of God's judgments upon the unfaithful.

Through the disobedience of Ananias and Sapphira, they fell dead and were buried. Thus in every instance all acts of disobedience and neglect of duty, a punishment followed. "If every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward; how shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation." By our iniquity we have fallen; but in the text we have an exhortation of repentance.—"O Israel, return unto the Lord thy God: for thou hast fallen by thine iniquity." If we repent of our sins, the Lord will pardon us. If we approach him in faith, believing, he will grant us our requests. Hark what he says to poor sin-stricken Israel.—They were rejected for their sin, but they repented and the Lord says: "A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you; and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you a heart of flesh, and I will put my spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments and do them, and ye shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers, and ye shall be my people, and I will be your God." Behold the promises of God. Sinner, return to thy God and live. "O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself, but in me is thine help"—The Lord offers his help. When we were in our infancy we knew no sin, but as we reached maturity we destroyed ourselves, by riotous living, and now the language is applicable to us: "return to thy God and live." When the prodigal Son returned he found his father ready to receive him. The Savior says: "he that cometh unto me, him will I in nowise cast out." Then we have nothing to fear, if we put our whole trust in God.—"The Lord is my helper, I shall not want" says David.

Then, kind reader, let us all return unto God. Our time may be near to a close; death may soon ensue, and we soon may fall—some by accident, some by protracted illness, some by epidemics which ravage our country, and others may fall by reason of old age. Soon we must appear before the judge of the quick and dead, there to "receive the things done in our bodies, according to that we have done, whether it be good or bad." O may we all be of that number that will hear that welcome voice of our Savior. "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

O sinner turn to God,
Why longer live in sin?
The Lord lifts up his chastning rod
To scourge you by your crimes.

He kindly asks you now
To join the christian band;
O come, and at the altar bow
And give to him your hand.

O seek that pard'ning grace
Which God alone can give:
O come and Christ will plead your case.
Repent and thou shalt live.

Self-Will.

It is not safe for us to always have our own way. If we do, we become obstinate and self-willed, and incapable of bearing contradiction. When we get into such a state, we are all well nigh incurable. For what is really a very great vice, we then esteem a great virtue. Our self-will wears, in our own eyes, the guise of zeal for God. Submission to the judgment of others. As spiritual as ourselves even where no principle is involved, and where the peace and welfare of a whole society may be at stake, looks to us like compromising; and so we dare not yield. To yield, because of the evil consequences that are almost certain to result from our rash actions, has, in our eyes, the appearance of distrusting God. No one is always right. The judgment of the very best is liable to be swayed by ignorance or prejudice. Here we know only in part. Our understanding is imperfect, and our knowledge limited. We should not, then, in matters where others are as much interested as ourselves, insist upon having our way. We should learn to yield fully and gracefully. The Divine rule is, submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of God. This does not mean that everybody must submit to us. The submission is to be mutual. We ourselves must sometimes yield. The earth attracts the moon, but the moon at the same time attracts the earth just as much in proportion to its size. This is the cause of tides. So we must make toward others as well as require them to make toward us. The backbone supports the body. It is not rigid and inflexible, but is full of joints. If it would not bend, it could not keep straight. A loss of flexibility produces deformity. A symmetrical Christian can keep straight alone and do his duty even when others do not concur his in opinion. Peter did not leave the church because the advice of James was followed.—Herald of Christian.

CAN girls stand a college course of study? Mrs. Stanton thinks they can, and says: "I would like you to take thirteen hundred young men and lace them up, and hang ten to twenty pounds weight of clothes on their waists, perch them up on three-inch heels, cover their heads with ripples, chignons, rats and mice, and stick ten thousand hair-pins into their scalps; if they stand all this they will stand a little Latin and Greek."

The Power of God's Word.

God is the word. Under all circumstances and conditions of mankind the word is the creative power; for it is a savor of life unto life or of death unto death. It falls in with every transaction as a saving or destructive power. In this fast age the power of the press is really a despotic king of kings, who carries much before his breath, and rules with a kind of an iron hand. But the demoralizing effects as well as the nobler capabilities of the press, are governed by the power that is in the word of God. As a "savor of life unto life," its power in the destruction of wickedness cannot be computed, and as a "savor of death unto death," in dragging the guilty to punishment its influence is equally potent. "There is no power but of God. The power of God permits men to work. There is a line which divides all the transactions of men into two powers, the one for evil and the other for good.

The great elevation to which the power of man has, by God's permission, arisen in our day, can and will soon bring an awful destruction—the very "great and notable day of the Lord"– if its influence be for evil.

Under the present system of educational facilities—journalism, telegraph and railroad operations, the immaterial nature of nearly all the children in the world can be utterly disqualified for usefulness—"salt of the earth" before they reach the age of twelve years.

In nearly every household the crime and immorality of whole nations may be almost daily reported.—Reports make impressions upon the mind. The appetite grows with what it feeds on,and its inclination to relish detailed narration of wickedness makes the future condition of the earth look fearfully dark. Yet when looking upon the other side of the picture, it will be seen at a glance that the power given to men can be as readily applied to working reform as to demoralization.

If all the evil deeds and the circumstances connected with them were suddenly entirely forgotten, and thus not reported any more; if correctness of doctrine and purity of life only were memorized and consequently as rapidly and firmly spread over the world as truth and error mixed now are, then the prospect for reformation would indeed be very bright. But it is not so. There is, however, a great responsibility resting upon every soul. There is salvation proclaimed, salvation from the natural and lawful consequences of a condition too awfully desperate to be described or fully comprehended. In this great salvation the power of God is plainly manifest, for there is no system of truth resulting from human experiment and speculation that could ever save one soul from the power of the tide of wickedness that now prevails. But Gud has communicated a system of truth—a plan or sceme of redemption which is far above the power or products of human resoning, yet it offers its credentials to the scrutiny of reason, and is in harmony with the profoundest philosophy. It proves its power and its authenticity to all who handle it with a pure motive.

A proper understanding and appreciation of the creative and destructive power of God's word will invariable cause the creature to behold it with awe, fear and reverence, which restrains him from the many excesses that the irreverent or ungodly man will surely fall into.

God's word will endure forever.—When ages after ages shall have passed it will still be the creative, destructive and enduring power. It has always been so, and so it will always continue to be the same unchangeable power. Surely they to whom it is a savor of life unto life" are very happy. But dreadful is the condition of those to whom it is a "savor of death unto death."

Man the Image of God.

The apostle Paul, in one of his letters to the Corinthians, informs us that man is the image of God. And Moses informs us that in the beginning "God made man in his own image; male and female created he them." From this we infer that we, both as rational and human beings, are the image of God. "Yet it does not appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." If man is the image of God, he is an exact and complete copy of God. Now man is a being possessing body, parts or passions; and we learn from scripture that God is a being possessing all these parts. First we learn from St. John that he is love: "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God." And again he says: "He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love." Here we learn that one of his attributes is love; and love is a passion of the soul. But we also see him possessing the passion of hatred. "The foolish shall not stand in thy sight; thou hatest all workers of iniquity. The Lord trieth the righteous, but the wicked and him that loveth violence his soul hateth." Here we also see that hatred is a passion of the soul, and is one of his attributes. Farther, we learn that he possesses the passion of anger: "God is angry with the wicked every day," and his "fierce anger" is against them. He also possesses the passion of jealousy: "For the Lord, whose name is Jealous, is a jealous God; for I the Lord thy God am a jealous God." But we alsa find that he is possessed with the passion of sympathy; for the apostle Peter tells us that "he is not slack concerning his promises.... but is long-suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance and live." Not only does he possess the passion of sympathy, but also of revenge; for it is said of him that "Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompense saith the Lord." He also possesses grief: "Forty years long was I grieved with this generation, and said I it is a people that do err in their heart and they have not known my ways." Not only does he possess grief, but also the passion of joy: "For the joy of the Lord is your strength. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Hence we see that the God whom we worship is a God of passion, and that these are some of the constituent elements of his being.

Not only does God possess passions, but he is also in possession of senses; such as hearing, seeing and smelling. "They eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and the good." His eye seeth every precious thing. His eyes are upon the ways of man and he seeth all his things." "He heareth the cry of the afflicted. The rightoous cry and the Lord heareth. This poor man cried and the Lord heard him." "The Lord smelled a sweet savor." Hence from the above we see that the Lord is in possession of senses.

But we learn that the Lord has a mind; for the son of an Israelitish woman was put in ward that the mind of the Lord might be showed him, and the man that strove with him for blaspheming the name of the Lord. From this we see that the Lord has a mind. Farther, we learn that the Lord has a faculty for retaining things in his mind, called memory; for he remembered Noah and every living thing, and all the cattle that was with him in the ark. "And it came to pass when God destroyed the cities of the plain, that God remembered Abraham and sent Lot out of the midst of the overthrow, when he overthrew the cities in which Lot dwelt." Hence we see that the Lord had memory. Not only has he memory, but also the faculty of speech; for when Habakkuk, the prophet, prayed upon Shigionoth, he said: "O Lord, I have heard thy speech."—"There went up a smoke out of his nostrils." "His lips are full of indignation and his tongue as a devouring fire." Hence we discover that the Lord possesses the faculty of speech and the organs of speech.

But farther, we learn that the Lord has form, and features and members. St. John, while in the Isle of Patmos, informs us that he was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and he heard a voice speaking to him as it were the voice of a trumpet; and being turned to see the voice which spake to him, he saw one whose "head and hairs were white like wool, as white as snow, and his eyes were as a flame of fire." And again we learn that "the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers, but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil." "Thou hast a mighty arm, strong is thy hand and high is thy right hand." The Psalmist informs us that the heavens are the work of God's fingers. "But if I with the finger of God cast out devils, no doubt the kingdom of God is come upon you." "I will show them the back and not the face in the days of their calamity." "He bowed the heavens also and came down and there was darkness under his feet." Hence we discover that the Lord has a head and hair, eyes, ears and face, arms, hands, fingers and feet. Therefore we conclude that he has a body.

Now from the above we see in what way man is the image of God. Man is in possession of passions and so is God. Man has senses and faculties, so has God. Man has a body composed of many members and so has God, "for the body is not one member, but many."

Evidences of Christianity.

There is a great deal said upon the evidence of Christianity, as well as upon many other subjects of the same nature, where and when sins are pardoned, and the evidence thereof; the reception of the holy spirit, etc. The Brethren are working occasionally upon the subject, and censuring other sects for preaching the evinence of pardon and reception of the Holy Spirit, without or previous to baptism, and trying to convince them that they are wrong. I must say that such brethren are laboring in the wrong house, or rather at the wrong end. We consider it very foolish in trying to repair a house that has no foundation, nor is it profitable if it requires so much repairing at a house that has a foundation. One might ask the question! But what reason have we to assert that such denominations have no foundation? Why, Christ said himself: "Whosoever cometh unto me, and heareth my sayings, and doeth them, I will show you to whom he is like." "He is like a man which built an house, and digged deep, and laid the foundation on a rock," Luke, 6: 47 48. "The storms and the floods could not shake that house: for it was founded on a rock." "But he that heareth and doeth not is like a man that, without a foundation, built a house upon the earth." Luke 6: 49. This convinces us at once that in order to dig and come upon the rock, it requires the commandments of Christ Jesus, and any sect that pretends to come upon the rock Jesus Christ without, or previous to the commandments that are set forth in order to come thereupon, is sufficient evidence that such a sect has no foundation at all.

But I am exceedingly sorry to say, that there are ministering brethren, that have departed from the faith, and given heed to seducing spirits, and deceiving many innocent brethren by their new doctrines, preaching and consenting to erroneous doctrines, and making the word of God of none effect. The same doctrines that outsiders are censured with, by some of the brethren, are taught by some of the ministering brethern in different branches of the brotherhood, and where the majority of the brethren are under the influence of that deceiving spirit; but this is expressly and clearly foretold, that some shall depart from the faith, and by false doctrines and polished words obtain power and influence of men. This is where the brethren aught to guard.

If the brethren would be of one mind, preaching the same faith, I beleive that God would work miracles through the instrumentality of the Brethren, and convince many, of there errors, and cause many to become obedient to the faith that was once delivered unto saints.

The word says, faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. Now if some preach the word and others do not, it makes a great confusion. Is it not like the confusion of tongues at Babel? The time is fast approaching, and already is, that our faith will be tried; the fiery trials are already drifting many away, and no wonder; because that animal feeling, (the idol, which is acknowledged as Christ Jusus) is so admirable to human nature, which is prone to grasp at the forbidden fruit.

But let us not be discouraged, but be strong in the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ; let us be confident that what Christ has promised, he is able also to perform. The obedience of faith is the evidence of christianity. "Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." "Whosoever loveth me keepeth my commandments."

BE TRUE.—One essential point in our dealing with children is to be true ourselves. Every other interest should be sacrificed to that of truth. When we in any way deceive a child, we not only show it a pernicious example, but we also lose our influence over it forever. Teachers, be true.

Who are Brethren.

In to-days paper will be found a communication accusing us of calling those brethren who are not Brethren. We have been told the same thing before, and we doubt not we have been guilty. When a person addresses us as brother, we of course suppose that person to be a member of the church; else why should he so address us.—There are other courteous titles that could be used. We think it would be quite proper where members are disowned, who are generally known in the Brotherhood, to have them published in the Companion, so that all may know that they are no longer members of the church. Let nothing be done secretly; for there is nothing hid that shall not be made known. We think the expose made by the correspondent referred to is entirely in place. We might have a friendly discussion upon this subject. What have you to say, brethren and sisters?

Brethren's Publishing House.

We have now christened our printing establishment, as the Brethren's Publishing House, and intend to have it chartered as such. Those of our customers who prefer can address simply: Brethren'sPublishing House, Dale City, Somerset Co., Penna.

We have facilities for doing almost any amount, and any variety of printing our Brethren may demand. We have two presses run by steam, so that our facilities for presswork are all that could be desired. Our assortment of type is as good as is commonly found in country offices, though we are constantly adding fonts. One fact is worthy of note; our type is all in good order, and of the latest and best style.

Should any of our wealthy friends feel magnanimous we should be pleased to receive an endowment of a few hundred dollars to liquidate the indebtedness incurred in furnishing the establishment.—It would be exceedingly acceptable, and the blessing would undoubtedly be mutual, as it would enable us to increase our circulation, and thus extend the borders of our influence. We invite the attention of our moneyed brethren to this suggestion.

Other houses, less worthty, in the estimation of our friends, have received large donations, which enabled them to circulated their papers and books all over the country, and it seems to us, since our cause is a better one that our brethren should not be found a step behind the most benevolent in the way of supporting the cause. All donations will remain perpetually in the institution, and only the interest will be consumed. We shall have more to say by and by, in regard to this matter. Meanwhile we will see what our patrons may have to say.

That Will Do.

Several weeks ago, we offered to exchange for a few copies of last year's Almanacs, as we were in need of a few. We have now been fully supplied. Some did not understand us, and sent us copies that had been used and soiled. We wanted only clean and whole copies. We intend to preserve them, and have a series of ten years bound into a book.

Obituaries.

A kind brother says in a private note: "There is not that attention given to obituaries that many of your subscribers would desire. I have induced some to take the C. F. C., because they wished some notice of the death of relatives. And some have refused to contine it, on the grounds that their notice, had been slighted. It will be to your advantage to give this subject special attention, as some are very particular in this matter."

We will give all reasonable attention to this department of our paper; but there are some little fancies that we cannot indulge.

We are quite sure that we deal entirely impartial to our patrons, and that we think is all that can be claimed; but if we knew exactly in what the grievance consist we would certainly take it into consideration. We ask forbearance.

The Manufacturer and Builder.

This excelent scientific monthly begins the new year with an unusually good number. As a presage of its future excellence, it appears in a new and beautiful dress, which can not fail to be admired by every one. We are glad to notice the continued success of this valuable magazine, and recommend all of our readers interested in scientific or industrial matters to subscribe to it, as its pages always contain practical information regarding the newest and most useful discoveries and inventions in science and art. Amoung the articles in the present issue we notice those on "Ready-Made Houses," "International Societies," "New Rotary Drilling-Machine," "The Selden Double-Action Plunger Pump," "Floral Fountains," "Manufacture of Russia Iron," "New Sources of Supply for Paper," "Fallacious Theories of Boiler Explosions", besides many others, all admirably illustrated.

The connection of Western & Co, with the publication of the Manufacturer and Builder ceased January 1, 1872. The Magazine will hereafter be published at the same address by its proprietors, THE ENGINEER'S AND MANUFACTURES' PUBLISHING Co. All communications relating to the concern should be addressed, and all remittances made, to Austin BLACK, Secretary and Treasurer, 37 Park Row, New York, P. O. Box, 4379.

The Little Corporal for January makes his salute in a handsome new uniform, having laid aside his military dress and donned the garb of peace. We are pleased to note this new departure, and deem it timely and proper. The illustrations are fine, and not excelled by any other similar periodical in the land. While parents and children are looking for something nice for the New Year let us suggest a trial of The Little Corporal. TERMS—$1.50 a year.

In the Companion of Jan. 2nd, 1872, D. A. Lichty asks: "Where do we read, the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpents head? Who can tell? Let him turn to the 3rd chapter of Genesis, verse 15 and there he has it in full. "And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed: it shall bruise thy head," &c. This last sentence contains all D. A. L aks for, "It shall bruise thy head.—

Here God is speaking to the serpent, and when he says, "I will put enmity between thy seed and her seed," the words "Thy seed" fully represents, "The serpents seed," and her seed, likewise represents, "The woman's seed," or "The seed of the woman;" and in the sentence: "It shall bruise thy head" the personal pronoun "It" represents "her seed," or "the seed of the woman," and the possessive pronoun "Thy" represents "The serpents." So we have the whole sentence asked for fully expressed: "It, (the woman's seed, or the seed of the woman) shall bruise thy (the serpents) head.

Dear Brethren:—I was raised in Virginia. My mother belonged to the United Brethren and farther was raised with the Dunkards. Grandfather and Grand-mother were members, and they would often talk to me until I would almost resolve to do better. But then I was afraid somebody would laugh at me, and thus I put it off. After a while I was married and moved to Iowa, where I had no friends. Then I began to think that if I had no friends—no father nor mother to go to here, there was a Father in heaven to whom I could go. So I gave myself up to my heavenly Father, and am willing to humble myself to all his commandments. I am no more ashamed of this plain way of dress, that so many people are talking about. Some think they are nobody unless they are up with the fashion. Perhaps not. They forget that such things are an abomination in the sight of God.

Cure for a Terrible Disease of the Mouth.

It is commonly called slander, and is apt to touch the tongues of a good many persons. Like a good many patent medicines, if it does no good (the cure) it may do no harm. Take good nature one ounce; of an herb called by the Indians mind your own business, one ounce; mix this with a little charity for others, and two or three sprigs of keep your toungue between your teeth; simmer them in a vessel called circumspection, for a short time, and it will be fit for use.

I will here give the symptoms of this disease. They are violent itchings in the tongue, and roof of the mouth, which it invariable takes when you are in company with a species of animals call gossips. When you feel a fit of it coming on take a teaspoonfull of the mixture, hold it in your mouth, which you will keep closely shut until you get home, and you will find a complete cure. Should you apprehend a relapse keep a small bottle full about you, and on the slightest symptoms repeat the dose.

Answer to Query.

In answer to brother Moser's query, in volume 7, Number 50, I will refer you to Acts 2: 38, "Then Peter said unto them, repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Now if this young man had neither repented nor believed, how could you expect him to have received a gift of the Holy Ghost? Also, Acts 19: 5, 6, Here it appears that it was necessary to be baptized again to receive the Holy Ghost. Also, Mark 16: 16, "He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned." Now would baptism, without faith and repentance, save him from this damnation? Answer, no. Therefore I would consider that if he had never believed nor repented until now, it would be necessary to baptize him, that he might have a right to a gift of the Holy Ghost. This is my opinion, and if I am wrong correct me. We are all well, and well satisfied with this country, and still determined, by the grace of God, to make heaven our final home. ALEX KINTNER.

Dear Brethren:—I wish, when you go West by Railroad, on business or visits, you would stop with us. You can write to brother Peter Sipe, or Benjamin Blough, to Connellsville, Fayette county, Pa. They live within two miles of Connellsville. Either one of them will meet you with conveyance.

Dear Companion:—This pleasant Lord's day I seat myself to pen a few lines for your columns. It is the last day of this year, 1871. Some time ago I had the pleasure of seeing some of our dear brethren and sisters at Dale City, and also at Somerset, in Somerset county, Pa. I was glad to find them well in body, and I think they enjoy spiritual health. They all received me very kindly. I was happy while among them. I do not have the privilege nor the means to travel much, but I enjoy the society of the brethren and sisters very much. If I had the opportunity and means I would love to be with them often.

Some said they had seen some of my pieces in print, and it had done them much good. One brother said to me: "Why don't you write more." I told him I thought there were so many among us that are so much abler than I am, I will let them write. He said, "Then you will bury your talent with you." No, brethren and sisters; no, my Lord, I will try to improve my one talent, that I also may hear the plaudit, "Well done, enter thou into the joys of the Lord." And now I will write again. I want to gain another one, or more if I can. I would not like my Lord to take my talent and give to him that hath ten. We can read, "To whom much is given of him much will be required."

I will here state what I saw at one of our meetings: There were three young sisters, so mild and pleasant, sat together, and before meeting began they sang so sweetly. Oh! I thought, will we be so happy as to meet together in heaven? We will, if we are faithful. I thought if all the young people would do as these young sisters, what a happy time there would be. Dear sisters, I shall often think of you. Oh, will we all meet in heaven,

"In that happy land far, far away,
Where saints in glory stand bright, bright as day."

My husband is in Ohio, where he has gone to preach to sinners, not only to preach to them, but to try to persuade them to forsake their sins and turn to God.

We are as the flowers of the field. How soon we sow them cut down and withered, and their bright colors fade away. It seems but a few days since we saw the buds of the flowers open to bloom awaile; but sow soon the blasting wind blew upon them? They faded, they dropped to rise no more. But man must rise again in the resurrection morning, then to give an account for the deeds done in the body. Oh think, young friends, how soon God can call you to his bar, there to give an account for your sins. Oh, sinners, try to make your peace with God, before you at his bar appear—before you meet God on the judgment day. If you do not, he will say, "I know you not, depart from me all you that work iniquity." Again, "Depart, accursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." O, poor sinner, turn to God, and he will have mercy upon you; to our God and he will abundantly pardon. Brethren and sisters pray for me, that I may hold out faithful unto the end. Amen.

A Letter From the South West.

As this is a new year, eighteen hundred and seventy-two, and having heard of some brethren in the Northern and Eastern States, stating the extreme cold weather, and so much snow, I thought probably it would be a little interestiog to hear from this part of the country.

We have had a very mild winter, so far, with the exception of a few cold snaps, or northerners, as the old settlers here call them. This was caused by the wind changing and whirling up from the North, of the deep snows. It made it tolerably pinching for a day or two. The only snow we have had, fell on the 19th of November, and that did not exceed three inches deep. There have been few days that people could not work in their shirt sleeves. We have had some rain, but the roads kept good. On Saturday the 29th of December, we had a heavy rain, with considerable thunder and lightning; but it cleared off in a day or so, leaving the roads nice and solid. On Saturday night before New year's, we had another heavy rain. The dark clouds commenced gathering in the West, and of course moved on slowly, and nearer. The bright flashes of lightning that illuminated the forests, and prairie, with heavy jolts of thunder that shook the earth, sent us the signal ahead that there was a storm approaching; yet the cloud passed over with some wind, a heavy rain, and some hail. But since then it has the appearance of nice weather again.—When we see the bright flashes of lightning streaming across the clouds, and the loud jolts of thunder that makes the earth tremble, it reminds us of the great change that took place when Christ will make his appearance in the clouds of heaven, and fire will rain, and all things shall be changed in the twinkle of an eye.—Then will hear such thundering and lightning, as never was known. Yet we should not fear as, those that have no hope; for we are commanded to be ready and watch, for we know not what hour the Son of man cometh.—Then let us be careful that we may gain that promise of our father, which is in heaven, for they that keep his commandments, and endure unto the end, will be caught up to meet the Lord in the air, and forever be with him. ———Yours,

N. DICE.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—Don't forget to pray for the editors of our papers, that the Lord may give them grace, and wisdom, and a heart full of love; that they might do the work, whereto the Lord hath called them aright, honestly, and with joy; that they may do the work to the honor of God, and the welfare of mortal man; for there is great responsibility resting upon them.

And don't you forget to pray for the elders of the church, that the Lord might stand by them, and give them a watchful mind, to watch over the flock, that no wolves creep in and kill the lambs; and also keep the vineyard well bound, and not let so many little faxes get in, which spoil the vines. Oh, yes, there rests a great responsibility upon our Elders. Think of this ye Angels of the churches; be ye faithful.

And don't you forget to pray for the preachers, which stand between God and men, to declare the will of God to men, that the Lord may give them wisdom, and strength to preach the word in its purity and simplicity.

Pray also for the deacons, and all the members; for kings and rulers, and for your enemies; and pray also for your children, and for your neighbors, and for everybody.

G. ASHENBRENNER.

Burk, Iowa.

Dear Companion :—I see some brethren's names who are disowned, addressed by you as brethren, in the Christian Family Companion. One of them is C. Shank and the other brother R. Now I take brother R. to be Joseph Rothrock, but if I should be mistaken I hope there will be no harm done. By the request of some brethren I will give through the Companion a statement of what was done among us. Joseph W. Hopping, Jacob Caub, Joseph Rothrock, and their wives, Benjamin Shields, William Shields, and their wives, George Shank, his mother and sister by the name of Thompson, and Barbar Baily, met tog ether in council, unknown to the Elder and the rest of the Church (I will here say the Elder and a few others heard of it a day or two before it took place). At that private council they appointed a communion meeting, which took place in about two weeks after in secret meeting. This also reached the ears of several members a day or two before it took place. The above list may not all have been present at their council, but they endorsed what was done. This is the charge against them, for having this meeting unknown to the church. On next day at our regular meeting, a council meeting was appointed by the church, to take place in three weeks. Next the annual visit went round, which had not been done yet, and the following Elders were called to assist the Church : William Gish, Christian Holler, Daniel Pretty, John Bower's, Daniel Barnhart, Jacob Negly, and Isaac Hershey. At this council the above members were disowned as they justified themselves and would make no acknowledgement.

Now I hear they raise the whim that they were disowned on account of feet-washing, as they were advocates for the single mode. They are now going on for themselves, holding meetings, &c. Joseph W. Hopping and Jacob Coub, were speakers in the second degree, and Joseph Rothrock, was a deacon. This took place in the Pleasant Grove congregation, Jacob Coub and wife lived in the Eight Mile congregation. By their request they were tried here. C. Shank was disowned some time before this. I think his note to you for publication "without giving name or place" was a misrepresentation of the District Meeting. The District Meeting sat aside what a part of the Pleasant Grove branch had done behind the Elder's back. It was this restoring C. Shank when they knew he was unreconciled with several members. The District Meeting made out a report to this effect, saying that C. Shank stood just where he did before the church last took him up. When this report was laid before the arm of the church we received it. Hence the roaring of these over much apostles.

JAMES E. WILKEY.

Holling, Kansas.

Brother Holsinger :—On the Lord's day, the first after New Year's, 1872. I was reading from John 20 : 13. Many thoughts came to my mind of the glorious scene of the resurrection of our Lord Jesus. What an awakening scene of mind it must have been to Mary Magdalene. So early, "when it was yet dark," coming to the sepulchre, where her Lord was laid, and was not there. Methinks I can see that dear sister Mary weeping. Oh, how great her love ! It pressed her to the tomb, where her Lord was laid. What a glorious example we have here ! How we should not forget our first love, with purity of heart, and holiness of life to God, devoted to endless praises "in the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." We hear more of Mary. When she turned herself back, and saw Jesus standing. Jesus saith unto her, "woman, why weepest thou? Whom seekest thou ?" Jesus saith unto her, "Mary ;" she turned herself and saith unto him, "Master !" Dear brethren and sisters, can we with such a full purpose of heart, truly call our Lord, Master, as Mary did ? Jesus by his death, hath set open the gates of immortality to the sons of men, and by his word, spirit, and example, all is offered to make us meet for the glorious rewards in the kingdom of God, and to conduct us into the inheritance of saints in light.

Let us therefore, remember, that being born of God, by his gospel, we have, from our earliest years, engaged the best means of securing our salvation, and that favor of God, which is life, and that loving kindness, which is better than life. Dear reader, the gospel teaches us that we are made for eternity, and our present life is to our future experience only as time is to eternity. Oh with what manner of love we should seek, in all things, to do God's holy will. Blessed are we if we hear his word, and keep it ; blessed are we if we have love for one another ; blessed are we if we keep all his sayings ; for it maketh us wholly to aspire after God through the Lord Jesus,—inflames every emotion of the heart to glorify our God, and the Lord Jusus Christ ; giving praises to our God at all times ; yea our spirit is full of the divine love, our soul is enabled to magnify the Lord our God, with holiness of mind. Therefore we offer encouragenent to the sinner to come to Christ. The religion of Jesus is the perfection of human nature, it gives us pleasure and a "promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come." It is the voice of reason ; it is also, the language of scripture. "The ways of wisdom are the ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are paths of peace." And our Savior himself assures us, that his precepts are easy, and the burden of his yoke is light.

PETER STOUFFER.

STANTON'S MILLS, PA., }
January, 21st, 1872. }

Dear Brethren : Our series of meetings is over, and we could sing with truth :

"How loth I've been to leave the place,

The first meeting commenced December 23d, 1871, in the meeting-house, near Sipesville, and continued 11 days. We had meeting day and night. The brethren that labored for us were C. G. Lint, Ephraim Cover, Tobias Myers, Valentine Blough, John Cover, and William Sivits. Ten souls were buried with Christ, in Baptism. Our second meeting commenced, January 13th, in the meeting-house near Stanton's Mills. We closed to day the 21st, by singing the 684th, hymn. We had a season of refreshing, and hope impressions were made that will not be forgotten. The brethren that labored for us were Jacob Blough, Stephen Hildebrand, Ephraim Cover, Valentine Blough, Tobias Myers, and George Shrock. At this meeting four souls were added to the church, through baptism. In the past nine months 24 souls were added to the church. Our Quema-boning Branch is prospering, notwithstanding the report that a coldness is growing among us. Yours in the bonds of charity.

TOBIAS BLOUGH.

Brother Holsinger:—I believe that that C. F. C, has been the means of doing much good throughout the Brotherhood, and I think brethren, we that have been readers of the Companion, ought to try and get as many of the brethren and sisters to become interested in reading it. I find so many good admonitions and instructions given to us, that it is worth more than twice the amount it cost. It causes us to become more acquainted with the order of the Brethren, and by reading it we become more acquainted with the teachings of our blessed master, for through it we are always cited to the Bible. Faternally your, K. HECKMAN.

Brother Holsinger:—I enclose 10 cents for which please send a Brethren's Almanac. I am glad for any news or reading of the church. We are so isolated from the Brethren.—There are only six of us, sisters, here at Elliotts, and no brother. The Pipe Creek brethren, to which we belong, come to preach for us every four weeks, for which we are very thankful. I subscribed for the Companion the first of the present year, and. I have already received three numbers, and am very much pleased with them.

LIZZIE MADDOX.

Elliott's City, Md.

Brother Henry:—I am still getting the Companion, and it is received as a welcome vistor. It brings us a vast amount of spiritual food, and good news from the brotherhood; and especially to us who have not the pleasant opportunity of going to meeting and hearing the true gospel expounded. Eld. G. W. Baker, preached to us three sermons about a year ago, and had rather promised to preach every fifth Lord's day. We then had some five or six members in the Neighbor-hood; but it happened that he never came since. But the brethren have gone west, and left us by ourselves again. My wife does not wish to go any farther west. She is talking strongly of going back again. In all probability we will arrive at Dale City, some day not for in the future.

W. E. FADELY.

Colfax, Iowa.

Brother Holsinger:—Please give notice in the C. F. C., that the Brethren of the Seneca Branch, Seneca county, Ohio. Intend, the Lord willing, to commence at their meeting-house, near Honey creek, on the 17th day of February next, and continue one week or more; and that a pressing invitation is given to all ministering brethren who can make it suit to be with us. S. A. WALKER.

Bloomville, Ohio.

Queries.

Brother Henry:—Will you, or some other brother or sister, say who those two witnesses are that we read of in the Revelation, chapter eleven, third verse, and so on. "And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth." WM. SCHROCK.

Is it right for a brother to take ten per cent interest? The reason I ask the question is this, a rich brother wants ten per cent, and by taking it, he causes a poorer brother to pay the same.

NOAH B. BLOUGH.

JONAS J. RINGER, son of brother Josiah and Sarah Jane RINGER, at the New Lexington, Somerset county, on Tuesday January 9th, aged 19 years 6 months and 15 days. His was a peculiar case. He left home on Saturday December 30th, in order to spend the following Sabbath and New Year's day at his Uncle's at New Lexington. Sunday passed pleasantly with his relatives and friends. Sometime before day on Monday, he was taken ill very suddenly with what was supposed to be colic. Medical aid was promptly procured but to no avail. After the most intense suffering of nine days he departed this life. He received all the kind care and attention from the friends and neighbors that was possible for love and friendship to betsow. He was entered at St. Paul's Evangelical church, on Thursday, January 11th, followed to his last resting place by the largest concourse of people ever assembled on any occasion in the community in which he was reared. Funeral services by Joseph W. Beer and P. Green, Text Jermiah 22 : 10.

Religiously he had been an intense Bib'e Student for the last three years. He believed in immersion and his chief trouble seemed to be whether to join the Brethren or the Disciples. 'HOW TO GO WEST."

Forty years ago, Illinois was as far West as most people wished to go, and journeys were made in the legendary "Prairie Schooner," but in these days of Progress and Improvement, the word West has come to mean Iowa. Nebraska, Kansas, Colorada, California, and the Territories, and the Traveler reaches almost any point therein by a splendid Line of Railroad.

This Line of Railroad is the Burlington Route, which starts from Chicago over the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R., from Indianapolis, over the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western Short Line, and from Logansaort, over the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw R. R., and running through BURLINGTON, reaches Omaha. Lincolen, Nebraska City, St. Joseph, Atchison, Leavenworth and Kansas City, connecting with the Union Pacific, Kansas Pacific and other Railroads running from those cities.

Always go "By way of Burlington" and you will be sure to be right.

The Burlington Route has admirably answered the question, "How to go West ?" by the publication of a truthful and interesting document, filled with facts in regard to Time, Connections, Accommodations, rates of Fare, and other interesting items and illustrated by a large map, truthfully showing the whole West, which they distribute free of charge. Copies, and additional information can be obtained by addressing, General Passenger Agent. B. & M. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

The Finkle & Lyon Sewing Machine, with Drop Feed, new Take-up, new Hemmer, &c., is now offered to agents on more liberal terms. Also, Second-hand Machines taken in exchange, or the new improvements applied.

THE

Christian Family Companion.

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Ashamed of Jesus.

"Whosoever therefore shall be ashamed of me, and of my words, in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy angels." Mark 8 : 38.

The above words were uttered by Jesus himself. And why should mortal man be ashamed of one that is divine ? But in the first place we will try and notice what gave rise to the above sentence.

We find in the 34th verse, that he said : "Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." So we can see that the natural man cannot follow him, without first denying himself ; and then he must follow him in his words and actions. And in the 35th verse we read : "Whosoever will save his life shall lose it ; but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the Gospel's, the same shall save it." Now I understand that we must lose our natural lives sooner than not follow Christ, that we may gain that "Eternal life." For I do believe, that we must follow Christ in all his commands, and if the whole world is against us. But I shall now notice how we could be "ashamed of him."

In the first place, we might be ashamed of him, by not denying ourselves enough in our apparel ; for we learn that he was humble, and therefore we should be humble too.

We may be ashamed to pray in public ; and we learn that he prayed much, and therefore we must pray too, both in private and public if we are called upon ; for we shall let our light shine before the world, that we are not ashamed of him who died for us that we might live.

Again some might be ashamed to follow him in baptism ; for we learn that he went into the river of Jordan, and when he was baptized came up out of the water. So we must at once conclude that he was immersed. But some will tell us that it is immaterial whether we are sprinkled or immersed, and thus deny him in baptism, and consequently are ashamed of him.

But again, we must believe that same one ashamed to wash the Saint's feet, and by not complying with that command they deny his words and actions, and therefore are ashamed to comply with such an humble command—to stoop so low as to wash the Saint's feet. But remember the words of Jesus, "If you are ashamed of me and of my words I will also be ashamed of you, when I come to gather the faithful home to heaven."

But, dear reader, it may seem a cross to you to be a follower of Jesus. But I assure you, if you would once resolve to follow him, it would not be much of a cross—not nearly as great as our Jesus had to endure, to open the way for us by which we can come to him, if we only will. But I can assure you, whoever you are, that, if you love Jesus as you ought to, you will readily comply with all his commands.

It is sometimes said, by some, "I would join the dunkards, if they would not practice feet-washing and greet one another with a kiss." Now to such I will say : If you are ashamed to wash the feet of your brethren or sisters, you are ashamed of Jesus ; for it is his will that we should do so. And as to the kiss it is just the same.

But some one might say : "Jesus did not directly enjoin it on his followers that they shall kiss each other." To such I would say, that the apostles cammanded it five times, to the churches, that they should observe it. And farther, we learn that Judas betrayed Jesus with a kiss. That is, he told the officers, that the one he would kiss is he. So I think it ought to be plain enough, to every candid mind, that Jesus and his Apostles practiced the holy kiss among them. No wonder then that Paul told the Roman brethren that he was not ashamed of the gospel of Christ. And he exhorted Timothy not to be ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of him, his prisoner.

In conclusion I will yet say : Be not ashamed to do his whole will ; for as sure as you are, so sure he will be ashamed of you, when he comes with the holy angels.

The Lord's Supper.

Into what an ecstasy of joy we are thrown, when we look around the tables at our Love-feasts and see them well filled, and a goodly number of young brethren and sisters being interested in that supper. But we should be very careful to examine ourselves thoroughly, to know whether we are worthy of eating this supper and communion. Paul says, "He that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself." Then certainly it is necessary for us to be very careful. We should remember that every joy which we are to experience throughout eternity has been bought with the agony, bloody sweat, and dying groans of our Saviour. While we are enjoying this blessed feast of the Lord, how often our pleasure is marred, and our hearts made to feel sad and wounded, when we look around and see many dear ones standing outside of Christ's fold, whom we would dearly love to see labor for the salvation of their precious souls. Oh, how gloomy must be their prospects for eternity! How unspeakably dreadful their condition! How can we be satisfied unless we try to win their precious souls, and add some jewels to our Redeemer's crown? We should ever breathe their names in our prayers, that our heavenly Father may not suffer them to wait too long. Think of the joy there is in heaven whenever a sinner is brought into the kingdom of grace. And would we not labor to be instrumental in adding to the joys of heaven? As everlasting life or everlasting death is to be our portion, we must be very careful while laboring for the salvation of others, that we do not neglect our own souls. In the journey which is before us there are powerful enemies with which we have a great warfare—enemies who have slain thousands, who set out with fair prospects for heaven; especially young soldiers of the cross. There are many allurements to entice and draw our minds from heavenly things; but among our foes there is none more powerful than pride. If pride should ever threaten to gain the mastery over us, let us pause, and take such a view of it as a dying bed, as the last struggle, as the coffin and the grave are calculated to give. Let us ask God that the last filament of pride may be torn from our bosoms; for we know how prone we are to err in these respects. We must be on our guard lest these sins should get the victory over us. Young soldiers, be faithful. May God help us to grieve him no more; and may he conduct us in safety to that heavenly world.

Morality.

In our travels and conversation with men, we sometimes meet with those who seem to put their hopes of eternal happiness in morality alone. They reason thus: "If I am moral in all my conversation, deal justly, am kind and benevolent, then God, in his mercy, will surely save me." Now, while all these traits are, so far as they go, very commendable, yet we conclude, and we draw our conclusion from the word of God, that they alone will not suffice to save us.

We might in the first place cite you to the case of Cornelius, (Acts 10), who in connection with the above good traits is said to have "prayed to God always," yet it was necessary for him to send for one of God's messengers, who was to tell him what he "ought to do." The carnal mind, you remember, is enmity to God, is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. Hence the necessity that we be "born again." And although, friendly reader, all our transactions with our fellow men may be strictly right and just, yet God speaks, he spake to you, me, and all the intelligences on earth, saying, "Ye must be born again." This, together with all other injunctions of the "Author and finisher of our faith," is obligatory on us.

I do not write to dissuade or reprove the moralist; no, I would to God that it did abound even much more, or to a much greater extent than it does in this our day; but as morality is essential to it—and indeed there can be no christian character without it,—we desire to encourage morality, and to admonish the mere moralist. "Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." Yea, it is highly necessary that you awake, come to yourself, see yourself in the light in which God sees you; then there will be room for hope, at least, that you may, by the grace of God, "go on unto perfection;" adding unto your morality all the christian graces enjoined on us in the word of God. Then, too, your influence would stand in favor of the cause of the Master. We say, then, "Come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty." Come now; enlist under the blood-stained banner. If need be, suffer with Christ, that you may also reign with him.

The first gray hair. Meditations.

BY J. S. FLORY.

What meanest thou, silver, silken cord? Hair art thou! Why changest thou thy color? Why so odd from millions of thy companions? White as the driven snow—lone star—and what thy mission? Why hast thou been singled out from amid a host of others to give a gleaming streak that seems to claim a prominence by thy wonderful contrast? Well, we will hear thee. If it were an angel that touched thee and bid thee change, we hope the self same angel gave thee power to speak in language, though silent as the grave, yet powerful as the voice of eternity.

"Listen! oh man, I have a message for thee. Yes, I will speak in silence, but thou canst hear and understand. I am but the first of thousands that will follow me. I am the pioneer of an army of silver shreds that is to crown thee with a hoary crown—the first freak of the frost of age—a monitor that tells thee winter is coming. I come to tell thee, that, by and by, thy summer will be over, thy harvest ended—to tell thee thou art ripening for the Scythe of Time. Soon thou art to be gather ed into Time's store-house—laid away until the trump shall sound. I come to tell thee, that time is wafting thee on—thy life is passing as a vapor. I am but the first shred of bloom that is to adorn thy head and cause it to bloom for the grave. As a warning I come to bid you be wise, and as you pass down the declivity of life, to keep your feet upon the Rock, and cling to the cross. Step by step you go down the rugged steep, but just beyond lies the pleasant plane. There the "Rose of Sharon" blooms forever; there the harpers play upon instruments of a thousand strings; there the melody of heaven enlivens a world of peace, joy, and eternal happiness."

"I hear thy voice, silver, twining monitor. Oh, shall I be ashamed of thee, honorable as thou art? Nay, nay, I shall not pluck thee out. Color thee? God forgive the thought; as thou art thou shall be let alone. When I cease to love flowers, then perchance I shall be ashamed of thee. When I forget God, nature, and heaven, then it may be I will with unhallowed hand pluck thee out. Honor to thee, first born of thy kind! Honor to thy mission!! Thrice honor to thy impressive teachings!!! May we live together, and together go to the grave.

True.

A good woman never grows old. Years may pass over her head, but if benevolence and virtue dwell in her heart, she is as cheerful as when the spring of life first opened to her view. When we look upon a good woman, we never think of her age—she looks as charming as when the rose of youth first bloomed upon her cheek. That rose has not faded yet; it will never fade. In her neighborhood she is the friend and benefactor—in the church the devout worshiper and exemplary Christian. Who does not love and respect the woman who has passed her days in acts of kindness and mercy—who has been the friend of man and God—whose whole life has been a scene of kindness and love, a devotion of love and religion? We repeat, such a woman can not grow old. She will always be fresh and buoyant in spirits, and active in humble deeds of mercy and benevolence. If the young lady desires to retain the bloom and beauty of youth, let her not yield to the sway of fashion and folly; let her love truth and virtue; and to the close of life she will retain those feelings which now make life appear a garden of sweets—ever fresh and ever new.

HUMBLENESS EXALTED.—I observe that God hath chosen the vine, a low plant that creeps upon the helpless wall; of all beasts, the soft, and patient lamb; of all birds, the mild and guileless dove. Christ is the rose of the field and the lily of the valley. When God appeared to Moses it was not in the lofty cedar, nor the sturdy oak, nor the spreading palm, but in a bush—an humble, slender, abject bush. As if he would by these selections check the conceited arrogance of man.—Feltham.

Is the fruit of your spirit love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith?

Reflections on John 2 : 1:

"And the third day there was a marriage in Cora of Galilee, and the mother of Jesus was there.

In the writings of Mark, we have set forth the office and labors of John the baptist ; introducing him as a messenger, sent into the world to prepare the minds of the people for the reception of one that was to come after him. His voice was heard in the wilderness, "prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight." In John 1 : 6, we read : "There was a man sent from God whose name was John." From this we infer that he was sent by one who had authority to send him ; and what he said and did was by the authority of God. It is also written in Mark 1 : 4, "John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." This created such a sensation, that there went out unto him from all the land of Judea and Jerusalem and were baptized of him in the river of Jordan, confessing their sins." In those days came Jesus from Nazareth of Galilee, and was also baptized in Jordan. But immediately the spirit driveth him into the wilderness, to undergo the temptations necessary to fit him to fulfil the mission assigned him.

From our observations of the scriptures we are led to believe that John and Christ were not personally acquainted before his baptism ; but there was a sign given by which he might know who that person was that the people should receive. That sign was, the descent of the Holy Spirit in the form of a dove, and lighting upon the subject then under his immediate care and control, and the voice from heaven saying, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." Thus the fact was demonstrated, and the evidence was sufficient to satisfy John that this was the promised Messiah, who had the qualification necessary to baptize with the Holy Ghost, and with fire, (the good with the Holy Ghost, and the bad with fire).

The suddenness by which he was driven away from them is a little remarkable ; but it was necessary that he should for a little while be in company with devils and foul fiends in order to come out conqueror over all the hosts of the infernal regions, the better to qualify him to sympathize with our infirmities. Upon his return to the vicinity where John was, the eye of John fell upon him, and he exclaimed : "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." He well remembered what he saw a short time before ; and no doubt looked upon him with solemn awe. Being overheard by some of his fervent disciples, who were ever willing to see and learn, hearing that sublime expression from the one whom they trusted in, followed him. When Jesus saw them following, he turned and said unto them, "Whom seek ye ? They say, Rabbi, which by interpretion is, Master, where dwellest thou. He saith, Come and see."

The eloquence of John created such a sensation among the people, that they mused in their hearts whether he were not the Christ. The anxiety became so great, that they could not be satisfied until they sent priests and Levites to inquire who he was. We see him honestly confessing that he was not the Christ, but was sent before him. This occurred the day before Christ's return from the wilderness, as stated in John 1 : 28, 29. "The next day John seeth Jesus coming to him," we understand, from the wilderness. In the 35th verse we read again, "The next day after, John stood and two of his disciples," which would make the second day. "And the third day there was a marriage in Cana of Galilee. Now we have the key to the expression contained in the text above, which clearly shows to us that on the third day after his return from the wilderness of temptation, he began to manifest himself to the world by the miraculous powers he exhibited on that occasion, of turning water into wine.

It is very peculiar that this should occur on the third day, and no other. We may learn something from this incident, if we properly consider it, that is of vast importance. The numeral three occurs often in the sacred scriptures. When God commanded Noah to build an ark, it was to be three stories high, a window in the upper story to let light into the ark. That Noah was in the third story, adjacent to the window, is evident. Jesus says, "I am come a light into the world," and the nearer we get to the window, the clearer the light. It is also said, men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil ; neither came to the light lest their deeds may be made manifest." This, observation proves every day. In Matthew 4 :

3, we read, "And when the tempter came to him, he said, If thou be the Son of God command that these stones be made bread," Next he "taketh him up into the Holy City, and setteth him on the Pinnacle of the temple," Third and last, he "taketh him up into an exceeding high mountain, and sheweth him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them ; and saith unto him all these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me."

What a master temptation this last was ! How men have hazarded their lives to obtain such glory as was here presented before the Son of God ! yet he did not accept it. When the devil had put forth all his wisdom and energy without avail, he left him, and "angels came and ministered unto him. Then he came down, and after three days he was ready to commence the work of his ministry, when the brilliancy of the light began to shine forth with effulgent glory.

Jonah was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, before he satisfied Divine justice for refusing to go and preach to the Ninevites. He then began to proclaim the message to the people with fervency and zeal ; and it had the desired effect ; for they clothed themselves in sack cloth and ashes, from the King upon his throne to the beggar on the dung-hill ; and God had mercy on them and spared the city. The Son of man was three days and three nights in the heart of the earth ; then arose triumphant, broke the bars of death ; was first seen by Mary Magdalene, to whom he said, "Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended to my Father ; but go to my brethren and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and to my God and your God. Mary Magdalene was so over-joyed at seeing her Lord, that she hastened to make it manifest to the disciples, and said with joy in her heart, "I have seen the Lord, and he spake these things unto me." Matth. 28 : 7, And the angel said to Mary, "Go quickly, and tell his disciples, that he is risen from the dead ; and, behold, he goeth before you into Galilee : there shall ye see him. Lo, I have told you." 16th verse, "Then the eleven disciples went away into Galilee, into a mountain where Jesus had appointed them ; and when they saw him they worshipped him ; but some doubted. And Jesus came and spake unto them saying, All power is given to me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." This is now the crowning point to this essay, where we all may learn wisdom. If we read, and understand, when we are baptized in the name of the Father, we honor him ; when we are baptized in the name of the Son, we honor him ; when we are baptized in the name of the Holy Ghost, we honor him ; and that brings us into close relationship with the three persons in the Godhead, giving them equal honor ; for they are equally interested in our salvation. There are three persons in the Godhead, and they are one ; therefore, when we honor all three in our baptism, it is one baptism, and will accomplish one thing, that is our salvation, if the prerequisites are attended to according to Gospel order, and will bring us into such close affinity with God the Father, and God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost, that a halo will encircle our life and conduct, which will be in brilliancy like the starry firmament. Very little danger of us falling away, or going back, to the weak and beggarly elements of the world, as many do. The grand reason why this is the fact, is, because in their initiation into the family of God, they are left so far from the window that they can scarcely see the light. If Noah had been in the first story of the ark the light would not have shone so brilliantly as it did where he was. So with us ; if we are initiated, by the numeral three, into Christ who is come a light into the world for us, then the light will be so clear that we shall be able to see objects divine with precision and will begin to travel toward the heavenly Canaan ; making rapid strides to enjoy the bliss there in store for us ; for Paul says, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things that the Lord hath prepared for them that love him." Again, "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, and for correction, and instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may become perfect, throughly furnished unto all good works."

In conclusion we would advise you, dear reader, to pay close attention to to the reading of God's word, and never become wiser than God, and begin to dictate, for by so doing you will dishonor the Godhead who has so wisely made arrangements for our eternal salvation, so that if we do not accept the offers we have, we will be doomed to everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power.

GEORGE WORST.

Obedience vs. Disobedience.

"For as by one man's disobedience, many were made sinners; so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous." Romans 5 : 19.

In the scripture before us, we desire to place obedience, in close proximity, with its opposition. Upon the one, has been set the seal of cendemnation; to the other, the germ upon which are predicated the promises, looking toward the salvation of the immortal soul. The one, we find in its insufficiency, away back in the dim vista of the past, in the garden of Eden. The other is originated and matured in Christ our living head, who has sanctified and hallowed it with his own precious blood, it being exemplified in the mysterious personification of divinity and humanity, from whom originates the whole plan of redemption.

Obedience in its simplified significance implies the act of obeying; submission to authority; disobedience, neglect or refusal to obey. Hence we discover the volition was first placed before Adam our progenitor. It was here that man was first endowed with a free will agency, the exercise of which through him has been extended unto the whole human family, his posterity. We find that Adam, in his creation, was pronounced good, and very good; but for some cause through the predeterminate fore-counsel of God, which is best known unto hinself, as it is not expedient for us to dive into all the mysteries through which his fore knowledge was to abound; for "Known unto God are all his works from the beginning." Hence we will not pretend to insult his infinite wisdom by elaborating upon the mystery of his wonderful works. Suffice it to say it is enough to fathom the effects of his divine love, produced by them, and to profit by accepting in all their efficiency, the saving efficacies made accessible to no through the obedience of his son Jesus Christ, our Lord, who was obedient unto death of the cross, all of which was induced by the disobedience of our first parents.

We find the trees of life and of good and evil planted in the midst of the garden of Eden—because being invested with the power and dignity of free will, God wished to give Adam the means of testing his obedience to the divine behests. Hence was set before him the tree of Life and the tree of Knowledge of good and evil; the tree of life, so called because it had that inherent quality in it that man, by eating the fruit of it would have been preserved in a constant state of health, vigor, and strength, and would not have died at all

The tree of knowledge could not communicate any real wisdom to man; but by eating of its forbidden fruit he dearly purchased the knowledge of evil to which, before, he was a stranger.

The sublety of the devil in the form of a serpent, exercised his first volition as the tempter, which has also been entailed upon us even unto the latest generation. We perceive how cunningly he seies upon the weaker vessel and decoys her into becoming the instrumentality in his hands, desiring to attain unto the wisdom proposed. She holds up the luscious fruit to beguile her unwary husband. She succeeds; he too, becomes partaker with her, and here disobedience obtains its birth, and through it man falls from his primeval state, his original purity, and sin is entailed upon the whole human race; the extinction of which could only be obliterated by the blood of Jesus, our second Adam, by whose obedience many were to be made righteous.

As we have been endeavoring to get before you disobedience in its incipiency, we shall now attempt to place before your mind the act of obedience, and the great source from which it first germinated, and was sanctified by the atoning blood of the Lamb slain before the foundation of the world, for redemption from our fallen condition. I trust we have endeavored to develop disobedience with the seal of condemnation confirmed, and obedience with the seal of sanctification stamped upon it in the exemplification of it in his own personage. This in itself should be enough to hallow it as the great available means through which we have access by faith into his grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in the bright hope of that glory we anticpate enjoying in the regions of eternal bliss.

Therefore as by the offence of one Judgment came upon all, to condemnation, even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men into justication of life. For if the first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second. For this is the covenant I will make with the house of Iseral in those days, saith the Lord. I will put my law into their minds, and in their hearts will I write them, and I will be to them a God and they shall be to me a people, for I will be merciful to the righteousness, and their sins and iniquities will I remember no more. Then all things being perfected in him through obedience, by virtue of which through his Sonship he became the author of eternal salvation to all who obey. Hence the same obedience that characterized his submission to the will of the Father in heaven, has been made the sanctified means by which we are to bow in holy submission to the divine authority with which he has been invested. Faith in the atoning of his blood is the great propelling power that is to set our poor fallen humanity in motion, looking to Jesus as the great pioneer of souls, to land us safely into that heaven of eternal rest, all those who obey from the heart that form of doctrine once delivered to the saints. I would here suggest, after having attained thus far on our trip heaven-ward, that it is of the most profound importance that we keep close vigilence upon the many weaknesses our mortality is heir to, looking out for breakers upon which we are liable to be wrecked on our voyage; and if any fears seem to be looming up before us, as regards our safety, it will be well to cling closely to the helm, the rock of our salvation; the stone which is a tried stone, that has become the head of the corner, whose foundation is sure—is God.

He has never been found wanting in any thing that Christian perfection aspires to. Through implicit obedience, to his will we have his promise to guide us into the way of all truth. He that doeth my will shall know of the doctrine. He is the life, the truth, and the way. Just let our implicit faith be like that of old father Abraham, who is the father of us all, as pertaining to the righteousness of faith, who staggered not at the promises of God, believing that whatsoever he promised He was also able to perform. For all the promises in Him are Yea and Amen. The offering up of Isaac upon the sacrificial altar, in my opinion prefigured very beautifully the offering up by God the Father of his only begotten Son, to make reconciliation for Adam's disobedience. In Abraham's sacrifice was the last great, and final test of his obedience. Hence we discover that this living faith that was generated in him has been extended to all who desire to accept of the means of grace made susceptible to us through faith, repentance and baptism for the remission of sins, by which we are inducted into the church militant, clothed with the garb of a soldier in Christ. Our warfare has now just begun. But on therefore the whole armor of God that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the Devil.

Now by way of application, as we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us, let me, in my weakness, vividly impress upon your minds that we pray you, in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God, for he hath made him to be sin for us who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him; for he has said: "I have heard thee in a time accepted and in the day of salvation have I succored thee. Behold now is the day of salvation; if ye hear his voice harden not your hearts."

I have attempted to place before you life and death, which in time past was set before our progenitors. The same volition is now given you; it is your prerogative to exercise the same free-will agency which had its birthright in him. Let me now implore you in the fear of God, choose ye between obedience and disobedience with its seal of eternal condemnation, with all the horrors of the curling flames of perdition looming up before your fertile imagination; but waiting to claim you as its unhappy victim, from whose pangs of misery and woe, you will know no release. I would feign spread the vail of commisertion over this awful picture by which you can realize but a faint conception of your eternal doom; but let God be true and every man a liar.

However, thanks be to God who giveth us the victory! We have the remedy in which is virtue enough and to spare, if the application is properly made to your sin-sick souls.—You have in the very opposite term obedience with the signet of sanctification indelibly enstamped upon it by the all atoning blood of Jeses, who became poor that we through his poverty might be made rich toward God, who would have all men come to a knowledge of the truth as it is in him, and become partakers of that spiritual life, to fit, qualify, and sanctify us for that glorious immortality, beyond the narrow confines of hell, death, and the grave. It is not all of life to live nor all of death to die; but after death the judgment; for the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God; and if it first begin at us what shall the end of those be who obey not the gospel of God. If the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and sinner appear? These are thoughts, my dear unconverted friends, only declaratory in reference your position, which solemnly require your most mature reflection. Knowing therefore the terror of the law, we use our best endeavors to persuade you to turn in with the overtures of mercy and be saved, accept through implicit faith and obedience his authoritative plan of redemption. "Say not in thine heart, Who shall ascend, into heaven? that is to bring Christ down; or who shall descend into the deep? that is to bring up Christ again from the dead." The righteouaness which is of faith, what saith it? "The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart, that is the word of faith which we preach; for with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation.

May God in the infinitude of his wisdom and mercy, in connection with the assistance of the convicting influences of the Holy Spirit, keep you, roll these truths of such import, as sweet morsels under your tongues, until you are induced to obey from the heart that form of doctrine once delivered to the saints, that your obedience may be sanctified through the obedience of Christ toward that righteousness for which it was so divinely designed. PETER S. NEWCOMER.

Stick to It.

During the great rebellion, after the Union armies had suffered many defeats, and when the cause of liberty looked dark and uncertain, and many a faint heart began to despair, a gentleman called upon President Lincoln, and asked him what he thought of the situation. The president expressed himself cheerfully and hopefully. "But how do you expect to conquer a rebellion of such vast magnitude, when our experience has been so unfavorable, and the history of all like conflicts are against our success?"

Mr. Lincoln replied, "I expect to conquer by sticking to it!" And so he did! simply by sticking to it. We all remember well the long and wearisome weeks, months and years of the terrible war. We remember the frequent requisitions for "more men"—"more men"—wherewith to meet and wear out this determined and desperate foe. We remember the sad partings, as regiment after regiment of our young men filed into the ranks and marched to the defence of our country, and with what anxiety we read over the list of killed and wounded after a battle.

After years of desperate struggle, such as the world had seldom before witnessed, liberty was triumphant, truth and justice prevailed, "Righteousness and peace kissed each other."

Now, in the great battle of life, many persons fail to accomplish what they might and what they would, and what they ought to, because they will not "stick to it." A young man starts in the legal profession. He meets discouragements in the form of poverty, hard work, or nothing to do (which is the worst of all.) He falters, looks back, and finally fails in his purpose. Many a good mechanic conceives of some valuable improvement in the science of machinery, which would insure him a fortune and give him a reputation; but he lacks the energy to develop it.

So in the Christian life, which is frequently called in the Scriptures "a warfare," we fail to come off conquerors over the great enemy of truth, because we weary of the conflict.

We gain many victories, and like Mark Antony, march triumphantly over all opposition for a season; but like him we are conquered at last; not for want of courage or strength, not for want of ability, but simply for want of endurance.

Many will fail to carry the palms of of victory or wear the crown of glory, because thay will not "Endure hardness like good soldiers." When our Saviour taught His disciples privately upon the Mount of Olives He told them of the trials, the conflicts, "the discouragement which they would meet, but He gave them this comforting assurance, "But he that endureth to the end the same shall be saved." (Mat. xxiv. 13.)

Memory.

The problem of memory is closely connected with the question of the mechanical relation between thought and structure. How intimate is the alliance of memory with the material condition of the brain, is shown by the effect of age, of disease, of a blow, of intoxication. We have known an aged person repeat the same question five, six, or seven times, during the same brief visit. An eminent surgeon was once asked to see a woman who had just been injured in the street. On coming to herself, "Where am I?—what has happened?" she asked. "Knocked down by a horse ma'am—stunned a little—that is all." A pause, while one with moderate haste might count a hundred—and then again, "Where am I?—what has happened?" "Knocked down by a horse, ma'am—stunned a little—that is all." Another pause, and the same question again, and so on during the whole time I was with her. The same tendency to repeat a question indefinitely has been observed in returning memories of those worshiping assemblies whose favorite hymn is, "We won't go home till morning."

Is memory, then material record? Are the brains like the rocks of the Sinaitic valley, written all over with inscriptions, left by the long caravans of thought, as they have passed year after year through their mysterious recesses? When we see a distant railway train sliding by us, in the same line, day after day, we infer the existence of a track which guides it. So, when some dear old friend begins that story we remember so well, turning off at the accustomed point of digression, coming to a dead stop at the puzzling question of chronology, off the track on the matter of its being first or second cousin of somebody's aunt; set on it again by the patient, listening wife, who knows it all as she knows her well-worn wedding ring; how can we doubt that there is a track laid down for the story in some disposition of the thinking marrow? We need not say that no microscope can find the tablet inscribed with the names of early loves, the stains left by tears of sorrow, or contrition, the rent where the thunderbolt of passion has fallen, or any legible token that such experiences have formed a part of the life of the mortal, the vacant temple of whose thoughts it is exploring.

Brieflets.

HUMILITY is the solid foundation of all the virtues.

GRIEF knits two hearts in closer bonds than happiness ever can; and common suffering is a far stronger link than common joy.

OVER THE HILL TO THE POOR HOUSE.

By Will M. Carleton.

OVER the hill to the poor house I'm trudgin' my weary way—
I, a woman of seventy, and only a trifle gray—
I, who am smart an' chipper, for all the years I've told,
As many another woman that's only half as old.

Over the hill to the poor house—I can't quite make it clear!
Over the hill to the poor house—it seems so horrid queer!
Many a step I've taken a toilin' to and fro,
But this is a sort of a journey I never thought to go.

What is the use of heapin' on me a pauper's shame?
Am I lazy or crazy? am I blind or lame?
True, I am not so supple, nor yet so awful stout;
But charity ain't no favor, if one can live without.

I am willin' an' anxious an' ready any day
To work for a decent livin' an' pay my honest way;
For I can earn my victuals, an' more, too, I'll be bound,
If anybody only is willin' to have me round.

Once I was young an' han'some—I was, upon my soul—
Once my cheeks was roses, my eyes as black as coal;
And I can't remember, in them days, of hearin' people say,
For any kind of reason, that I was in their way.

'Taint no use of boastin', or talkin' over free,
But many a house an' home was open then for me;
Many a han'some offer I had from likely men,
And nobody ever hinted that I was a burden then.

And when to John I was married, sure he was good and smart,
But he and all other neighbors would own I done my part;
For life was all before me, an' I was young an' strong,
And I worked the best that I could in tryin' to get along.

And so we worked together; and life was hard, but gay,
With now and then a baby for to cheer us on our way;
Till we had half a dozen, an' all growed clean and neat,
An' went to school like others, an' had enough to eat.

So we worked for the child'rn, and raised them every one,
Work'd for 'em summer and winter, just as we ought to've done,
Only perhaps we humored 'em, which some good folks condemn,
But every couple's child'rn's a heap the best to them.

Strange how much we think of our blessod little ones!—
I'd have died for my daughters, I'd have died for my sons;
And God he made the rule of love, but when we're old and gray,
I've noticed it sometimes somehow fails to work the other way.

Strange, another thing: when our boys and girls was grown,
And when, exceptin' Charlie, they'd left us there alone;
When John, he nearer an' nearer come, and dearer seemed to be,
The Lord of Hosts He came one day an' took him away from me.

Still I was bound to struggle, an' never to cringe or fall—
Still I worked for Charley, for Charley was now my all;
And Charley was pretty good to me, with scarce a word or frown,
Till at last he went a-courtin', and brought a wife from town.

She was somewhat dressy, an' hadn't a pleasant smile—
She was quite conceity, an' carried a heap o' style;
But if ever I tried to be friends, I did with her, I know.
But she was hard and proud, an' I couldn't make it go.

She had an edication, and that was good for her;
But when she twitted me on mine, 'twas carrying things too fur;
An' I told her once, 'fore company, (an' it almost made her sick)
That I never swallowed a grammar, or et a 'rithmetic.

So 'twas only a few days before the thing was done—
They was a family of themselves, and I another one;
And a very little cottage one family will do,
But I never have seen a house that was big enough for two.

An' I never could speak to suit her, never could please her eye,
An' it made me independent, an' then I didn't try:
But I was terribly staggered, an' felt it like a blow,
When Charley turned agin me, and told me I could go.

I went to live with Susan, but Susan's house was small.
And she was always a hintin' how snug it would be for us all,
And what with her husband's sisters, and what with children three,
'Twas easy to discover there wasn't room for me.

An' then I went to Thomas's, the oldest son I've got,
For Thomas's buildings 'd cover the half of an acre lot:
But all the child'rn was on me—I couldn't stand their sauce—
And Thomas said I needn't think I was comin' there to boss.

An' then I wrote to Rebecca, my girl who lives out west,
And to Isaac, not far from her—some twenty miles at best;
And one of 'em said 'twas too warm there for any one so old,
And t'other had the opinion the climate was too cold.

So they have shirked and slighted me, an' shifted me about—
So they have well nigh soured me, an' worn my old heart out;
But still I've borne up pretty well, an' wasn't much put down,
Till Charley went to the poor house an' put me on the town.

Over the hill to the poor house—my child'rn dear, good-by!
Many a night I've watched you when only God was nigh;
And God 'll be judge between us; but I will always pray
That you shall never suffer the half I do to-day.

—Harper's Weekly.

THE shadows of the mind are like those of the body. In the morning of life they lie behind us; at noon we trample them under our feet; and in the evening they stretch long and deepening shadows before us.

FOUNDATIONS are hidden. It is not the apparent virtues that give stability to character. It is not what a man appears to be, but what he is in the foundations.

IT is said that when one asked Augustine "What is the first article in the Christian religion?" he replied. "Humility." "And what is the second?" "Humility." "And what the third?" "Humility."

BEAUTY, like the flowering blossoms, soon fades; but the divine excelence of the mind, like the medical virtues of the plant, remains in it, when all those charms are withered.

Acceptable Prayer.

See here, my brother, do you remember how often it has occurred to you, when you warmed up in prayer, threw off your embarrassment, and had an easy, happy flow of language, that you were now doing very finely in your petitions, and that God was giving special audience to your unfettered utterance. Now, just take a second thought, and remember that all one's easy, happy flow of language usually indicates but little, and that in itself it is nothing in the hearing of God. Remember that it is the honest heart, the upright and obedient life, that are essential to acceptable prayer. If your heart and life are right, your most stammering utterance shall prevail with God. If your heart and life are wrong in God's sight, your tongue of eloquence will be only babbling and mockery in the ears of the Almighty. Never, then, congratulate yourself upon liberty in prayer till you are convinced that that prayer went from a heart honest, sincere, and wholly given up to love and serve the Lord.

Counsel for Parents.

Nervous children suffer untold agonies from fear when put to bed alone. No tongue can tell the horrors of a lonesome room to such children. A little delicate boy whom his parents were drilling to sleep alone, used to cry violently every night, and his father would come in and whip him. He mistook his pertinacity for obstinacy, and he thought it his duty to conquer the child's will. One night he said:—"Why do you always scream so, when you know you will be punished?" "Oh father, father!" said the little fellow; "I don't mind you whipping me, if you only stay with me." The father's eyes were opened from that moment. He saw that a human being cannot be governed by dead rules, like a plant or an animal.

To Make Home Happy.

To make home truly happy, there should be no concealments; for they are the canker worms. Let a woman tell her troubles and tales freely to her husband, and he will assist her out of them. He is her other self, and not her judge and master. If a man confide in his wife, her penetration and quick wit will often see things that escape him. We are in the world all day; our minds are occupied by many details; but she sits at home, often alone, or with but an infant companion. She thinks over what her husband has told her, and sees it in many lights; she has had the time which he wanted. The discovery that there has been a secret excites jealousy, and loosens the ties of affection on either side.

Help Wanted.

We are in need of help in the type setting department of our office. A steady, industrious hand can obtain a permanent situation. One or two apprentices, boys or girls, would also be employed. None but such as are fully competent need apply. Boys must be under eighteen years of age, and must be good in orthography, reading, and English grammar. No application will be noticed unless written by the applicant himself, or herself.

Brother Henry:—We would like if you would pay us a visit next spring, going to or coming from the Annual Meeting. We would be glad to see you in our midst once more.—If you can comply, give us some notice in due time, and we will gladly make farther arrangements.

ERED. W. KOHLER.

New Middletown, Ohio.

If we are spared we shall certainly try very hard to stop off for a few days with the brethren of the old Columbiana congregation, and revive some of our acquaintances that are getting a little dim. This will we do if God wills.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn Book.

We take pleasure in announcing to our anxious readers that the Tune and Hymn Book is under way. We have also the assurance that it will be prosecuted as rapidly as possible. We once more ask the patience of the friends of this work. No doubt they cannot see why there should be so much delay; nor can we, but it is so, and could not well be prevented.

We hope in a short time to ascertain the price of the Book. when we shall be ready to receive orders.

"Brother Holsinger:—You have been sending me the COMPANION for some time when I had not paid for it. This is a charity that I did appreciate very much. We are so very lonesome since they stopped.—My wife (a sister) complains often that we cannot hear from the Brotherhood any more. She says, ask brother Holsinger to send us the COMPANION again; but I told her we did owe him already, and I did not like to impose upon the good nature of brother Holsinger; but I do wish some one of our brethren or sisters who have enough and to spare would send us the COMPANION. Now, dear brother, if I get able to work I will get you that money which we owe you, and if not, God will reward you."

The above is an extract of a letter from a brother who has been an occasional contributor to the COMPANION, and who has been reduced to poverty by disease. Imagine, dear brethren and sisters, that you are a witness to the scene when the conversation in regard to sending for the C. F. C., occurred. The sister, longing to hear of the Brotherhood, and in the simplicity of her heart, perhaps not thinking of the cost, asks her husband to send for the COMPANION. The husband, conscious of his indebtedness, and sensitive upon the measure of propriety, reminds her of their poverty, and past obligations.—Of course we will send it, and would not refuse such an application if we had five hundred of them. But we do not expect to do this warfare at our own charges. We have a Charity Fund to which we charge all names entered, who are unable to pay, and to which we credit amounts contributed from fifty cents and upward. Brethren and sisters, you who have means at your disposal, perhaps you could do good by contributing to this fund. Think of it when you pray for the poor, and use your own judgment.

Tobacco Supplement.

We have still some of the Tobacco Supplements on hand. Price five cents; thirty cents a dozen. We had forgotten these tracts until lately, when they were called for. They ought to be out and at work. Brethren and sisters, send for them, and distribute them. They will do good. Brother Isaac Price says of them:—"They are better than Trask's tracts; more moderate; more rational; more persuasive. I know of one who was effectually converted by this supplement."

The School Festival.

This beautiful little Quarterly Magazine, devoted to new and sparkling matter for the School Exhibitions and public days, is received for January. No teacher or pupil should be without it. It costs only fifty cents a year; single copies, fifteen cents. Write for it, to ALFRED L. SEWELL, Publisher, Chicago, Ill. Send your subscriptions now, and you will not regret it.

Answers To Correspondents.

EMANUEL RENNER. The Emphatic Diaglott is in Greek characters; but it contains all the explanations necessary to learn to read them. It has references and notes. Price $4, postage prepaid.

JOHN H. STAGER. The book will be sent as soon as we can get it.

DANIEL H. MAY. If you will give us your postoffice we will send you an Almanac, and correct your name from Samuel.

ISAAC LEEDY. The exchange has been made, and the "Phrenological Journal" ordered for you. For information in regard to Tune and Hymn Book, see elsewhere. If you send us something first rate it will appear. Not with us does the "name brother outweigh the grace necessary to make such."

SECRET. If it was a secret then why did they not keep it to themselves. A newspaper office is the last place a secret should be entrusted to. If you do not want a fact proclaimed from the "house top," keep it from our knowledge, for that is a part of our business. We despise whisperings; they are not only unmannerly but unchristian. Paul classes whisperers among backbiters, haters of God, despiteful, proud, &c. "Where there is no whisperer (margin) strife ceaseth", and "A whisperer separateth chief friends", we are told in the book of Proverbs. We have about as many secrets of our own as we are able to keep. Ours is a publishing house.

T. D. LYON. After allowing percentage on your list, and deducting price of Emphatic Diaglott, we owe you $1.05.

JOHN G. NEHER. You will take notice that brother I. B. Ward, to whom your note offers information, has gone to his grave. Consequently we have not published it.

ALLEN RHODES. Your subscription for 1871 began with No. 8.

LANDON WEST. Satisfied.

V. C. FISHER. Right.

W. WYLAND. About the 20th of April, 1871, you sent $1.50, which we placed to the credit of J. P. Wyland. If that was right you have now paid twice for him. How is it? A. Rummell did not pay for last year's paper. He got it only six months.

GEO. MYERS. See No. 3, page 47.

A. BOWMAN. We have placed sister A. B. on the poor list for 1872; if, however, she will pay a part, the amount will be put to the charity fund.

R. B. REIGERT. Nead's Theology is not published in German. We have no extras of the G. V.

GEO. WORST. We acknowledged the whole in your name, because we received it from you; but gave sister Martin credit on our books with $21.00, according to instructions.

J. S. FLORY. J. H. Comer's subscription expires with No. 10. From that to the close of volume 8 will cost $1.20

D. A. BAILY. In writing for the Press your paper should not be over 6 inches wide.

DAVID MARTIN. You have now paid for volume 7. We are sending volume 8, as directed.

S. T. BOSSERMAN. We have been sending S. Bradford's COMPANION regularly to Williamstown, Ohio, as on your list. Is that her office? What Nos. failed?

JOHN S. STUTZMAN. The Phrenological Journal has been ordered for you. If, in due time, it does not come to hand, drop a note to S. R. Wells, 389 Broadway, New York, and tell him you subscribed through us.

DAVID BOWSER: Your proposal is satisfactory.

D. M. WITMER: Satisfactory.

W. E. FADELY: It is all right. Keep in good spirits.

AARON ROSE. The C. F. C. addressed to this person at Columbus Grove, Ohio is said not to be called for. It is marked paid. Who knows?

House Burned.

We have information of the burning of the house of Jacob P. Walker, residing about three miles west of this place, on Friday night, third instant. All its contents were consumed, and the family barely escaped, the old lady being obliged to walk a considerable distance without shoes. Insured in the Farmer's Union Association for seven hundred dollars.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Queries.

An explanation is requested, through the C. F. C., of the following words: "And if I by Beelzebub cast out devils, by whom do your children cast them out? therefore they shall be your Judges." Matt. 12: 27.

Divorces—For Information.

Living as I do in a state famous for Divorces, I have been led to inquire —What is marriage in its true signification? What do we understand by the term? Is it as considered by common law, a civil contract, entered into by the parties for convenience sake? A contract wherein the man agrees to look after legal rights of woman; and the woman agrees to watch over domestic affairs of the man; and their rights, legally become one. If you say it is not a civil contract, I then ask what is it? From whence did it come? Who authorized it? And for what purpose was it authorized? Some marriages according to our laws, are legal; others, illegal.—Does the legality, or illegality, make them right or wrong, in, and of themselves? A full and complete answer, to all, and every one of the above interragatives, is most sincerely desired, asked and prayed for, in hope of getting at the truth for truth's sake. Answer promptly through the C. F. C.

J. SHELLEY.

H. R. HOLSINGER; Dear brother: —I will now give you the results of our meeting, as near as I can. We commenced the meeting on the 14th of January, and continued day and night, (excepting Saturday,) until Sunday, the 21st. The members of the church were well represented and I think much revived, during the meeting. The meetings were well attended in general, especially at night. We expect to reap the fruits of the meeting by next Spring, God willing, and we live. Brother John Spanogle, and James Lane were chief speakers. Brother Christ. Myers, from Tuscarora, was with us during four meetings. May God bless their efforts.

Wisdom.

My Dear Brethren:—I acknowledge with feelings of thankfulness the reception of your paper; and pray God to prosper and bless you in all things both spiritual and temporal. It is filled with excellent reading matter, and encouraging thoughts, of such a spiritual nature that I feel and pray that Heaven's blessings may attend it, and all the advocates of its teaching.—Next to my Bible I prize its reading; and the more I investigate God's holy word, the more I am persuaded that the Brethren are right. The doctrine of the Savior is the true doctrine, and all who love him must obey him.—And now, brethren, if you will allow me, I feel like saying a word, and may God bless the weak effort. My subject is Wisdom. "Where shall wisdom be found? And where is the place of understanding?" Job 28: 12. The 28th verse of the same chapter, is the answer: "Unto man he said, Behold, the fear of the Lord, that is wisdom; and to depart from Evil is understanding." Now we have the basis upon which we build—"The fear of the Lord."

Why should man fear the Lord? For the self-evident fact, that it is the beginning of wisdom. There is implanted, in the heart of every man and woman, a desire to known. But in order to know aright they must fear the Lord; and, furthermore, it is the very essence, which will throw a fragrance all around their pathway, as they journey through life. The Lord is Maker of heaven and earth, and all that is in them. He governs the world by his power; he protects his creatures from danger, and watches over them with a Father's care and a true Parent's regard. His goodness is unbounded. He saw us in our naked condition, and he provided us a garment to clothe ourselves with; and this is given unto us free of charge, "without money and without price"—given freely, a gracious gift—a gift which an unregenerated world knows nothing of. He has also given us time, place and opportunity to understand what his will is concerning us. How humbly should we acknowledge the gift! It is of great moment; and those of us who had felt his pardoning love, should endeavor, day by day, to acquiesce in, and comply with, his requirement, in all things, and by thus doing, secure unto ourselves that rich inheritance, which is incorruptible, and which fadeth not away. Search after wisdom as after hidden treasure; then, after obtaining that pearl of great price, stand not still with the glittering prize; but spread it abroad. Encourage others to go forward and wash and be clean. This is an important theme, and one which should actuate us to operate in the great battle-field, with a view to benefit the world in which we live.

"And to depart from evil is understanding." There are by-roads to lead fallen humanity astray. The sins of the world are legion in numbers; and it requires the Christian to be on his watch tower, in order that he may over-throw the works of Satan. The cause that Christians are engaged in is a good one. When I say Christians, I mean Christians—those who love the cause of the Savior, and who are aiming to do his will, abondoning wickedness in all its multiplied forms. The banner under which Christians sail has inscribed upon it, faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly-kindness, and charity. We are told, that if these abound in us we are neither barren nor unfruitful.

Now my Christian reader trusting that these broken, and scattered thoughts may spread and grow, and may produce in my own heart a greater work of grace, and be beneficial in causing more of a hungering and thirsting after righteousness and true holiness, which in the sight of good is above all price.

For the Companion.

Maine Correspondence.

John Dennis,

Dear Friend:—This morning I mailed, after considerable, delay, a number of Family Companions, containing your last letter and my answer, which, I hope, will arrive in due time. As you wrote in your last letter about a missionary, I have the following inquiries: What kind of people are your citizens? Is English the only language, or have you also German? Of what denomination are you, and those mentioned in your letter, Elders? For what reasons are you dissatisfied with the denomination with which you are connected? By answering the above, you will do me a favor; and if you have any more to ask of me, ask with freedom. With the hope of hearing of you before long, I will close by subscribing myself. Your Humble Servant,

C. Bucher.

Answer.

Our people are most all English.—The most of our people belong to the Free-will Baptists. There are some of the Christian Baptists here, and others—all of which take the Bible as their rule of faith and practice. The reasons of dissatifaction are want of spirituality, humility, lack of funds and missionary labor, sectarianism, will-worship, and the captain spirit, &c., Yours in Christ,

John Dennis.

At the same time, dear brother Bucher, answers to the following questions are desired by many friends: Is Jesus Christ equal with God the Father? Were Jesus and the Apostles baptized by trine immersion? Is it your belief that Paul, the jailor, and others in apostolical times were baptized by trine immersion? Do your people take up collections or contributions for missionary and religious purposes as we find in the 8th and 9th chapters of 2nd Cor.? Yours in the bonds of the Gospel,

John Dennis.

Answer.

Jesus Christ is equal with God the Father in capacity, but not in office. Christ said, "I and the Father are one;" again, "The Father is greater than I;" also, "All men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father." This question, to my knowledge, was never at issue with us.—We take all as we read it both of God the Father and of Christ the Son.

We have no scripture how Jesus and the apostles were baptized, save by immersion.

We believe that after the Commission was given,—"Baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.—they were all baptized by trine immersion, for at least two hundred years thereafter.

We do not find the word "missionary" in said chapters. We have no regular or stated collections, only when there is need. In the above case it was only for the saints' wants. We take care of them too. As long as members live according to the gospel teachings, so that they can be held as such, they are not allowed to go, or be taken, to the almshouse.

Yours, &c. C. BUCHER.

EXTRACT OF A LATER LETTER:

Brother Bucher. We shall take the C F. Companion soon. If a missionary comes on this winter, have him bring books, papers, &c., to sell, and get subscribers for your papers; and stay some six or eight months, or more. May the good Lord bless you all, is the prayer of your unworthy brother, JOHN DENNIS.

Now, dear brethren, a word to you: Thus far I have tried to attend to the above correspondence; and as you have seen, there is a call for something more,—some one to preach the "old Jerusalem Gospel" to them,—give this your attention. Is some one to go? Who is to go? How and when is he to go? Will some older brethren please give their views on this going question? C. BUCHER.

Schafferstown, Pa.

Brethren Holsinger and Beer:—Inasmuch as news from the churches is acceptable with the members of our fraternity, I have a few items to lay before them, through the columns of your paper. On the 24th of December, I left home, to meet with the brethren and sisters of the Sandy Creek branch, Fayette county, Pa., under the charge of Elder Jacob M, Thomas. Had five meetings, all well attended, and good attention paid to the word preached. The members seem to have a sufficiency of the zeal of God to keep the ark moving.

On December 30th, left home to meet with the brethren of the Quemahoning branch, Somerset county, Pa., under charge of Elder Tobias Blough. Here we had quite a revival. Six souls added by baptism, and two reclaimed while I was there, and one before I came to the place of meeting. Good impressions were left upon the minds of others that were nearly ready to say, "We are coming too." This church is in a flourishing condition; well supplied with ministers and deacons.

On the 17th of January, I left home to meet with the brethren in the Ten Mile branch, Washington county, Pa., under the charge of Elder John Wise. In the evening of same day, Elder Joseph I. Cover, (house-keeper in the George's Creek branch, Fayette county), met me at the house of brother Johnson, of the same county. In the morning of the 18th, Joseph and I started on horse back for said branch; landed safely at brother Wise's in the evening of same day. Next morning we started for what is called the Brick Church, same branch, where we met with the church in council, and after a few and friendly discussions of the matter in question, we, with the church, disposed of the matter without a dessenting voice. After we had disposed of the business for which we were called, we commenced preaching, and had some very interesting meetings; were kindly treated by the members in that locality.—When I came there I knew but four persons; but now I can say I have added quite a number to my list of names. This is the same branch in which we expect to meet in council for Western Pennsylvania, this coming spring. If we live till then we may have more to say. Until then, accept of our thanks for the kindness you bestowed upon us while in your midst. Yesterday I conducted two meetings in our own district. This is something I had not done since October last. At this rate one would suppose that the brethren here would not likely bring a charge against, me for my frequent preaching. I here close by giving my thanks to all the brethren with whom I had the pleasure of meeting. Pray for your humble servant in Christ, C. G. LINT

Dale City, Pa.

In the "Companion" Office.

We have been on a visit to the Brethren, at Berlin, Somerset county, Penn'a., in company with brother Jeremiah Brown, of Urbana, Maryland. We attended seventeen meetings, and two funerals. The first funeral was that of a child of brother Jacob Myers, on Sunday the 21st of January. The second that of brother John L. Forney, on Saturday, 27th, of whose death there will likely be farther notice through the COMPANION. Both funerals were largely attended.

Our meetings increased in number and interest. And although we had no additions, and eternity must tell the result of our labors, we have the satisfaction of believing that some good impressions were made, and the confession of some who told us their minds were made up to serve the Lord. The Brethren manifested a great deal of interest in the meetings. We formed many pleasant acquaintances; and received acts of kindness which we shall not soon forget.

On Tuesday, 30th, we were kindly brought by one of the brethren, and accompanied by several brethren and one sister, to Dale City, where we were kindly received. We attended three meetings at this place, and visited widows and fatherless, and endeavored to administer words of comfort, and held seasons of prayer.

Among the rest we were permitted to visit the pleasant families of the editors of the COMPANION, where we enjoyed ourselves very much, and increased our love and respect for them, which we think will be the case with all those who visit them.

After taking leave of a number of brethren, sisters and friends, we now find ourselves in the sanctum of the C. F. C., where we find our editor brethren very busily engaged; indeed so much as to draw upon our sympathies. They are more than ordinarily throng in consequence of some of their help having been indisposed, and others having been called to wait upon friends, and thus are deprived of much of the enjoyment they might and should have. But upon the whole we are much pleased to find them so well situated, and prepared to do work.

From the appearance of the manuscript box we think the readers of their valuable journal will be well entertained for a time to come.

We would have much more to say, but train time is drawing near, when we must bid farewell. We expect to stop off at Cumberland, and perhaps attend a meeting to-night.

JACOB D. TROSTLE.

Of Ligannore, Md.

Dear Companion:—I am truly sorry to read of the death of the PIOUS YOUTH. Who sinned that the P. Y. must die? Is its death the result of sin? "When sin is finished it bringeth forth death." If you, brethren editors, did all you could to save the P. Y. that it might go on its mission of piety, then you are free of blood. In these days of moral and spiritual laxity, every person and thing which contributes in any way to make piety abound, should be sustained;—if need be, should be fed on golden food. Its death is announced. Then I suppose it needs no farther sustenance. But I still entertain hopes that it is not dead, but, damsel-like, sleepeth. Let its friends see to this matter. Could we not awake it? nourish it till it has more years and more strength to endure? To weep now would be childish, to be indifferent or cold is unwise. A few sober reflections, brethren, is what we need. All will be well yet I trust. Look at the past character and influence of the P. Y., and what might it not be in our midst if we only should do did our whole duty.

Yours truly,

LEWIS KIMMEL.

SCHUYLKILL, PA., Jan. 20th, 1872.

Brother Henry :—I am sorry the PIOUS YOUTH must die. Is there really no hope for him? When it was seen that it must die unless better supported, I still had a lingering hope that there would be help. I have oft repeated to myself, can it be possible that our church will lose the prospective benefit of this little periodical, which in turn, if sustained, would gather in the youths of our members, and thereby sustain the cause of the Master? It is a painful thing to think of—if no prospect at all be open. If there is any hope at all please let me know, and say about what number would fall to my lot to raise.

Keep the copy-right, and send out one or two more copies, at tolerably distant intervals; offer it in lots for Sunday-schools in the summer, and then if it don't pay, perhaps it may keep alive the interest in those who loved it, and the children for whose reading it was provided the 2 years it did live, will now soon grow up to such age as themselves to become subscribers. I hope it may yet live.

My wife's illness continues with no hope of recovery. She is patiently and hopefully awaiting the end. She cannot sit up to read, neither can she get much comfort in hearing any reading of scriptures, hymns, or the COMPANION, in consequence of the constant discomfort and uneasiness of her position. With inward fortitude she can bear up under her afflic- without manifesting impatience.—But to listen to reading, or be benefitted by it, is quite a different thing.

Ere I close, allow me to request you, dear brother, to call the attention of brother Grove, of Baltimore, to the closing of the 13th chapter of Corinthians, where the Apostle tells us that miracles shall cease; but faith, hope, and charity shall remain.

ISAAC PRICE.

A Proposal.

I would say to the scattered members in south and south-western Kansas, that I have settled in Neosho county, and expect to do what I can in the ministry. If they will let their whereabouts be known to me by letter, I will try to visit them the coming summer, by consent, when convenient. Address, Galesburg, Neosho county, Kansas. SIDNEY HODGEN.

Proposed Visit.

To Holidaysburg on the 17th of February; meeting at Catfish on the 18th. On the 19th to Martinsburg. On the 20th to the lower end of the Cove. Brother Cox is expected to accompany me on this visit, if he is well. We expect a brother from the Lower end to meet us at Martinsburg, on Monday evening, to convey us wheresoever they chose to take us. The visit is intended for the lower end of the Cove.

GRABILL MEYERS.

Brother Holsinger :—I see in your Almanac that somebody has sent you my name and address, that did not know it correctly, My address is not Brant, Ohio; but Dayton, Ohio, Box 1013. JOSEPH ARNOLD.

MARRIED.

By the undersigned, at his residence, January 16th, brother JOSEPH M. MESSAMON, and MARY G. MYERS, both of Mifflin county, Pa.

Robert Badger.

December 31st, 1871, at the house of the bride's parents, JOHN W. SIDLE, and REBECCA M. NEVEIL, by Isaac Price.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

Died in Warren County, Indiana, January 9th. Brother Isaac B. Ward, aged 32 years, 11 months, and 14 days. He leaves a wife (sister in the church) and four children, with many friends to mourn their loss. Brother Isaac joined the church in his youth and (we believe) lived a faithful member in the church. He was formely a resident of Miami county, Ohio, and a member of the Newton and Panther Creek arm of the church. His remains were brought here and intered in the grave yard at the Stone Church.—Brethern Cadwallader and Murray, exhorted on the occassion. Text, Looking for Jesus.

Another of our readers of the C. F. C. has been overtaken by the tyrant death, without warning. Brother Isaac was in his usual health on the morning of the ninth, and went to help one of his neighbors to crib corn. The crib being filled, they built it higher with small poles, after unloading the wagon, he went to pick up some scattered ears, that fell to the ground, and while stooped a light pole (leaning against the crib) fell and struck him above the left ear knocking him down. He was helped up, went to the house, and when dinner came he eat hartily, and started home walking nearly a mile on reaching home, he only spoke a word or two and was unconscious. A physician was sent for, but to no purpose a vein being bursted under his scull the blood flowed to the brain. He lived eleven hours after the accident. This should be a warning to all to be prepared to go at any hour.

On page 44, present volume, appeared a short article from him.

C. H. DEETER.

In the Lick Creek branch, Williams county, Ohio, December 17th, 1871, sister SUSANAH WALLACE, daughter of brother John C. sister Mary Ann Wallace, aged 19 years, 9 months, and 25 days. Disease, Consumption. A short time after she became ill, she sent for brethren D. Rittenhouse and J. Moore.—infant baptism would satisfy her no longer,—and requested of them to be baptized. She was carried down into the water and immersed, on the 27th of August, resolved to follow her Savior if she died in the act. Here was faith, and perfect love which casteth out fear. On the 30th of the same month, a communion was called, and 3 more were added to the church. Many were the admoritions she gave to her friends and relatives. Willing to do all she was commanded, she called on the above named brethren on the 25th of September, and was anointed with oil in the name of the Lord. Funeral services by brother Rittenhouse and others, from John 11: 25, 26.

CATH. T. BOHNER.

'HOW TO GO WEST."

Forty years ago, Illinois was as far West as most people wished to go, and journeys were made in the legendary "Prairie Schooner," but in these days of Progress and Improvement, the word West has come to mean Iowa. Nebraska, Kansas, Colorada, California, and the Territories, and the Traveler reaches almost any point therein by a splendid Line of Railroad.

This Line of Railroad is the Burlington Route, which starts from Chicago over the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R., from Indianapolis, over the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western Short Line, and from Logansaort, over the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw R. R., and running through BURLINGTON, reaches Omaha, Lincolen, Nebraska City, St. Joseph, Atchison, Leavenworth and Kansas City, connecting with the Union Pacific, Kansas Pacific and other Railroads running from those cities.

Always go "By way of Burlington" and you will be sure to be right.

The Burlington Route has admirably answered the question, "How to go West?" by the publication of a truthful and interesting document, filled with facts in regard to Time, Connections, Accommodations, rates of Fare, and other interesting items and illustrated by a large map, truthfully showing the whole West, which they distribute free of charge. Copies, and additional information can be obtained by addressing, General Passenger Agent. B. & M. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

Christian Family Companion.

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Thy Kingdom Come:—A Reply to Brother Spicher on the Lord's Prayer.

The brother says, "the kingdom of heaven" and "the kingdom of God" are synonymous. Here, we think, he is correct. "The kingdom of God" is mentioned sixty times; and "the kingdom of heaven," sixteen times, in the New Testament.

The brother says he is "prompted to believe that the kingdom has come, and was bestowed to the little flock, according to promise, over eighteen hundred years ago." But who says so? Where is the proof for that assertion? We are cited to Daniel, where the greatness of the kingdom, under the whole heaven, was gived the saints of the Most High. Now, if this kingdom was set up on the day of Pentecost, as some say, how does it come that all dominions do not serve and obey them, as it is said they should? I suppose the brother gets the idea of the "Kingdom" being already "set up" from the language, "It is at hand." But if he will go with me to the fourth chapter of Rom. 17th verse, there he will find, God told Abraham that he had made him father of many nations; even God who raiseth the dead, and calleth those things which be not as though they were; which at the appointed time will be. For instance, we read in Isaiah 9: 6, "For unto us a child is born unto us a son is given, and the government, shall be upon his shoulders: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, the Everlasting Father." Now, the expression "is born" was not fulfilled for over six hundred years. My object in writing is not to give an explanation on the words "kingdom of God" in all the parables,—that is entirely beyond my ability,—but to show, that we have no kingdom here; but that we are soldiers, fighting for a kingdom. The kingdom we pray for in the Lord's prayer is the kingdom that Christ spoke of to his disciples on that memorable night in which he ate the supper, and said, "With desire, I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer; for I say unto you, I will not any more eat thereof until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God." And of the cup he said the same,—"I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, until the kingdom of God shall come." The kingdom we pray for is the same that Peter, James, and John saw in a vision on the holy mountain; which represented Christ when he comes in his glory, Moses as the resurrected saints; and Elias, as the living saints, changed to immortality at Christ's appearing and kingdom. Then is when the kingdom is given to its rightful owner. Then all the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever. And he will, at the end of this world, send his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend and which do iniquity, and shall cast them into a furnace of fire. "Then shall the righteous shine forth in the kingdom of their Father," as spoken by Daniel, Matth. 13: 40–43. Much might be said of the kingdom which is yet to come; but we hope this will suffice.

Hope.

Hope is truly an anchor to the soul. Without hope we would be "of all men most miserable." Even in our daily avocations hope allied to prospects gives energy and buoyancy to our spirits. He that soweth, soweth in hope: he that cultivates does so in hope. All work would, without hope, be a gloomy task indeed. But hope looked at, or experienced, from a religious stand-point is worthy of our highest encomiums. Without hope while buffeting the surging billows of time, we would be like a ship without an anchor. An anchor is used to stay the ship and keep it from being tossed to and fro by the wind. So to the soul is hope an anchor that keeps our little bark from being tossed to and fro by every wind of doctrine. Hope in Christ, hopes of heaven, hope in immortality, and hopes of eternity, keep our "little ships" from foundering upon the rugged breakers of infidelity. When waves of affliction roll high and wide hope enables us to ride out the storm. With Christ at the helm and hope for an anchor, we may all sail safely over the troubled waters—pass by all the whirlpools—go safely through the surging waters—keep at a safe distance from the rugged reefs of sins, and ever be made able to buffet safely the chilly wafers of Jordan, and anchor safely at last in the harbor of eternal rest; when hope will no longer be hope but an eternal, happy, and blissful realty; no longer a shadow but an infinite substance. No longer will hope be an anchor, but heaven and the light of God's countenance will be the sea in which the soul shall bathe—yea bathe forever and ever. Faith and hope shall then meet their consummate ends; "evidence of things not seen" will now be facts apparent by a blessed observation. "Substance of things hoped for" will now be the thing itself in all its essence. Blessed be God for giving us something to build our hopes upon. Otherwise this world would be a dreary blank. May our hopes be confirmed and made strong that our life here may be a succession of joys and our life to come one eternal fact of bliss.

Christ our Light and Example.

"I am the light of the world." John 8: 12.
"Ye are the light of the world." Matth. 5 : 14.

These are the sayings of our Savior; and, in considering them with a view to learn and to be profited, we cannot easily fail to see much that should demand our careful attention, as Christians. "Ye are the light of the world," is the language of our Savior to His disciples; and, I think, thereby he intends to impress upon our minds the true idea of our position, in this world, as followers of Him. The Savior says, "I am the light of the world; he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." "Walk as children of light." "If ye continue in my words, then are ye my disciples indeed." "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

From these, and many other sacred texts, we may learn what our position is here in the world, as Christians. It seems to be the same as our Savior's was while he was in the world. "I am the light of the world," says Christ; and He is our example and pattern to follow after. Then let our thoughts take us back to the days of our Savior, and try and learn what constituted Christ (as being man) "the light of the world," that we may pattern after him, and be "the light of the world."

Our Savior did not live a life of solitude and abstraction; though we believe he had the power that he could have withdrawn himself from all contact with sinful men. He could have spared himself their insults and reproaches, had he lived in seclusion. Had he thus lived until the hour of expiation came, the world would still be in darkness; and that great and heaven-devised plan of salvation would still be a mystery, and man would be destitute of those holy and heaven-revealing lessons and institutions designed for the restoration of man. But this the Savior did not do. After He was baptized in Jordan of John, and had returned from the wilderness of temptation, he then entered upon public life, proclaiming tidings of salvation to a sin-benighted world. Then he had entered on that part of his mission in which he was "the light of the world," and an example and pattern for all his followers; and "the people which sat in darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up." Then began the light to shine 'in darkness, and the darkness comprehended it not." "The entrance of thy words giveth light." "The word was made flesh and dwelt among us in the person of Jesus Christ, in whom was embodied "the light of the world. He that said in the beginning, "Let there be light, and there was light," is in the world in human form, developing to man and bringing to light things the angels desired to look into. We see him with untiring steps journeying o'er hills and through vallies, through heat and cold, from city to city, and from village to village, proclaiming the will and mind of God; so simplifying the plan of salvation, that it is brought within the comprehension and understanding of every intelligent, finite mind; making the way plain, that "the wayfaring man, though a fool, shall not err therein." This way is handed down to us in the book of the New Testament of Jesus Christ in all its native purity and simplicity, that man may become wise unto salvation. In this,

Christ was and is "the light of the world." Paul says, "Whatsoever doth make manifest is light."

But Christ was "the light of the world," not only in this ; but Christ, as a man, (for he was man as well as God,) while here in this world, literally exemplified in person the gospel he brought and taught, that throughout his entire life he was an example to his followers, and a light to the world in all that he did and all that he said. By his meekness and forbearance ; by his humility and generous sympathies ; by his forgiving spirit and lamb-like disposition ; by his appearance and kindness ; by his doing good to all men, anywhere and at all times, and by his being strictly obedient to the will of God. Such was the character of Christ ; and these qualities must characterize his followers, that they may be "the light of the world." Brethren and sisters, let us examine ourselves in these things. And as we have entered the service of Christ, let us be "steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." And let us all strive to conform ourselves to the image of Christ, so as to shine in the same moral beauty before the world, that we, being united in one body—the church—may represent Christ in the world, and as a city set on a hill that cannot be hid.

Labor and Longevity.

Three-fourths of the difficulties and miseries of men come from the fact that most want wealth without earning it, fame without deserving it, popularity without temperance, respect without virtue, and happiness without holiness. The man who wants the best things, and is willing to pay just what they are worth, by honest effort and hard self-denial, will have no difficulty in getting what he wants at last. It is the men who want goods on credit that are snubbed and disappointed and overwhelmed in the end. Happiness cannot be bought by the bottle, nor caught up by the excursion train, nor put on with any robe or jewels, nor eaten at any feast. It does not exist in any exhilaration, excitement, or ownership, but comes from the use of the faculties of body and mind. A wise man will never rust out. As long as he can move and breathe he will be doing for himself, his neighbor, or for posterity. Who is old ? Not the man of energy, not the day laborer in science, art, or benevolence ; but he only who suffers his energies to waste away, and the spring of life to become motionless ; on whose hands the hours drag heavily, and to whom all things wear the garb of gloom. Labor in general does not tend to shorten life, but rather by strengthening the body to lengthen it ; while idleness and luxury are productive of the same results as the most unhealthy occupation.

Living Sacrifice.

"I beseech you, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." Rom. 12 : 1.

Every christian must frequently call to mind, that we belong, not to ourselves, but to God ; and this should encourage us to offer ourselves, and all we have, to God, in return.

The offerings of the Old Testament had to be voluntary : men must lead a godly life in the world, not from fear of hell, but from love to God ; otherwise the srcrificc is but compulsory.

The offerings were required to be presented wholly, and not in part ; therefore we must not give one half of our hearts to the world and the other to God, but must love God, and surrender ourselves to him with all our hearts, and with all our souls, and with all our might.

These offerings were required to be without a flaw ; nothing blind or lame could be sacrificed to God : we must take care to not stain our souls, or our bodies, for a soul tarnished with sin God will not admit into heaven.

God had a peculiar partiality for young sacrifices :—for lambs one or two years old. This was to show that we must not postpone our conversion to old age ; but must give ourselves as a sacrifice to God in good time, in the bloom of youth.

What was once sacrificed to God, could not afterwards be changed or taken away ; so must a Christian be steadfast in purpose. God hates a proud heart. So sisters and brothers, let us walk after the Spirit, and not after the flesh or lusts of men.

Universalism not of God No. 2.

Universalism, as it is called, we think, is one of the soul-slaying doctrines of Satan, which is inculcated and preached in the world by intelligent men. Should these lines be read by any one who vindicates the doctrine, let me say to you, as one who loves you and desires your eternal welfare, "Repent and believe the Gospel;" practice its institutions; comply with its requirements, and do it quickly; for we are taught that there is no repentance in the grave.

In all the Savior's instruction while here in the world, he directed those who heard him to the future life, as the rewards and punishments of all mankind.

After examining closely the 25th chapter of Matthew, from the 31st verse to the end of the chapter, it is striking, indeed, to think that intelligence will inculcate the idea that all men will be saved. This passage is a direct and powerful argument against universalism. It was spoken near the close of the Savior's ministry among men. It foretells the final destiny of both the righteous and the wicked. The Son of God is here speaking of the nations of the earth. He says that they shall be separated, "as a Shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats."

Our universalist friends assert, that this was fulfilled, at the destruction of Jerusalem. It is not so; for no earthly events can fulfill it. In the scripture before us, Christ teaches, that, "when the Son of man shall come," the following events will occur: Having all the holy angels with him, he will sit upon the throne of his glory; all nations will be gathered before him; he will separate the righteous from the wicked; to the righteous will he say, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world;" and to the wicked will he say, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels. And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."

Universalists maintain that these things were fulfilled at the destruction of Jerusalem. It cannot possibly be so; for we see yet the righteous and wicked dwelling together. The son of man has not yet made his second advent; he has not yet come in the clouds of heaven, as is plainly taught in the New Testament scriptures; for the apostle says in 1 Thess. 4; 16, "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and the trump of God; the dead in Christ shall rise first." It seems to me that every sane Bible reader knows full well, that the passages of scripture referred to, have never been fulfilled; and we fear that, unless our friends "repent and believe the gospel," there is great danger of their being placed among the characters of whom the apostle speaks.

In 2 Thess. 1: 7—8, Paul says: "And to you who are troubled, rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." We do not intend to judge any one, but only present the passage as a warning of the impending danger; for the language is explicit, and, we think it means just what it says. We believe that the Lord will come, as is taught us; that he will judge righteously; and that the oppressors and ungodly will not enjoy the things prepared for the people of God.

We would ask the question, why did the apostle Paul forsake his high rank in society, and suffer so many persecutions; and why was he so thoroughly devoted to the Christian life; and why did he say, "Therefore knowing the terror of the Lord we persuade men? We ask again, why was all this, if there is no punishment beyond the grave? The apostle Paul says, "Know ye not, that they which run in a race, run all, but one receiveth the prize; so run, that ye may obtain. And every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things. Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown; but we an incorruptible I therefore so run, not as uncertainly; so fight I, not as one that beateth the air; but I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection, lest that, by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should become a castaway." This life is compared to a race. A crown is to be obtained; but not till the race is run; it is not obtained until all the turmoils of life are over. When the transitory scenes are past, then shall the Christian partake of all the rich blessings of God's promises, and pluck from the tree of life the ambrosial fruits throughout the dateless ages of eternal felicity.

O universalist! renounce your doctrine, and come to the gospel feast. Run with us the race that is set before us. The apostle further says, "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding, and eternal weight of glory." How can this be, if the present life has no connection with the future? How can Paul, or any one else, have a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, if all men are to share alike, and be equal in the resurrection? "Wherefore we labor, that whether present in the body or absent from the body, we may be accepted of him. For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." 2 Cor. 5: 9, 10. If there were no doubt of his acceptance, why labor to secure that which was already certain? Why preach, toil, and strive in reference to this one event, if it were not doubtful, and there were no certain danger? But there was doubt; even with the inspired apostle there was danger, that he should at last be found naked. His whole life, often his conversion, was devoted to one end—to secure his acceptance with God. And he assigns the reason in the language quoted, "For we must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ. Would this have been needful, if all men will be accepted, whether they labor to please God or not—whether they attempt to do his will, or sin with a high hand and a blaspheming tongue? We ask again, would a judgment be needful, if there is to be no punishment beyond the grave?

Friendly sinner, and universalist, turn, turn, "for why will ye die?" The Savior said, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest to your souls." Oh, yes, put on his yoke, and go to work; for there is a work to be done; yea, work diligently, labor for the crown, that ye may receive it. And while you are at work, send up your joint petitions to a throne of grace, that your unworthy writer may work more diligently; that he may be assisted with sustaining grace from the hand of him who is able to give bountifully, to succor him through the tempting scenes of life, that when the turmoils of earth have passed, we may be able to say in the language of the apostle, "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing. 2 Tim. 6, 8. The chief thing that animated and supported Paul, was the great blessing in store for him as soon as he was offered. He gives us the foundation of his hope in Christ; and his reasons for expecting a reward beyond the grave, which the Lord was to give him, are three in number: He had fought a good fight; he had finished his course; he had kept the faith. He likens himself to a warrior, a winner in a race, and a steward to whom is committed an important trust.

Hints to Preachers.

Editors C. F. C. I copy the following from an old number of the Phrenological Journal, which is perhaps worthy of a place in the COMPANION.

E. L. YODER.

Preachers need to be taught good manners as well as any other class of people. They have passions like other men. Jealousy and envy exist among them. They are afraid of each other. They avoid each other, and prefer to be set off in a Diocese by themselves. They love independence and isolation that they may dominate a little kingdom of their own. They prefer to occupy their own pulpits. They do not like compitition. They love classification, but not in the lower orders. While merciful to one another as preachers. They criticise one another too severely. They make too many invidious comparisons. This is very bad manners. While it is right and needful, with the right spirit and within proper bounds, that they should criticise, and compare, and cudgel, they should stand up like a wall of fire for each other's defense. They should remember that the field is large and that the Lord has a place for every preacher to work in. Laborers in the vineyard of Christ have always been few.

Why not then hold up every faithful brother till he falls into his own proper niche of usefulness. We should all be a band of brothers, ever ready to extenuate, to mollify, to soothe, and to encourage instead of whispering each other's faults and magnifying each other's defects. Far better to love, and praise, and elevate than to hate and disparage and derogate. We should always be ready to say of each other, "With all thy faults I love thee still." The common good of our race demands this of us. And besides our behavior towards one another will indicate the measure of our love to God and Christ.

Mother Shimpton's Prophecy.

(Selected by Solomon W. Bolinger.)

Mother Shimpton's prophecy is almost forgotten, except by antiquarians. It was first published in 1488, and republished next in 1641. It must be confessed that the greatest part of it has already been fulfilled, and we have only ten years to wait in order to determine whether the concluding lines will prove as true as the earlier ones. These are Mother Shimpton's words:

"Carriages without horses shall go,
And accidents fill the world with woe;
Around the world thoughts shall fly,
In the twinkling of an eye;
Water shall yet more wonders do,
Now strange, yet shall be true,
The world upside down shall be,
And gold be found at root of tree.
Through hills man shall ride,
And no horse or ass be at his side:
Under water men shall walk,
Shall ride, shall sleep, shall talk;
In the air men shall be seen,
In white, in black, in green;
Iron on the water shall float,
As easy as a wooden boat:
Gold shall be found, and found
In a land that's not now known:
Fire and water shall wonders do,
England shall at last admit a jew:
The world to an end shall come,
In eighteen hundred and eighty-one.

Woman's Power.

Those disasters which break down the spirit of a man, and prostrate him in the dust, seem to call forth all the energies of the softer sex, and give such intrepidity and elevation to their character, that at times it approaches to sublimity. Nothing can be more touching than to behold a soft and tender female, who had been all weakness and dependence, and alive to every trivial roughness, while treading the prosperous paths of life, suddenly rising in mental force to be the comforter and supporter of her husband under misfortune, and abiding, with unshrinking firmness, the bitterest blasts of adversity. As the vine which has long twined its graceful foliage about the oak, and been lifted by it in sunshine, will, when the hardy plant is rifted by the thunderbolt, cling round it with its caressing tendrils, and bind up its shattered boughs: so is it beautifully ordered by Providence that woman, who is the mere dependent and ornament of man in his happier hours, should be his stay and solace when smitten with sudden calamity; winding herself into the rugged recesses of his nature, tenderly supporting his drooping head, and binding up the broken heart.

Domestic Happiness.

The great end of prudence is to give cheerfulness to those hours which splendor cannot gild, and acclamation cannot exhilarate. Those soft intervals of unbended amusement, in which a man shrinks to his natural dimensions, and throws aside the ornaments and disguises which he feels in privacy to be useless encumbrances, and to lose all effect when they become familiar. To be happy at home, is the ultimate result of all ambition, the end to which every enterprise and labor tends, and of which every desire prompts the execution. It is, indeed, at home that every man must be known by those who would have a just estimate of his virtue or felicity: for smiles and embroidery are alike occasional, and the mind is often dressed for show in painted honor and fictitious benevolence.—Johnson.

Charity.

Charity is a universal duty, which it is in every man's power sometimes to practice, there is scarcely any man in such a state of imbecility, that he may not on some occasions benefit his neighbor. He that cannot relieve the poor, may instruct the ignorant; and he that cannot attend the sick, may reclaim the vicious. He that can give little assistance himself, may yet perform the duty of charity by inflaming the ardor of others, and recommending the petitions he cannot grant to those who have more to bestow.

Prayers I don't Like.

"I do not like to hear him pray,
Who loans at twenty-five per cent;
For then I think the borrower may
Be pressed to pay for food and rent;
And in that Book we all should heed,
Which says the lender shall be blest,
As sure as I have eyes to read,
It does not say, Take interest.

I do not like to hear him pray,
On bended knees, about an hour,
For grace to spend aright the day,
Who knows his neighbor has no flour,
I'd rather see him go to mill,
And lug the luckless brother bread
And see his children eat their fill,
And laugh beneath their humble shed.

I do not like to hear him pray,
"Let blessings on the widow be,"
Who never seeks her home to say,
"If want o'ertakes you come to me"
I hate the prayer, so loud and long,
That's offered for the orphans' meal
By him who sees him crushed by wrongs
And only with the lips doth feel.

I do not like to hear her pray,
With jeweled ear and silken dress,
Whose wash-woman toils all day,
And then is asked "to work for less;"
Such pious sh avers I despise!
With folded hands and face demur,
They lift to heaven their "angel eyes,"
Then steal the earnings of the poor,

I do not like such soulless prayers;
If wrong I hope to be forgiven;
No angel's wing them upward bears—
They're lost a million miles from heaven.

The Two Witnesses.

I shall try to give my views in as brief a way as I can. First, I will tell who they are; second, when they will come; third, what their mission is.

Zechariah 4 : 14, "Then said he, these are the two anointed ones, that stand by the Lord of the whole earth." Rev. 11 : 14, "These are the two olive trees, and the two candlesticks, standing before the God of the earth." These two verses have reference to the same personages—the two witnesses. Now I shall refer you to Malachi 4 : 5, "Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord." I understand the two witnesses to be Elijah the prophet and Enoch. These two prophets were translated for a certain mission to be carried out under the seventh seal. This is a brief sketch as to who they are.

Second, when they will come. The Savior's coming will be at the close of sixth seal. See Rev. 6 : from the 14th verse to the end of the chapter. The seventh chapter is taken up with the events of the 6th seal. The object of his coming under the sixth is to remove the wise virgins. They will be removed in the last 30 days of the sixth seal. Dan. 12 : 11, speaks of 1290 days; take 30 days from that leaves 1260 days. The dragon, and beast, and false prophets will hold the sway over the earth 1260 days. See Rev. 13: 7; Dan. 7 : 7–23. This will be under the seventh seal.—Those seven last plagues will be poured out under the seventh seal.—Now, dear brethren, if the Savior and the two witnesses would not come in the last 30 days of the sixth seal, and remove the wise virgins, they would all be distroyed. Rev. 3 : 10, says, "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation which shall come upon the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth. The hour of temptation will be under the seventh seal. The wise virgins will be under persecution 10 days, (Rev. 1 : 10,) then they will flee into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and three-score days, or 3½ years; Rev. 12 : 6. The 30 days will be under the sixth seal, and 1260 days, or forty-two months, or time times and deviding of time, or half time, 3½ years, will be under the seventh seal. The coming of the Savior and the two witnesses will be more fully proven to be in the last 30 days of the sixth seal, by their mission. So I will let this suffice, and take up the third part and show the object of their coming.

The woman spoke of in the 12th chapter of Revelations, I understand to be part of the church—the wise virgins. They are those that will be removed into the wilderness: Rev. 12 : 14, "And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness, into her place, where she is nourished for a time, (one year) and times, (two years) and half a time, (half year), from the face of the serpent," or devil. These two wings spoken of in the above verse, I have no doubt are the two witnesses, or Elijah and Enoch. They will protect the woman in her flight into the wilderness.—The woman will be in pain 10 days before she will be delivered; and it will take 20 days until the church gets into a place of safety: 10 and 20 are 30. The Savior's coming can not be denied under the sixth seal. The wise virgins are the salt of the earth and it will be removed in these 30 days of the sixth seal. Then the door of mercy will be closed against the Gentiles. Then will be fulfilled "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still; and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still; and he that is holy, let him be holy still." Rev. 22 : 11. Another scripture will be fulfilled at the close of the sixth seal, or the 30 days; Rev. 13 : 2, "And the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority." The dragon is not permitted to give the ten horned beast the power and seat and great authority until the salt is removed. The dragon, the beast, and the false prophet will hold the power over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations forty-two months, or 3½ years. The beast is termed "anti-christ," "man of sin," "little horn." "God of the earth." He will sit in the temple of God, and show himself that he is God. 2 Thess. 2 : 4. Zechariah 4 : 14, says, "These are the two anointed ones, that stand by the Lord of the whole earth." Rev. 11 : 4, says, "These are the two olive trees, and the two candlesticks, standing before the God of the earth. The Lord of the earth, and the God of the earth, are one and the same person—"the man of sin."

My idea is, that the witnesses will gather the Jews from all quarters of the earth, during the forty-two months. The door of mercy will be closed against the Gentiles, at the close of the sixth seal, and it will be opened to the Jews. These two witnesses. or Elijah and Enoch,, will no doubt issue a proclamation to the nations, to deliver up to Jews. Those that will not do it, will have those plagues sent upon them. Rev. 11 : 5, 6. In order to get shut of those plagues the nations will deliver them up. See Issiah 66 : 20-

These two witnesses, Elijah and Enoch, will stand before the God of the earth, and deliver the Jews, as Moses and Aaron did before Pharoah. I will cite the readers to a few passages of scriptures concerning the gathering of the Jews: Deut. 30; 3–5; Neh. 1; 9; Ps. 47: 21; Isa. 11: 12; 31: 10; 43: 5, 6; 66: 20; Jer. 23: 3, 8; 29: 14; 32: 37, 38; Eze. 37: 21; 25: 25, 26; 34: 13; 36: 24.—When these two witnesses have gether the Jews, and there 1260 days are expired, the beast, "the God of the earth," will kill them; their dead bodies will lie three days in the street, where our Lord was crucified, that is, in Palestine.

The mission of these two witnesses will end 20 days before the beast's. Their 1260 days commenced in the 30 days; The beast's 1260 days commenced with the opening of the seventh seal.

The Savior will come as King of kings, on the white horse; see Rev. 19: from the 11 verse to the end; Eze. 39; Zech. 14. These three chapters will give the readers a good history of the battle of Armageddon. Rev. 14: 20 gives the dimensions, "a thousand and six hundred furlongs," or two hundred miles. Zech. 14: 2; says, "I will gather all nations against Jerusalem. Rev. 9: 16. gives the number that will be gathered there, "two hundred thousand thousands," or two hundred millions. No wonder the blood will be up to the horses bridle, and take the whole house of Isreal seven months to bury the dead. See Eze 39: 12, 15

This battle will be fought by the Savior personally, at the expiration of 1290 days, from the time that the daily sacrifice is taken away. The daily sacrifice will be taken away 40 days before the sixth seal clases. The 1260 and 30 will make 1290, the resurrection. And the battle of Armageddon will occupy 45 days. Add the 45 days to the 1290, will be 1335 days. See Dan. 12: 12.

The battle of Armageddon will be fought under the seventh seal, and under the soundingof the sixth angel; Rev. 9: 13, to the end; and 16: 12, 16.

At the end of 1335 days the battle will be over, and the beast, false prophet, will be cast into the lake of fire. See Rev. 19: 20. And theDevil will be cast into the bottomless pit and shut for a thousand years. Then it will take the whole house of Isreal seven months to bury the dead, or two hundred and ten days. Add the 210 days to the 1335 days will make 1545 days. There are 755 days days taken up with the cleansing of the land of scattered bones, and another event which I dare not enter into in this article, it would make it too lengthy. Add 755days to 1545 days will make 2300 days. SeeDan. 8: 14. Then shall the sanctuary be cleansed. The Jews will build Jerusalem; and the Marriage of the Lamb will take place. Building Jerusalem and the Marriage of the Lamb, I have no doubt will occupy 40 years. Then the seventh seal will close, at the close of the six thousand years.

I have now given a very short outline of events that will shortly come to pass. I would like to give a condensed chain of the most noted events of the fifth, sixth, and seventh seals.

I could give a more satisfactory account by giving a chain of events.—Taking the subject of two witnesses is taking a link out of a chain. and it is a difficult matter to get the reader to understand. I am satisfied that there are great events near at hand. Let us watch and keep our garments that we may not be found naked.

The Christians Voyage Over the Sea of Life.

When the storm arises, and foul, fierce, lowering clouds fill and darken the air, and waves rolling mountain high, threaten inevitiable disaster, then the successful voyager trusts in God. With the "helmet of salvation," he guides his way through the turbulent, formless wild. With "the sword of the spirit," he strikes down every foe that would hinder his speed or endanger his escape. When he meets with prospects yet more horrid; when storms, enemies and dangers increase, yet more than he expected or heard of; when his soul is want to sink in despair, and when fear and horror fill his heart, then he cries to God for help. God hears,pities, gives his "whole armor" to save his child, who, with renewed vigor lays hold upon it as the issue of his salvation

As time rolls on,the life-boat moves nearer the haven; and when, betimes, "skies are clear, and seas are calm," he sees the golden city beyond life's dreary ocean, what joy fills his heart! With renewed strength he meets each threatening storm and gains the victory in every battle.—Through the blazing, "fiery darts" are hurled toward him thick and fast, he quenches them all with "the shield of faith." At last he has almost reached the distant shore; but another fearful storm must been dured,and another dreadful battle fought. The sun is desending fast from a pallid, gloomy sky; forked fiery streaks begin to flash around; dark reeling clouds stagger dizzily against each other, until thick, black darkness comes on. The chilly waves run high over the brave sailor and soldier, shocking his inmost vitals. In each howling blast of mingled storm,the deadly foes from hell attempt to seize and hold him fast. Faint and weary he cries, "Mercy! help!! God stoops down; reaching forth lifts him into heaven a rescued spirit made perfect.

Clipping from "American Absurdities in Dress."

The dress of the French lady is artistic, simple, and faultless—faultless often because it is simplicity itself. . . . . When she walks, she wears black or gray, and it never drags on the ground. When she goes to church she wears the same colors, is always attired in the simplest manner. This is true also of Italy. In the Sistine chapel, Rome, no lady can enter unless attired in black, with no covering on her head but veil of the same hue.

What a contrast to the church attire of American women. They are accustomed to think themselves perfect saints compared with Italian and French women, yet they enter the house of God as they would a theatre. They don their gayest plumage, hang on all their rich chains and bracelets, take off their kid gloves to show their diamond rings in the Sacred Temple, just as in the Academy of Music.—Worse—they stare and comment on each others costumes, and absolutely make the church of worship a place in which to study the fashions—this is not French. Is it christianity?

Miracles.

Inasmuch as a query has appeared in the COMPANION, requesting some one to give an explanation of a certain portion of scripture treating on the subject of Miracles, I will venture to say a few thoughts. Peter wrote, "Be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you." I have no thought that the query was asked out of vain curiosity and therefore think it worthy of notice.

It has become almost a universal proverb. that "the day of miracles is past;" but all proverbs are not found ed on the word. Miracles havebeen the subject of admiration in all ages of the world; and whether God designed that they should cease before his second coming, will be the object of the present investigation.

Christ gave the commissions to his disciples when on this earth; and we shall notice them in their order. The first is contained in Matthew 10: 5–15 and Mark 6: 7–11. I do not refer to the above to prove that it is binding on us now; but in order to show you that this commission was limited, both as regards the time and the bearers and receivers of it. As regards time, some was recalled before Christ's death, (Luke 10: 35, 36;) and what is not contained in the third or general commission, when the third was given. If this were not the case, the Bible would conflict. As regards the beares, they were the twelve apostles. As regards receivers, they were the house of Israel.

The second is contained in Luke 10: 1–16. This was also limited: time, and receivers, like the former; bearers, the seventy disciples.

The third is contained in Matthew 28: 19, 20, and Mark 16: 15–18. This we call the general, the great, and the last commission. The time this was to continue, was to the "end of the world." The bearers, or deliverers of this commission are all those whom the Lord would send from the time it was given to the end of the world. But according to Rev. 22: 19, the entire church are reunited in this work. The receivers of the message may be "all the world," or "every creature." We have now before us all the world, unto whom we are to deliver the message contained in the commission, and when they believe, we are to baptize them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; and to teach them to observe all things that Jesus commanded his disciples, and then we have the assurance of the promises, namely: "He that believes and is baptized, shall be saved," and "these signs shall follow them that believe: In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover," and "lo, I am with you always; even unto death."

Here we have these promises all dependent on fath. First, salvation; second, signs, or if you please Miracles; third, the presence of the Lord.

Now as these are all dependent on faith, connected with obedience of both parties, so they all are to extend to the "end of the world." There never has been, nor will there ever be found a linguist, who will be able to separate these, as regards time, and all their connections; yea, may we not say, "What God hath joined together, let no man put asunder."

But we shall now confine ourselves more fully to the signs. "Them" and "they," can not mean those spoken to; or "he," in the 16th verse would make out that the disciples were not baptized, and that some would probably not believe. But "them" and "they," as well as "he," mean those persons "who shall believe on Christ through their word;" that is the "word preached by the apostles. John 17: 20.

There was a time when the "word" was not written as it is now; but, whether written are not, it must be brought to the people, that they might believe; for "faith cometh by hearing." Read also John 20: 30, 31.—There are different degrees of faith, We may go "from faith to faith." Christ said, "According to your faith, be it unto you;" and "All things are possible to him that believeth."

Now, with these passages before us, we will turn to James 5: 14, 15. "Is any sick among you? let them call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed any sins, they shall be forgiven him." As far as I know, anointing with oil was common during Christ's time on this earth; otherwise, I could not comprehend the language in Mark 6: 13, "And they cast out many devils, and anointed with oil many that were sick, and healed them." I am glad that the Brethren perform this anointing on the sick to the present time, and although I have not seen many cases, yet, I actually, in a few instances, thought that these were Miracles performed; yet, in those days I firmly believed that "the day of Miracles was past." And I am informed by some old brethren, that they actually know of a few Miracles having been performed in their days. But these will not suffice to the readers of the COMPANION. Some people however, tell us that they would yield the subject, if one would "perform a well authenticated Miracles." I do not see why, if the word written is not first believed.

But to James. I have asked some old brethren what James means when he says, "And the Lord shall raise him up;" and they told me that he either meant that the Lord would restore him to health, or raise him up to life eternal, and that we would have to perform the ordinance, and then leave it to the Lord to do either. If Christ should say, "According to your faith be it unto you," it would be hard for one to tell the consequences. I firmly believe that this anointing is intended for the healing of the body. Why does James say first, "the prayer of faith shall save sick;" and then repeat the same truth, in substance? If it means that the Lord would raise him up unto eternal life, either of these expressions would have been sufficient. But, take the view that it is for the healing of the body, and we will find no repetition of words. For a sick person might be saved from present death, and still not be raised up from his bed of affliction; and he might be raised up, and still not have his sins forgiven. But by the anointing, and through the prayers of faith, these can all be performed to the sick. Here we discover that it requires a strong degree of faith on the part of the administrators; for "all things are possible to him that believeth." And if the Miracle is to be performed on a person, it likewise required a strong faith of the applicant.

Brethren, I am not saying that the church has "no faith," as Christ told his disciples once; but I must say that it is not what it might be; nor do I beliveing that it will arrive at a greater degree in these "last days." Now, as there was a growth in grace, and also of the faith, may there not be "a falling away;" And as Christ said, "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth" We all have room for the prayer, "Increase our faith."

Some refer us to Paul on the Island of Melita, as performing Miracles before the people believed; but we know Paul believed befor e the miracle of the venomous serpent was performed on him; and the connection, with all its circumstances, proves that the people believed in the power of Paul's performing Miracles, before he performed a single one on them. Acts 28. It is true, some consider Mark 16: 17, 18, of "doubtful authority," being omitted in many of Greek manuscripts; but where did those find it, that have it? The Devil has not wiped it from the Greek, German, or English Bibles, as yet; yea, I may say, can never do it; for the word endureth forever. He has tried his working in some other direction, namely, to get the people to disbelieve the word of God. I am not well posted in the church history; but I am informed that as late as the beginning of the fourth century, 200 years after the lives of the apostles ceased, "As Christ himself cast out all demons by his word, so do his followers now cast the same impure spirits out of men, both in the name of their Master and by the sign of His passion." And even Wesley, in commenting on Mark 16: 17, 18, refers to one who was infirm, who actually became whole under preaching of a sermon from Mark 16: 17, 18, during, or a little before, his time. See Wesley's notes. Sometime ago I was requested to speak from the same text, and I proceeded somewhat similar as in this writing; but it had not the same effect as the one Wesley referred to, nor do I think that this article will have. I did not receive much criticism on my sermon, but I anticipate some on this article. I have written in the fear of the Lord. Lord Jesus, intercede for us, that our "faith fail not."

Wisdom and Truths.

To triumph over our passions, is of all conquests the most glorious.

We gain nothing by falsehood but the disadvantage of not being believed when we speak the truth.

Gratitude is a duty none can be excused from, because it is always at our own disposal.

Bad habits are thistles of the heart, and every indulgence of them is a seed from which will spring a new crop of weeds.

When a man owns himself to be in an error, he does but tell you in other words, that he is wiser than he was.—Dean Swift.

The influence of costume is incalculable; dress a boy as a man and he will at once change his own conception of himself.

We have but one moment at once, let us improve it. Our moment will soon come when this life will cease—may we so live to meet it without regret.

A more glorious victory cannot be gained over another man than this, that when the injury began on his part, for the kindness to begin on ours.—Tillotson.

Look always at the bright side of things; as the cheering and invigorating sun does; and remember that content is the mother of good discretion.

Affection in any part of our carriage is lighting up a candle to our defects, and never fails to make us noticed, either as wanting sense or wanting sincerity.

It is the highest duty, privilege, and pleasure for great men to earn what they possess, to work their own way through life, to be architects of their own fortunes.

A man's desires always disappoint him; for though he meets with something that gives him satisfaction, yet it never thoroughly answers his expectation.—Rochefoucauld.

It is a vain thing for you to thrust your finger in the water, and, pulling it out, look for a hole: it is equally vain to suppose that, however large a space you occupy, the world will miss you when you die.

There is in some tempers such a natural barrenness, that like the sands of Arabia, they are never to be cultivated and improved. And some will never learn anything, because they understand eveything too soon.

Pleasure and pain, though directly opposite, are yet so contrived by nature, as to be constant companions: and it is a fact, that the same motions and muscles of the face are employed both in laughing and crying.—Charron.

Fortune has the same power over princes that it has over empires—over nations that it has over cities—and the same power over cities that it has over private men. Where's that estate that may not be followed upon the heel with famine and beggary? that dignity, which the next moment may not be laid in the dust? that kingdom that is secure from desolation and ruin? The period of all things is at hand, as well that which casts out fortunate, as the other that delivers the unhappy; and that which may fall out at any time, may fall out this very day.—Seneca.

The True Theory of Pleasure.

Those enjoyments which neither injure ourselves, interfere with the happiness of others, or violate the laws and decorum of society, are in fact themselves most effectual barriers against the indulgence of those criminal propensities which at one and the same time undermine our happiness and destroy that of others. Give to mankind innocent amusements, and they will be far less likely to seek for guilty pleasures. But it will generally be found that those who whet their appetites by rigorously abstaining from one enjoyment, are the most voracious in the gratification of others.

Maternal Influence.

Examples of maternal influence are countless. Solomon himself records the words of wisdom that fell from a mother's lips, and Timothy was taught the scriptures from a child by his grandmother and his mother. Sir Francis Phillips used to say: "I should have been an infidel were it not for the recollection when my departed mother used to take my little hand in her's, and make me say my prayers on my bended knees." "I have found out what made you the man you are," said a gentlemen one morning to President Adams; "I have been reading your mother's letters to her son" What could be more expressive? Washington's mother trained her boy to truthfulness and virtue; and when his messenger called to tell her that her son was raised to the highest station in the nation's gift, she could say, "George always was a good boy."

THE only way for a man to escape being found out is to pass for what he is. The only way to maintain a good character is to deserve it. It is easier to correct our faults than to conceal them.

The Pious Youth.

It will be observed that several of our correspondents are lamenting over the demise of the PIOUS YOUTH; and propose its resurrection. They all have our sympathies, and whenever we can entertain any hope for its success they shall also have our co-operation in reviving it. We are quite sure when all its readers will have read the December number, of last year, which has just lately been sent out, that we shall recieve many more such lamentations, as it is a number that will recommend it to persons of good judgment. But let us not indulge useless condolence, but devote our energies in working.

It was the opinion of many of the friends of the YOUTH, that it was too large, although there was no objection to the price. That it was too large for the price, with the circulation it attained we readily admit. But if it could have attained to twice its circulation, it would have been more than self-sustaining. But if that was all the mistake, might that not be amended. We are ready to receive proporsions from all its friends, as to the course that should now be pursued.

We think that for the present year nothing more should be attempted than to make it subserve our Sunday-schools. How would it answer to publish 16 page monthly, cut into four parts of four pages each, for distribution on each Lord's day in the month? Shall we hear from you friends of the juvenile interests?

Death of Brother J. L. Forney.

In our obituary columns will be found the death of brother John L. Forney. He was an occasional contributor to our columns, and his contributions always contained a point worth noticing, inasmuch as he always wrote from the impulses of his soul. Having a good knowledge of language, his productions were clear, and correctly written, and were therefore highly valued. Among his last, and most likely altogether last contritions, were several articles entitled: 'What I Know About Preaching," and signed "Occasional."

That brother Forney had the prosperity of the cause of Christ at heart, is evident from the manner in which he disposed of his wordly possessions. He was unmarried, and had by industry and economy accumulated possessions, valued at from three to four thousand dollars, all of which, after his debts have been paid, is to be turned over to brother James Quinter, to be used in disseminating the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, by publishing Tracts, and preaching the Gospel.

This spirit of liberality, manifested toward the cause of Christ, is highly commendable, and worthy of imitation. Brother Forney was not satisfied with giving his service during life, but felt a concern for the success of the cause after his departure; and although he had kind friends whom he loved, there was none whom he regarded so worthy of receiving his possessions, as his dear Redeemer. We are also happy to learn that his disposition of his estate gives satisfaction to his friends, and those who would have been his heirs, showing that they too, love the cause they have espoused.

A Visit.

Having been from home, and having been asked so frequently with regard to brother Adam Hollinger's condition at present; and as I am now in his presence, beholding with sorrow the pitiful scene of a poor sufferer, upon his bed of affliction, from the effects of an abscess in his side, which commenced about the 1st of October last. I will now reply through the COMPANION, that the sore has been opened at from different places, at different times, three of which are discharging matter, and one is healed, which keeps him weak and confined to his bed, otherwise he feels as if he could sit up. The sore may possibly require to be opened more yet, but the prospect for it to heal is favorable, though it will require time.

Brother Adam seems to bear his afflictions with christian fortitude, through the desires the fervent and effectual prayers of the church. In my weakness, my prayer is that the good Lord would spare him, and send him as a herald of glad tidings. He has been confined to his bed nearly sixteen weeks.

In love to the brethren and sisters "scattered broad."

From your unworthy servant,

ADAM BEELMAN.

District Meeting of Missouri.

The District meeting of Missouri, will be held in our meeting-house in the Mineral Creek church, Johnson county, Mo., twelve miles south of Warrensburg, on the 19th and 20th of April next. Brethren comjng by railroad, will either stop off at Warrensburg on the Missouri & Pacific Railroad, or at Calhoun on the M. K. and T. road; and by notifying either of us in time, arrangements for conveyance to the place of meeting will be made. The money necessary to send delegates to the annual meeting should be in readiness on the part of the churches of this State, by the time of the District meeting; and if more is collected than is found necessary, it can be applied to pay the deficiency in amount for last year's expenses, which amounts to about $5.00. Brethren writing to either of us will address as below:

JOHN HARSHEY,
S. S. MOHLER,
Cornelia, Johnson county, Mo.

Brother Holsinger:—I am sorry for the Pious Youth, but do think it better to drop it than that you should lose money by publishing it. I don't know why it is that the brethren and sisters could not support it. Surely they owe it to their children to furnish them with suitable reading matter If they do not their children will find other matter to engage their thought, and the day of just accounts will tell the rest.

Wonder if we are all of one mind. We are to strive so to be. Wonder if our religion does not sometimes form a cloak for us to draw the tigher our purse strings. Wonder if the demise of the Pious Youth could not be traced and lodged here! certain it is that, because the proper remedy was not applied by those who had it at their disposal, the Pious Youth had to die.

J. L. WINELAND.
Clover Creek, Pa.

Bethel Church, Holt County, Mo.

Brother Holsinger:—After so long a time I again take the liberty of writing to you a few items of church correspondence. I am still sojourning in the land of Holt, am well pleased and among good friends; and it is really a home to me; for I am as a wandering star, having no settled place of abode; but purpose, in the course of three months to seek a certain space many days journey toward the setting sun, and there to abide, if not hindered by some unseen circumstance. But I am wandering also from the subject of this letter. I am going to tell you about good meetings, good preaching, and an account of the election held. Brethren J. and C. Forney, J. Glick of Nebraska, and Elder Correll were the ministering brethren. Held meetings for several days; had crowded houses and good attention. One sermon by J. Forney, Sr. I will give a synopsis of:

"Wilt thou be made whole." As he is himself a physician, he could aptly relate what is necessary for any one to know, in order to be a good one; as, the cause of the malady, its proper remedy, and strictly following the prescription. He compared the good physician with the quack. Christ is the great Physician of souls. Those who faithfully teach and observe all the prescriptions, as faithful ones, (ministers,) and those that teach and practice only parts, as quacks. You will allow the text was good, and be assured it was handled by a master builder. Saturday, though, was the trying day amongst the resident members; for the principal object of the meeting was to hold an election for speaker and deacons.—The election over there was a very sound, clear, and comprehensive charge of the duties incumbent on those elected. I know the thought among the brethren was, "Is it I, is it I?" At last the result was made known. John Miller, speaker, Isaac Zeigler, Isaac Wampler, and Joel Glick, deacons. I have been at several elections, and do not know that I saw brethren so much affected as here; some completely gave away to their feelings. Hope they may be shining lights in the church and community.

The church is in a healthy condition; peace and harmony throughout, and in the borders. Assailants have about exhausted their arguments of sophistry, and are willing to seek those who have not so much scripture on their side as the brethren. But one thing about arguing scripture, I think, is not prudent, and that is, for the sake of argument, or to beat an antagonist; it tends rather to strife than to peace.

In conclusion I would say to those purposing coming west, to come soon, for times are dull and land as cheap as it will be—from $10, $15, $25 to 50 per acre. Wages for teaching and labor, low; all owing to scarcety in money. But do not infer from this that people have nothing to live on. It would be a treat to you eastern farmers to see the corn, wheat, fruit, hogs, cattle, &c. Plenty of everything (except one article.) If the land flows not in honey I assure you that you will find it barreled up, and besides, milk, wine, cider, corn, so abundantly that you will own that "the half was not told me."

J. S. MCFADDEN.

Dear Brother:—We live here in Kansas, within thirty miles of the Indian Nation. I must say we have a good country here, that is, good land, and coal and timber plenty. Land is cheap; from five to six dollars per acre. But we have no meetings by the Brethren. We still hope that the good Lord will send us a minister, or shepherd, to take care of this little flock. There are only five members: myself and wife, and my three children. I wish you would inform us through the COMPANION of the nearest church to us: or inform the brethren of us. We moved from Illinois here; and we are very lonesome without meeting. My nearest railroad station is Girard, Crawford county, Kansas. I live eleven miles east Mulberry Grove, Crawford county, Kansas, is my post office address.

I am yours in love,
JACOB F. DALE.

Query.

Brother Henry:—I have a query to present before the brethren. In our hymn book, 225th hymn, first verse, third line, reads, "For ev'ry vain and idle thought." Now brethren, where is the scripture that we must give an account "for ev'ry vain and idle thought." An answer is desired.

H. B. LEHMAN.

Announcement.

Brother Holsinger:—Please announce a series of meetings to be held at the Beech Grove Meeting House, Wayne county, Ohio. Commencing Saturday, February 17th, 1872; to continue a week or more.—Ministerial aid solicited.

By order of the Church,
J. B. SHOEMAKER.

For Correction.

In the publication of the District Meeting, for the Southren District of Indiana, (page 59,) we want you to say North Fork instead of Northern part; and instead of Bush Creek, say Buck Creek; else there might be a great mistake in coming to the place.

ELD. JOHN SHIVELY.

To my Brethren and Friends.

Those wishing to take the COMPANION for 1872, will bear in mind that I will act as agent. All those wishing to subscribe should do so at their earliest convenience, in order to commence reading each No. as it is issued.

F. M. SNYDER.

MADISON, GEORGIA, }
January 28, 1872. }

Brother Holsinger:—Heretofore, I believed that I was the only member of the Church in this State, but from a communication in the COMPANION of January 16th, 1872, that sister Sarah Hape, lives right along the Georgia Railroad, and but sixty-five miles from where I write.

That little note from my sister fills my heart with strange emotions, as it speaks in tones of encouragement and reminds me of the modest, twinkling star, peering through dark and forbidding clouds. The first and only cheering ray of hope, that has pierced the darkness with which I have been surrounded for five years. True I once was greeted by the sound of a brother's voice, which served as a light to my soul, and a guide to my footstep, but like the lightning's flash amid the midnight storm, it left me, more conscious of the dark and forbidding character of my condition and of the faith of duty. But when hope was waning, prayer seems about to be answered through that little communication, for we read of a small cloud like a man's hand, and as in answer to prayer, rain followed, so may the coming of our sister be followed by others, until a church may be organized; God's word held forth; the ordinances observed, and good follow to the sons and daughters of of men. This mode of reasoning may seem strange to those who are of the opinion that a Minister should go forth preaching the word, baptizing, organizing and building up churches wherever he chose to let his voice be heard. God himself may soften a hard heart; may humble a proud spirit, and may drive away prejudice, but one poor, feeble man has not power sufficient to overcome obstacles such as here meet non-resistent, humble, advocates of chistianity, as taught and practiced by our Savior and his early followers. Truly, Paul may plant Apollas water, but God only can give the increase.

Conscious of this fact we have tried to perform duty with the ability God gave, and through pleading at a throne of mercy, tried to submit without a murmur, to God's own appointed time and way.

The most anxious desire of this unworthy heart has been to see the church prosper, and to meet in this our adopted home, those with whom we could meet in church fellowship, and so practice the ordinances as taught in God's word. May the Good Lord direct the hearts, and guide the footsteps of others, so that a nucleus may be formed around which the good work of serving God and teaching others to worship him may be carried forward successfully. Are there not brethren and sisters enough who will unite with us in this petition, to move that one who is able to hear and answer prayer.

E. HEYSER.

From the Church at Marsh Creek, Adams County, Pa.

Dear Companion:—I am happy to have the the privilege of informing the brethren generally, that the Marsh Creek congregation, has enjoyed a time of refreshing from the Lord. On the evening of the 13th of January, we were greeted with the presence of brother D. F. Good, of the Antietam church, who feeling the importance of the Macedonian call, was constrained to leave the comforts of home "and come over to help us." This, the 13th, was the beginning of a series of meetings, to be continued as long as the brethren thought prudent. Next day and evening, meeting at the meet-house.

In consequence of the isolated situation of this meeting-house, and the primary object of this protractrd effort being to revive pure religion in our own hearts, the brethren thought best to hold the meetings at different points.

After the meetings alluded to at Marsh Creek, two meetings were held at Mount Zion; and from this place to Mummasburg, where eight appiontments were filled, with every aparent interest; and it is hoped the bread cast upon the waters may be seen not many days hence.

On Friday the 19th, brother Good took the cars at Gettysburg, to visit his son, who was attending the State Normal School at Millersville, Lancaster county. Fortunately, however, the meeting was continued by our devoted brother E. Stoner, of the church at Pipe Creek, until Sunday evening following, when it was announced that the Meetings would close at Mummasburg. The house at this place was filled with attentive listeners.

On Monday evening brother Stoner preached at Mount Zion, where he met brethren Good and D. Longanecker, from the upper Conawaga Church; meeting next evening at same place.

Thence to Mud College, where two meetings were held, we hope, with salutary results. One meeting at Wolf's School-house. Thence to the Marsh Creek church, where five more meetings were held. This closed the series of meetings in the Marsh Creek congregation.

Not only were the brethren animated to a doubling of their diligence, in more earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, but our hearts were made glad to see sinners come to the fold of Jesus, and seek admittance into His church militant on earth. The most touching scene during the progress of those meetings, transpired on the 29th, and that it may reach the tender heart of some reader of this report, I will insert it. In consequence of the day being very cold, the water covered with thick ice and snow, the ceremony usually performed at the water was performed in the house of brother D. Pfoutz, near by. With other applicants for baptism, was a youthful female, whose stout heart oft resisted the gentle chidings of the Spirit, but at length was made to yield. After preparations were made for this solemn and heaven-appointed ordinance, the assemblage repaired to the water; but before leaving the house of our brother, this willing servant of Immanuel beheld her sister in the flesh, and, with the fondest affection of a sister, embraced her, exclaiming, "Why are you not with us?" This touching incident brought tears to the eyes of all who witnessed it.

At the water the spectacle was quite impressive. While the united prayers of the brethren ascended, the sympathies of the by-standers were enlisted in behalf of these willing subjects. But my report is growing too lengthy. May our brethren, who labored so ardently and zealously amongst us, have souls for their hire; such a reward as the world can never give.

B. F. KITTINGER.

Gettysburg, Pa.

Brother Henry:—By request we will inform the Brotherhood now how we are geting along in the Sandy Creek congregation, West Virginia. Over a year ago we commenced holding meeting in Turney's school house, about half way between Brandenville and Pineswamp. There were a few scatering Brethren there. Had three or four meetings, and then suspended the appointment until last spring. Then we resumed the appointments again, and continued them about every five weeks, until in the fall. The few Brethren that reside in that settlement suggested the idea of holding a series of meetings among them. We then prevailed on our beloved elder Jacob M. Thomas to assist us. When we commenced the meeting, we made no calculation how long we would continue it.—Commenced the meeting on Friday evening, and continued over Sunday. Then we could not have any in daytime, as it was occupied with school. We continued the meeting at night through the week.

We made known that we would attend to the Ordinance of Baptism on Friday, at Brother Guthries, at Beaver Creek. When we arrived at the place there was a large collection of people on the grounds, to see how we baptize. It was very cold. There were nine applicants for baptism. Seven of them were heads of families, male and females, from fifty years down to sixteen. Some of them the most influential men in the neighborhood. They had a large log fire in the yard to keep the people warm. Baptism was administered by our old Brother Thomas, who is in his seventy-seventh year. We protracted the meeting over another Sunday, and on Monday received one more by baptism. And during the meeting we restored one other member, making eleven during the meeting. We had the best of order and large congregations. We have seen them twice since, and there is a deep interest manifested to hear the word preached.

JOHN S. HOOK.

Dear Companion:—Inasmuch as but little news has ever been given from Quemahoning branch it cannot be out of place to give a little at present. This congregation is situated in parts of Somerset and Westmoreland Counties, Pa., and embraces a large tract of territory. The Brethren of the South end, appointed a series of meetings, to open on the evening of the 23rd of December last, and continued over a week, two meetings a day, with the happiest results, at this time. Those of the North appointed an other to open on the 23rd of February which was kept up one week. The ministers of the neighboring churches having been invited, proved to have the matter at heart, from the manner in which they responded. Everybody seemed to feel an interest in the meetings, from the manner in which they turned out; and the result was, that, under the powerful preaching of the word, amid the fervent prayers of the saints, accompanied with the powerful influence of the Holy Spirit, sinners were made to tremble and melt down, that some would burst out in floods of tears and sighs of penitence. And as many as were willing were led into the stream (notwithstanding it was frozen over strong enough to bear all the by-standers at once) and were baptized into the death of Jesus Christ, and came up out of the water with smiles on their faces, and gladness in their hearts. Parents and children rejoiced together in the God of their salvation, and the result was fourteen new members, from the tender virgin to the aged grandfather of 70 winters. Two disowned members were also reclaimed. And I venture to say that impressions have been made that will not soon wear away, and the church is in better condition now than she has been for some time. Brethren and sisters thank God and take courage.

EMILY BLOUGH.

An Explanation on 1 Cor. 15: 29.

In vol. 8, No. 2, is desired an explanation of the words: "Else what shall they do which are batized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? Why are they then baptized for the dead?"

In the first place, we learn that the church at Corinth was very much out of order at the time the Apostle Paul wrote his epistles to them, and he reproved them sharply for their contentions and inimical ideas, concerning the resurrection of the dead, the Lord's supper, &c.

Now in order to get the true meaning of the words at issue, we must consider their strange ideas, concerning the resurrection of the dead. We learn that there were some that did not believe that Christ was raised from the dead. "Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead, but if there be no resurrection of the dead then Christ is not risen. And if Christ be not risen then is our preaching vain; and your faith is also vain;" but now we are baptized into that living fountain head—the Lord Jesus Christ.

"Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are burried with Him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in new-ness of life." Rom 6, 3; 4.

District Meeting of N. E. Ohio.

Brother Holsinger:—Please announce that we intend holding the District Meeting of the North Eastern District of Ohio, on Tuesday, the 7th of May, 1872, at the Big Meeting House, of the Mohican congregation, Wayne county, 5 miles South of West Salem, the nearest point by Railroad, on the Atlantic and Great Western. Twelve miles from Wooster, on the Pittsburg and Fort Wayne Railroad.

We fondly hope that every branch composing this District will be represented, and especially those branches that did not represent heretofore.—Those coming by the Atlantic and Great Western will please notify brother Jacob Garver, at Lattasburg, who will see that conveyances will be furnished to convey all from West Salem to the plase of meeting. Those coming by Pittsburg and Fort Wayne Railroad, will please notify the undesigned at New Pittsburg, who will see that they will be conveyed to the place of meeting.

By order of the Church.

GEORGE WORST, Clerk.

Dear Readers of the Companion:—Having been requested by some of the Brethren on the line of our late visit, and thinking it might be a matter of interest to you in general, I will give you a synopsis of our tour and labors through N. E. Ohio, as follows:

Brother George Worst and myself started from my home on the evening of the 29th December, and toward evening of the 30th, we reached the Brethren's home under the hospitable roof of Brother John Strom, twelve miles north of Warren, in Trumbull county. We remained with the Brethren and friends here until the morning of the 3rd of January 1872. Held five meetings in their meeting house. On New Year's day we had the pleasure of being present at the Annual Family Reunion at the house of friend Isaac and sister Eliza N. Barb. Sister Barb's mother and all her family, consisting of children, grand-children and great grand-children, were present, to the number of between forty and fifty, whom we know as the Nortin family. All were happy and cheerful. We silently wished that they and all other families might so live in this sinful world as to be able to have a final reunion in our Father's house—in the Kingdom of his Son. But viewing the human family from the gospel standpoint, this is more than we can hope for. The church at this place is weak, it being an isolated branch of the Sandy church, in the western part of Columbiana county; being located about forty miles north of the body of said church. From here we returned to Warren, and took train for the Columbiana church; and after a pleasant ride of about an hour, we arrived at Youngstown, a large iron manufacturing town, in the N. E corner of Mahoning county, Ohio. There we were met by our indefatigble brother F. Kohler, the present German nephew Elder Henry Kurtz, who conveyed us to his hospitable home near the meeting-house of the Columbiana church, which is also a rather weak body, in point of members being about forty; but, as far as we could see, all zealous in the cause; yet not quite as well united in their views on conducting the affairs of the church as we could wish to see. Still we enjoyed the visit with them very much, and held eleven meetings among them. Had the pleasure of visiting our old brother Henry once more. Father and mother Kurtz live in the village of Columbiana; and the brethren are always made welcome at their house, even as children are at the house of their parents.

On the 8th we took train at Columbiana for Beloit, a small station between Salem and Alliance, where we were met by the ever-friendly face of brother David Bowman, who conveyed us to his home in the Sandy church. This church is strong and flourishing, both in the official and laymember department, and traveling pilgrims are always well received by them. We held seven meetings at their meeting-house.

From thence we were conveyed by the brethren to the Canton church, in Stark county, where the shade of mourning has scarcely passed off occasioned by the angel of death in the removal of our highly esteemed brother, Elder D. J. Peck. We visited sister Sarah, whom we found rather more cheerful than we had anticipated. The church is one of medium strength. and is moveing along pleasantly, considering the shock and loss sustained in the death of brother Peck. We held five meetings at their meeting-house; and on the 15th we took cars at Louisville for Massillon, where we were met by our former neighbor and brother Ephrain Swinehart, who conveyed us to his new home in the West Nimishilling church. Here we held five meetings. This church is also of medium size, but, we think, a little in the rear of the times; having no meeting-house, they hold their meetings from house to house, which custom has the advantage of being time-honored if in nothing else.—From here we were conveyed by the brethren N. E. to the East Nimishilling church, still in Stark county, and held four meetings. Here the brethren have a large and commodious brick meeting-house, where we preached twice and the other two, meetings were at elder Brumbaugh's, about seven milds N. E. from the meeting-house, in Portage county, if memory is not mistaken. The brethren in this church are also a little more inclined to scatter the meetings than we think is profitable; yet they are warm and zealous brethren, and we enjoyed their society quite much. They number something over one hundred. From here we were conveyed to the center of Suffield, in the Springfield church, where we held two meetings in the German Reformed meeting-house. Had excellent attention, it being a new place for the brethren to preach at. From here we went to the Mishler settlement, near Modadore, in Summit county, where the body of the Springfield church lies. Here we held our last meetings, two in number, in the large new meeting-house, which was just built the past summer. The house is a neat and substantial frame, well arranged for room and convenience. The only fault we saw, was a little too much literal interpretation of the Apostle's injunction, "Mind not high things." The story is only twelve feet, and it looks a little too low for a house of that size; but, upon the whole, the house, the plan, the location, and ever the commodious sheds for their faithful horses to stand in during meeting, all speak well for the enterprise of Springfield brethren. And another beauty in the matter is, they had all the money ready before they commenced the building, and paid for every thing as they went.

This morning, January 22nd, ult., brother Carper brought us to Akron, seven miles, where we took the 7 o'clock train, and about 11 o'clock we were at my home in Congress, where sister Worst was waiting with a sleigh to take brother George home, where I hope they landed safely ere this time. We found our family well, thank the Lord. Absent three weeks and three days; held forty-one meetings, and found the brethren all well on our journey. The only thing we did not like so well, was, the meetings were too much scattered, especially in the last three churches; but the brethren wanted it so, and we do not demur; only it seems too much like sowing a ten-acre field with a bushel of seed, and expect a good crop of wheat. Yet we hope some of the seed we tried to sow in our weakness will take root and bring forth fruit to the honor and glory of God, through whose kind care we were kept in health, and are again safely at home. May we say with the psalmist, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me bless his holy name."

Yours in Gospel Union,

P. J. BROWN.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In Crooked Creek Congregation, Washington county, Iowa January 24th ult., ADA ROSE ETTER, twin, infant daughter of Brother Henry and sister Mary Etter, aged 11 months 17 days. Disease, affliction of the windtipe or larnyx. Funeral service by the writer, from Luke 23: 28, latter part of the verse. STEPHEN YODER.

In Jefferson county, Pa., November 15th 1871, friend WILLIAM McDIVITT. Consort of sister——— McDivitt; aged 39 years, 7 months and 27 days. Funeral service by the undersigned at the Methodist Episcopal church, from Heb. 9: 27.

The subject of this notice came to his end very suddenly and perhaps in a very unexpected manner. Engaged in company with a number of others, rafting on Mahoming creek, he was struck by the stem of the oar and knocked into the stream, and as his neck was broken when he was found, it is supposed that it was done by the stroke of the oar stem. He was hurried over the dam and sight lost of immediately and was not found till sometime afterward. Truly we are led to see that, "in the midst of life we are in death." J. P Hetire.

Of scrafula in the throat, January 25th in the Berlin congregation, Somerset county, Pa., Brother JOHN L. FORNEY, son of brother Samuel and sister Elizabeth Forney, aged 28 years 3 months and 20 days.

Funeral occasion improved by Brother Jacob D. Trostle, from Linganore, Md., and others, from the words: "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain," to a large concourse of people.

Brother Forney gave his heart to Jesus at an early age, and lived a life worthy of imitation. He was blessed with more than ordinary gifts intellectually, and during his confinement which I think was about three months; he suffered much, but he bore his afflictions with great calmness and christian resignation. (Visitor please copy.)

In the Aughurick arm, Huntingdon county Pa., January 14th, of Diphtheria and Croup, MARTHA daughter of Daniel and Emly McKILLIPS, aged 5 years 10 months and 24 days. Funeral services by G. G. Glock, from James 4: 14. A.L Funck.

'HOW TO GO WEST."

Forty years ago, Illinois was as far West as most people wished to go, and journeys were made in the legendary "Prairie Schooner," but in these days of Progress and Improvement, the word West has come to mean Iowa. Nebraska, Kansas, Colorada, California, and the Territories, and the Traveler reaches almost any point therein by a splendid Line of Railroad.

This Line of Railroad is the Burlington Route, which starts from Chicago over the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R., from Indianapolis, over the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western Short Line, and from Logansaort, over the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw R. R., and running through BURLINGTON, reaches Omaha. Lincolen, Nebraska City, St. Joseph, Atchison, Leavenworth and Kansas City, connecting with the Union Pacific, Kansas Pacific and other Railroads running from those cities.

Always go "By way of Burlington" and you will be sure to be right.

The Burlington Route has admirably answered the question, "How to go West ?" by the publication of a truthful and interesting document, filled with facts in regard to Time, Connections, Accommodations, rates of Fare, and otner interesting items and illustrated by a large map, truthfully showing the whole West, which they distribute free of charge. Copies, and additional information can be obtained by addressiug, General Passenger Agent. B. & M. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

THE

Christian Family Companion.

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

Purity of Heart.

"He that loveth pureness of heart, for the grace of his lips the king shall be his friend."

Every person that has come to the years of accountability has also heard something of good and evil. Every one that is accountable knows something of redemption and destruction. But all will know much more at the great judgment day. In reviewing the characters of mankind, when unraveling the secret windings of the human heart, we become astonished, declaring at the close of each investigation that we had not known the half before. It is quite unnecessary to go off to some neighbor against whom we are not very favorably disposed to find a subject which upon a thorough examination will prove to be a wonderful phenomenon. Each individual may introduce himself to his own heart, which he is ever too ready to regard as none of the worst: it may be and it certainly should be one that is touched by the renewing Spirit of God,—one at the door of which Christ has been admitted. We soon discover that the heart is the seat of all our affections. The existence and variety of these may be known and distinguished by our thoughts and actions. By close observation we find in it concealed, imprisoned or free, passions foul with lust. Deceit—not only that which deceives others, but ourselves. Its operations are made manifest by the sorrow it causes:—doing and saying things of which we are afterwards bound to be ashamed. All "lust of the flesh" "lust of the eye" "and the pride of life", is the deceitfulness which reigns in the heart. A soldier enlisted to fight for king Emmanuel, and still secretly trying to give quarter to the troops of Abaddon! Surely it is hypocrisy, and if not driven back and chained down in some dark place, or cast out, it will take possession of the whole kingdom. An heir of heaven and yet fearing and dreading the loss of earthly pleasures? Still looking back with desire to indulge—to stay a little longer—"a little more sleep a little more slumber"—a little more corruption? Still an unwelcome desire to carouse in the cup of death. Sometimes light prevails and sometimes darkness: then fear and hope mixed; now anger, then love; now entertaining heavenly virtues then lodging the enemies of Christ. At one time hating, denouncing sin, and at another indulging in it. Often convinced of evil and willing to do good, yet never doing much, and often doing right yet not half willing. Well could the humbled apostle declare: "Oh wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" and regard himself the "chief of sinners." It is by frequent, thorough examinations of our own hearts, that we come to the best understanding of them. And the only safe method of conducting these investigations is to let God—his word—be the examiner.

Sanctification.

"Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." John 17: 17.

"All scripture is given by inspiration of God." 2nd. Tim. 3; 16.

"Man liveth by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Matth. 4: 4.

Given—great big Free-will, with little, close communion away back in the shade: and so the world goes. Well, brethren, we can hardly hope to reform the world, but can't we make our shield of faith cover the whole Gospel? We are in the world and must fight, and need a weapon. Is not a perfect and entire sword a better weapon than a mutilated, gashed and ill-tempered piece?—Is not a broad foundation more permanent, and safe, and substantial, than a narrow and contracted one? And is not a hungering and thirsting, that is willing to devote any substantial article of food, more genuine and real than one that winces and minces, and chooses and refuses, with at best only a questionable relish?

"But our tastes differ."

Yes, just so. That is because we have been living on different diet.

"But our capacities differ."

And so does the capacity of our stomachs, depending a good deal on how they have been stuffed.

"We can't all see alike."

There are two reasons for that: one is, we don't stand in the same place; the other, we don't look at the same object. As to our standing-point, it should be in the liberty, in the spirit, and in the faith once delivered unto the saints, and hurd by the word of God. Stand for the word, to the word, by the word, on the word, with the word: "Stand still and see the salvation of God." Now for the object—"looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith who for the joy that was set before him left his Father's throne and became the star of Bethlehem and the Son of Righteousness to a benighted world. Now "Go forward," and you may rest assured our tastes, capacities, and understandings will not differ very much; and we will see pretty nearly alike.

It is true the infant cannot digest strong meat nor the infant mind, the mystery of godliness; but the practical, vital question that arises is, are we willing to embrace the word as truth, as fast as it opens up before our understanding? As we read, can we actually feel God talking to us—feel our duty in the statutes and commandments;—see our reward in the promises and the reward of disobedience in the threatenings? Where we can't comprehend, are we willing to sit, and trust, and wait? and where we can, are we willing to go diligently and heartily to work; stooping to any service, and surmounting every obstacle that comes before us?

Then there are some things that we do not find written. Do they savor of sin? Do they look unseemingly, distorted, bungling; sound discordant, and feel inconvenient?—Extra luggage almost always will prove inconvenient to a soldier. A sheep don't make a good saddle-horse; won't follow strangers, nor eat from their hand.

Children are afraid in the dark, and love to be at home. They are timid and backward in the presence of strangers; enjoy themselves best in their own family circle, and feel the most freedom and safety when their parents are near. Think what the Bible is to us: our guide in the pathway to heaven; our refuge, our shield, our weapon and our armor; a most perfect system of domestic economy and social intercourse; a rule for eating, and drinking, and sleeping, and working, and talking, and dressing, and giving, and receiving, and buying, and selling, and preaching, and praying, and singing, and seeing, and hearing; a guide to father, mother, brother, sister, husband, wife, parent, child, saint, sinner, old, young, rich, poor, everybody; to everyone a guide. It is the constitution and laws of the kingdom of heaven, the characteristics of which are "glorious liberty" and "perfect law." It is our spiritual meat and drink, and light and life. Our school and our teacher, our chart and our text book. An ancient history, a geography of heaven. A hand-book of travel from this world to the next. Calculations of eclipses long in the future. A thorough course of grammar with everything but false-syntax—What is the Bible not? Yet what is the Bible? Only words and sentences delivered to us from our Heavenly Father, nothing more. Next, wherein lies all their virtue? In their truthfulness.—What would they be worth to us if they were not true? Nothing, nothing; absolutely nothing.

The Lost Power.

I, for one, can heartily respond to brother Grove, in his advice to the members of the church, to pray for, and believe that God is just as able and willing now to own and bless his word, and to make good his promisses, as he was in the days of his incarnation. I too remember well, when that subject was presented to us, and a strong effort made on the part of some to prove that that power ceased with the lives of the apostles. Now, if that promise does not extend to us, how much more must we give up? Can those who say that it ceased with the lives of the apostles, tell us what we shall do with the passages of scripture that speak the same things. I will here give them for consideration to those who are interested on this subject. Matth. 18: 19th, "If two of you shall agree on earth, as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven." Matth. 21, 22, "And all things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing ye shall receive." Luke 11: 9, "Therefore I say unto you, Ask, it shall be given unto you." Mark 11: 24, "Therefore I say unto you what things soever you desire when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." John 15: 7, "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." John 14: 13, and whatsoever things ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father might be glorified in the Son." Why the sick are not more frequently raised up, may be, that the humble confession of our faults one to another is neglected; for the same apostle that says, "If any are sick among you, let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord, and the prayer of faith will save the sick, and the Lord will raise him up," also says, "Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed. The effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much.

LEAH CRONCE.

Mechanicsburg, Ill.

Remember the Poor.

Winter is now upon us; be mindful to the poor. You need not go far to find them; for the children of want are in every place. Speak a kind word, stretch forth the open hand of charity, and you will not lose your reward.

Some there are whose poverty comes through misfortune. Business is dull, wages are small, there is sickness in the family, and death takes away the husband and the father, on whom the other leaned for support. Hard is then the struggle to provide bread for the table and fuel for the stove, Harder still and more bitter far, is it for such to beg for help. Those who most deserve help are those who cannot ask for it in louder and important tones; but they suffer in silence. Blame not to harshly the sensitiveness of those who suffer rather than beg. Call it not pride, for it may spring, often does spring, from self-respect. Try to find such out, and help them with a sympathetic, Christ-like spirit.

Some there are whose poverty comes through crime. Vice has brought them to want. Dissipation has thrown them out of a good situation, broken their health and ruined their characters. Do not, in their wretchedness, oppress them with harsh words. They suffer. Help them first; warn them or reprove them afterward.—Show that you have a heart which beats tenderly toward them, and try to win them to a better way by kindness, Oh! think of power, the redeeming power there is in human sympathy and love. Those who are in trouble cannot forget the kindness which is then shown them, but will ever recall it with gratitude. Thus you may have an influence which may lead some to Jesus.

Learn, like good scholars, one of the most useful and joyous of all arts—the art of almsgiving. It is not enough to give to the needy. Give intelligently, so as not to encourage vice or laziness. Give to all; but especially unto those who are of "the household of faith." Give freely and willingly, that you may receive a blessing as well as those on whom your bounty may rest. Above all, with the gift, let there be personal sympathy. It is not the value of the gift, but the kindness of the giver, which arouses gratitude. Not money, but love awakens love. D good, not that you may be thanked, but because of the promtings of your better nature; and let "the blessings of Him that was ready to perish" rest on you. Then, through no trumpet may sound your fame, in the last great day you will hear the judge say: "I was an hugered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visitedme; I was in prison,and ye came unto me."

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me."—Methodist.

Sayings and Doings.

FAITH AND WORKS.—Some of the recent newspaper demonstrations of extraordinary zeal for the Sabbath, have given new currency hereabouts to an old story of an apparantly incorrigible old farmer. who publicly declared that he had at last "experienced religion." His minister, shortly after asked one of his neighbors if he saw any differance in the man, and the reply was: "Oh, yes! a great differance. Before, when he went out to chop in the woods on Sundays, he carried his ax on his shoulder, now he hides it under his coat."

We once knew the counterpart of this converted agriculturist. Though very anxious to pass with his "Puritan" neighbor for a truly good man, he had fallen into a habit of idleing a little through the week, and using some odd hours on Sunday on the sly to make up for lost time. Being once dected in this practice, he admitted to his remonstrating neighbor that he had occassionally done wrong in this thing. "But then," said he, with a air that revealed a full assurance of faith, "I always have the most heavenly thoughts in the night."—Cincinati Times.

Universalism not of God. No. 3.

The Apostle Paul, as a warrior, had well fought the good fight of faith; and in the great battles of his Sovereign, he was about to end his warfare with his departure from this life. It had ever been, during his warfare, his chief labor, that in the Christian race he might finish his course with joy. His desire was granted. He had run well, and run to the end; and his dying moments were consoled and cheered by the truth, that now his arduous race was run, and his reward was in heaven.

As a steward of the faith and of the manifold grace of God, he had been found faithful; and with his dying breath he could say, "I have kept the faith."

But let us now work upon supposition for a few moments, Universalist, and see how things will work. Suppose that Paul, the great warrior, had found the warfare very arduous, and in the time of conflict had deserted the doctrines of the Cross and joined the enemies of his Saviour; or, suppose that, knowing that the safe-keeping of the faith must be attended with great sacrifices, watchfulness, trials and persecutions, he had abandoned his trust, or, like Judas, betrayed it, what effect would this conduct have had upon his future condition, if Universalism is true? Would it make any difference?—Would there not still be in reserve for him a crown of glory? Would he not, as Paul the traitor, have as high a seat, as loud a song, and a diadem as bright, as he now has as Paul the triumphant warrior, the successful runner, the faithful steward, who resigned his life rather than yield up the faith? Would not he and Judas sit side by side upon their thrones of glory and light, in presence of that Holy Being whose body the one betrayed, and whose cause the other defended, if Universalism be true?

If it is true, Paul could have known nothing of it; for his dying breath announces that he had fought a good fight, had finished his course, and had kept the faith; henceforth there was laid up for him a crown of righteousness.

If Universalism be true, then was Paul a deceiver, with all the apostles and prophets; and the Saviour of the world, the Son of God, was mistaken in delivering the great plan of salvation to the children of men; yea, he was mistaken then when he forewarns all, that there will be but few who shall accept and receive the faith which he came to deliver, in comparison to the many that should inhabit this mundane system, when he says, "Many are called, but few are chosen." Hark, dear friends, the Saviour is true; his words are true, and faithful; and the end of the race will fully develop who are his.

I am unacquainted with a promise in the whole Scriptures that has not annexed to it a condition, expressed or evidently implied.

Universalism tells to its deluded votaries, that if they do not enter in at the strait gate, if they do not lay up treasures in heaven, if they do not in this world repent and believe the Gospel, it will be as well with them beyond the grave; though they die murderers, fornicators, drunkards, liars or thieves, they shall at last be saved beyond the grave. It tells them that all the punishment inflicted for sin, is while the transgressor lives in this world. It tells to them that there is no unquenchable fire, no prison for the wicked, no hell for the ungodly. Altemont listened to its Siren Song for many years; but in his dying breath says hell itself would be a refuge, if it could but hide him from the face and frowns of an angry God. O, Universalist! abandon your views; repent, and flee from the wrath of a sin-avenging God. Lay hold upon the words of eternal life in your probationary stay upon earth. Obey, while here, the Gospel of God. Eternal life is then your rich reward.

The Saviour says, "Come;" Christians say, "Come;" "The Spirit and the bride say, Come and take of the waters of life freely."

Lamentable, indeed, to think that the blood of souls must rest upon the ministers of Universalism; their hands, we think, are stained with the crimson flood. Upon them the deep condemnation must fall of handling the word of God deceitfully, of wresting the Scriptures unto their own destruction. May they be turned from their ruinous course, and be brought to repentance by the wooings of the Spirit, to the acknowledging of the truth, that they may recover themselves out of the snares of the devil, who are taken captive by him at his will.

"There is a fountain filled with blood,
Drawn from Immanuel's veins;
And sinners plunged beneath that flood,
Lose all their guilty stains."

All candid minds must acknowledge, after reading the Scriptures with an unbiased mind, that Universalism is not of God. A part of the system is identified with those who claim to find in the Scriptures false readings, or translations, or who base their arguments upon false interpretations, the answer to whom is found in the defences of the inspiration and authenticity of the Bible, and in works upon biblical criticism. The Universalist will tell you that the passsages of Scripture which speak of hell fire, are only figurative language.

Dear reader, if you have never entered into covenant relation with God, do it quickly; for if the language is only figurative, how much more the reality. Oh, then, turn speedily to God, and live. We are impressed with the idea that you surely can discriminate between a pattern and the substance itself. A pattern is a something to represent, or show how the real is to be made. We might illustrate it more clearly by the photograph likeness. You are aware of the fact that the imitation, or likeness, plainly reveals the man its superior; though it is nothing, yet it is an exact figure of the man—it tells us what he is. Well, then, dear friends, if the language is only figurative, I say again, turn, for how much more awful the punishment than the figure which is given to represent it.

The doctrine of universal salvation, we might present under three grand errors: first, a revival of the old errors of Simon Magus; secondly, the old exploded errors of Unitarianism, with all its rash assertions; thirdly, a form of destructive errors that has sprung up by the wayside, as the everlasting car of eternal truth has hauled her banners onward from generation to generation.

With the principles of interpretation, which they place upon the Scriptures, one would suppose, unless he was a good Biblical scholar, that a thousand proof texts might easily be produced. The mark of its advocates is, so to wrest the Scriptures that they may seem to teach the doctrine. But their principles and profession avail them but little in their work.

Dear reader, it looks to me as though the most illiterate student in the school of Christ could take the sword of the Spirit and knock the caption of their bulwark from stem to stern. The glaring inconsistency of the system, and the recklessness of the men to whom the author of the doctrine has committed the preaching of the faith, are in no way so vividly displayed as in connection with the defence of the system. And most of the proofs from the Scripture, upon which they rest, are irrelevant, having nothing to do with the subject, as many of them prove; and others, so far from teaching that all men will be saved, teach in their proper connection, most emphatically another doctrine. The author of the system, we think, is that old serpent, the Devil, and Satan, who beguiled mother Eve in the garden of Eden, for we see he went to her, with a lie in his mouth, and told her that they should not surely die; and further states to her, and says, "For God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened." So does he now come to the children of men, and present to them his sophisticated doctrine, and thereby leads many of them astray; yea, he presents to the human family truth and error together, as he did to mother Eve in the beginning.

With all the marked absurdity in their attempts to prove a universal salvation, yet will they have the effrontery to call upon an intelligent community to receive their system as the one revealed in the word of God, when it is said in the revelation of God's eternal word that all men are bound to the judgment, and that the wicked shall be cast into the burning lake that burneth with fire and brimstone, from which the smoke of their torment shall ascend for ever and ever.

O Lord, help the Universalist to see his danger, that he may repent and believe the Gospel.

WE are to work and learn. Life should have its quiet pauses, in which to gather rest for work, but no idle hours. The poor are to be ministered unto, the wicked to be reclaimed, and the sorrowing to be comforted.

Know Thyself.

The workings of the human mind have, from the earliest ages, been among the deepest mysteries. No man can tell, or imagine, even for an instant, the thought of another man. The wise and learned of all ages, have made the mental powers and capacities a subject of profound study and research; yet have been baffled, at every turn, by some new revalation of the human intellect, and the eccentricities of human talent. But the most reliable and accurate conclusion to be reached, regarding mental powers, is a rigid and pungent self-examination; weighing our own motives for action, our powers of mental endurance, our control over conscience, and our capacity to choose good and resist evil; considering well the inclination of our own mind, and the energies and capacities of our intellectual powers; for, to gain a knowledge of the mental powers of man, it is essential to study and investigate the same, and seek to become acquainted with the nature and inclinations of the human mind. It is the saying of an ancient sage, that "the proper study of mankind is, man." In no way can we so justly and accurately judge of other men, as in studying well our own hearts and minds; for a knowledge of our own mental powers and capacities will assist us in judging correctly of the nature and dispositions of other men's minds, and in possessing a knowledge of the human mind, we can gain a power that cannot be obtained by any study of written language —power to do good by the exercise of sympathy and beneficence, power to comfort by the subtile influence of gentle kindness, produced by trying to put ourselves in the position of the sufferer or mourner; and a power to impart cheerfulness by understanding the movings of of the human mind. Great and good men, in all ages, have given much of their time to self-examination. And we have authority from the sacred oracles for such habits of scrutiny and self-examination. The Psalmist says: "I will commune with my own heart." Besides, a habit of rigid self-examination, made consciously and prayfully, will tend to elevate the heart and mind; it tends to inspire the soul with the love of the good and beautiful; it will create within us a desire of better and nobler things than the present world can present to us; it will be our desire to know that which is good and pure and ennobling in its nature, and to detest that which is hurtful, mean, and demoralizing in its tendency.

The habit of truly, unflinchingly examining the heart, is not easily acquired. It is not easy to take the outward act, which the world applauds, into the secret chambers of our own hearts, and lay bare the selfish or worldly motives that prompted it. It is not easy to tear the mantle from the life of outward morality, and probe the hidden sin which the world suspects not. He who finds delight in true self-examination; who courts the voice of conscience; who brings to bear upon every action of his life, the hour of solemn, prayful thought preceeding it, is truly a good man. He may err in judgment; he may make many grave errors in worldly wisdom; he may never attain great honor, or great power; he may die poor, obscure, and unknown; but when he comes before the great tribunal that invites us all, where motives, not merely actions, are judged, he will meet his reward. It would be well for the young if they could acquire a constant habit of self-examination; if they gave one hour every morning to the task before entering upon the daily duties of life, or spent one hour at night, in reviewing the events of the day, and rigidly scanning the motives of every action, kneeling at the close of such scrutiny to ask pardon for what is wrong, help and support in what is right, and the humility of a christian life to continue in the self-appointed task. No one can aid in the duty; no parent or guardian can enforce it; to no second hand may a man come in the revalation of his own heart; it is a christian duty, and one of the brightest importance, to make a frequent self-examination of our own hearts, that we may know how to correct our many faults and defects in the christian path.

Reply to Sister Deardorff.

Dear Sister :—So you want to know what I really do believe, saying, "I would like to ask you some questions before we close our controversy, and I shall look for you to answer them?" You further say, "I understand you admit that the Gentile's time will be fulfilled when the Lord shall descend from heaven with the voice of the arch-angel, and the dead in Christ shall be raised first, &c. This you must admit is the first resurrection." Yes, sister, in this you are right, I believe so. Further on you ask, "Now, what I want to know is, in what state and condition do you suppose the world will be during the thousand years, when Satan will be shut up in the bottomless pit?" Further on you ask, "In what condition will Jerusalem be during the thousand years, and the world in general? What will be going on? Will there be any religion, and of what kind? Will the city be inhabited? if so, by whom? or will the gentiles still continue to tread it down, regardless of what the Savior has said? or do you believe as some do, that the heavens being on fire will be dissolved, its elements melt with ferven heat, and the rest of the dead be raised and brought to judgment, and the new heavens and new earth created immediately after the saints have been caught up to meet the "Lord in the air?"

I will try by the grace of God to answer your questions, that you may know what I really believe. Though I would rather have pondered these things, and reserved them in my mind, than give them to the public, because the opinions among men concerning the state of things after the fulness of the Gentiles shall have come in, are various and conflicting. But all opinions not according to scripture are only vain imaginations. I have no thoughts that my views will meet a general approval; though I will try to give reasons why I believe as I do; though, if my reasons do not substantiate my views, they will be worth nothing.

In the first place, I believe as I mentioned in my last, that all things which are written, concerning Jerusalem and the people who inhabited it, have been fulfilled. The reason for believing so, is, because my Savior says so. Luke 21: 22. Besides that, we know this city was only a type of the heavenly, and the imperfect thing is done away when that which is perfect has come. And so the old Jerusalem has been done away forever, and the land once so fruitful is desolate. And then your query, 'in what condition will Jerusalem be during the thousand years?" amounts to a nonentity, because that which has no existence cannot be in any condition.

And further, I believe when the fulness of the Gentiles has come in, we shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory: with power, because of the multitude of angels; with glory, because of the hosts of shining saints, who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb, triumphantly shouting and singing the song of redemption. And I believe this retinue of saints and angels is that holy city, New Jerusalem, which cometh down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned to meet her husband. To this agrees what the apostle has written to the Hebrews, saying, "ye are not come unto the mount that might be touched, and that burned with fire, nor unto blackness and darkness, and tempest, and the sound of a trumpet, and the voice of words; * * * but ye are come unto Mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the first-born, which are written in heaven, and to God the judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant."

And "when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ," I believe there will be terrible lightnings and mighty thunderings, and the inhabitants of the earth will quake with terror, and with fear and amazement, and there will be terrible wailing and mourning over the whole earth. And I believe when the saints, who are the salt of the earth, have been caught up to meet the Lord in the air, the world will be in fit condition for desolation and destruction; that then the Lord in his great and sore displeasure will punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquities. But it is not probable that the judgments will follow each other in such quick succession as we might imagine.—And I believe when the saints have been removed from the earth, will be the time when that great Babylon will fall. When those who have worshipped creeds, confessions and articles of faith, shall see that all their profession is nothing; that now the saints are in glory, and they are left behind like foolish virgins, then will they call upon their preachers as the rocks, and their creeds and confessions as the mountains to cover them, and hide their nakedness, for shame and for fear, from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb.

You will soon see that I do not believe in a worldly or temporal Millennium, because I have not found sufficient scripture yet to sustain such a belief, but enough for the contrary. The book of Revelations is so figurative and so allegorical, that we may easily fail to comprehend the true meaning of things. And in regard to the Millennium so little is said, that we may easily overestimate our views of it. It is very likely that there will be a terrible state of things on the earth for some time after the saints have been removed from it, until all the wicked have been destroyed. And I believe the fires without, in dissolving the elements, will come into contact with the fires within, and all combustible things on the earth will be destroyed; and that during the thousand years the earth will undergo a physical change. I will tell you more about this after awhile. The reason why I believe that those who are not caught up to meet the Lord in the air will be destroyed from the face of the whole earth, is this: first, the saints are the salt of the earth, and for their sakes the earth is still preserved, but when they have been removed it will be preserved but little longer; and second, it was always the Lord's way to take away his people before he brought destruction on any place. He did so in the desolation of Jerusalem. We are told that the saints in that city, before its desolation, took heed to the Savior's warning, and fled to the mountains. He took away his people before the destruction of Sodom, and before the drowning of the world by the flood. And even if the world is not destroyed soon after the saints have been caught up to meet the Lord in the air, there will be no religion on the earth. This, I infer, first, from the fact that the Savior will then have laid down his mediatorial office, and will no longer stand interceding and pleading for man before the Sovereign mercy seat. But he and his church of the first-born, will celebrate the marriage of the Lamb a thousand years. And second, I infer from the parable of the ten virgins, that those who are ready, having their lamps trimmed, and oil in their vessels, waiting and watching for the Bridegroom, will be caught up to meet Him in the air, and the door will be closed. There will be no medium between God and man, no access to the Father's mercy seat. The foolish virgins may knock at the door, cyring, "Lord, Lord, open unto us," but will find no admittance. And third, when Noah, a preacher of righteousness, had invited and entreated the people perhaps a hundred years, to be saved from the coming deluge, but they refused and believed not, on a certain day he and his family entered into the ark, and the door was closed, before ever the impending floods broke in; and we have reason to believe that thousands would have entered the ark afterward, and that they called unto Noah, "Lord, lord, open unto us," but the door was closed. So will it be at the end of the world, when the door in the ark of the New Testament is closed; even scoffers would enter yet if they could. For "as it was in the days of Noah, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." JAS. Y. HECKLER.

Meekness and Humility. No. 2.

Having, we think, very briefly proven that meekness is one of the several Christian graces, we also claim humility to be another Christian grace; so much taught in the New Testament by our Savior, and by all his disciples, that we feel to urge it upon all who profess to follow Jesus in his appointed way; for, indeed, it is a lamentable fact that in looking around upon the Christian world, we see those who profess the name of Jesus—see their walk, their appearance, their manners, their dealings with their fellow-men—and we feel to say with deep sorrow, that humility, that Christian grace, is lost sight of. All such we entreat to hear the word of the Lord; hear, all ye proud, ye haughty minds, as uttered by God himself to the prophet, "I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones." Isa. 57: 50. What a sublime conception is here presented to us of the glory of God, as dwelling in the high and holy place; looking down upon fallen, sinful man, and so much admiring this Christian gace, humility, in his creatures on earth, as to condescend to come down from the highest heights of heaven, not only to visit, but to dwell with the man who is of an humble and contrite spirit.

Our Savior gives us a very beautiful illustration of humility in the parable of the wedding, recorded in the 14th chapter of Luke. When he saw how they, or at least some of them, had chosen the chief rooms, he said unto them, "When thou art bidden of any man to a wedding, sit not down in the highest room, lest a more honorable man than thou be bidden of him, and he that bade thee and him come and say to thee, give this man place; and thou begin with shame to take the lowest room. But when thou art bidden, go and sit down in the lowest rooms; that when he that bade thee cometh, he may say unto thee, Friend, go up higher; then shalt thou have worship in the presence of them that sit at meat with thee. For (mark it) whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted." Also in the pharisee and the publican, recorded by the same apostle, how the publican by humbling himself was justified. But to pass over all the earnest admonitions of Paul and Peter, how they taught to all the Church this Christian grace, humility, we come to Jesus, who is our pattern and our example, whom we should try to follow, if we wish to be happy here and happy throughout the endless ages of eternity. And in going back to his birth, we behold with the eye of faith, a babe born in a manger. There did our dear Redeemer lie in the city of Bethlehem, wrapped in swaddling clothes; and from that time, till the hour in which "he bowed his head and gave up the ghost," his circumstances were of the the humblest kind. Remember his words, "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." He became so poor, so humble, that we might become rich in glory; and shall we, poor worms of the dust, be so proud, and feel ourselves exalted? God forbid.

But I do not desire now to make, nor is it expected by the reader that I should make detailed references to all acts of humility taught and practiced by our Lord and Master. I only feel to mention one, which I think is worthy of notice, as it is overlooked and set aside by nearly all the Churches and the professed followers of the meek and humble Jesus; and that is, when he instituted the ordinance of feet-washing, and thus gave us an example of humility, when he stooped to wash his disciples' feet. This is of itself, I think, sufficient for every unbiased mind to show how great was our Savior's humility, and that we, as his followers, should not be ashamed to wash our brethren's feet; for he says, "Ye call me Master and Lord, and ye say well, for I am. If I, then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet; for I have given you an example that ye should do as I have done to you." The command is as plain as words can convey it. Why not obey, that you may meet his approbation? "For happy are ye if you do them." Yea, my Christian friend, whoever you are, if this should meet your eye, believe it, there is happiness beyond all measure in true and faithful following our Savior in all his appointed ways—obeying all his commands. Let us, my brothers and sisters, be humble followers of Jesus, that we may have him for our friend through the journey of this life, and in the hour of death, when all other friends must leave us, when they can do us no more good, we will then have a friend we can lean upon when we go through the dark valley and shadow of death, and who will present us spotless (being washed in his blood) before his Father and the holy angels.

And now, to sum up, for I think I need not add another word to convince the reader that humility is eminently a Christian virtue, which should be seen in all our walk and conversation. There are few sins which are more strongly or more frequently condemned in the word of God than pride. Every careful and prayerful reader of the Bible must be convinced of this truth. We are warned against pride as against a state of mind which is dangerous to ourselves. It is represented as a state or condition of mind which usually goes before a fall. And no doubt all of us can point to a greater or less number of instances in which the words of God have been verified by God himself, in laying low haughty looks, and humbling those that have exalted themselves. But aside from this, and if we see the proud man prosperous, so far as relates to this world, he is an entire stranger to true happiness. It is only the man who is of an humble and contrite spirit, and trembleth at God's word, who is truly happy, and who is less likely to be assailed by temptation, trials and troubles of this life. We therefore say, as we close, on the very best authority, that the truly humble man is the happiest man both for time and eternity. J. G. HARLEY.

Christ the Word.—(John I chap.)

BY SILAS THOMAS.

In the past eternal ages
Far beyond a finite ken,
Long 'ere life in scripture pages
Offered was to dying men;
Or the great and vast creation
Sprang to being at a nod,
Christ the Word decreed salvation
In the bosom was of God.

Deity foresaw the ruin
Satan's deed would cause to man,
Love divine had all to do in Forming the amazing plan;
Which to us brings life amending,
And the devil's work to naught,
Mercy's scheme! O love transcending,
To our race with goodness fraught.

Sacrifices and libation,
Which on Jewish shrines were lain,
Typed a lamb that from foundation
Of this nether world was slain;
Lamb of God! such condesension
In His well beloved Son,
Shows a deed past comprehension
To the sinful and undone.

Glory, honor, pow'r forsaking,
He came down to dwell on earth;
On himself our nature taking
Through the means of mortal birth;
Thus the Word made flesh among us,
Dwelt, and taught his Father's will;
And obedience does become us,
If his love our bosoms fill.

In appearance meek and lowly,
Christ the Lord of glory came;
Poor; no place to lay his holy
Head had he; yet who can name
Countless numbers rich in glory,
Through his humble poverty;
Heav'n alone will tell the story,
Where we face to face shall see.

Anxious thousands thronged around him
The "good news from him to hear,
Humble sinners ever found him
Ready broken hearts to cheer;
All the sick, and sore afflicted,
Both in body and in mind,
In his face see help depicted,
Him a sure physician find.

Yet 'mid all his love and goodness,
Foes conspired against the Lord;
Treating him with scorn and rudeness,
They refused to hear his word;
Sadder still, they crucified him,
And, while hanging on the tree,
Did maliciously deride him,
Bending mockingly the knee.

And he died in anguish groaning,
Loudly crying, "It is done;"
Thus for guilty man atoning,
He the wine-press trod alone.
In the sepulchur they laid him,
Rolled a stone upon the door;
Vainly thinking they had made him,
Close his lips forever more.

But he rose in pow'r and glory,
Over foes, and death, and grave,
And from hell, O blissful story!
Has unending pow'r to save;
Then let all his children praise him,
For his matchless deeds of love,
And a song of worship raise him
In the realms of bliss above.

Jesus, Master, we would love thee,
More and more; forever more;
We would prize none else above thee,
We would worship and adore.
We will give one only reason
Why our hearts should overflow,
Thou didst love us when in treason,
Savior, why we do not know.

Secret Springs of Action.

Being at leisure to-day, I thought of penning a few thoughts upon the true motives—the secret springs of our actions. To acquire a knowledge of these, may cost us much pains; but without it we shall be in danger of passing a false judgment upon our actions, and of having a wrong opinion of several parts of our conduct. It is not only very possible, but very common, for men to be ignorant of the chief reasons of their conduct, and to imagine that they act from one motive, while they are in fact governed by another.

If we examine our views, and look narrowly into our hearts, we shall find that they, more frequently than we are aware, deceive us in this respect by persuading us that we are governed by much better motives than we are. The honor of God and the interest of religion may be the open and avowed motives, while worldly interests and secret vanity may be the hidden and true ones. While we think we are serving God, we may be sacrificing only to mammon. We may, like John, boast our zeal for the Lord, when we are only animated by the heat of our natural passions; we may veil a censorious spirit under a cloak of piety; and our admonitions to others, may be only giving vent to our spleen.

How many come to the place of public worship from custom or curiosity, who would be thought to come thither only from conscience! And while their external and professed views are to serve God, and to receive good to their souls, their secret and inward motive is only to show themselves to advantage, or to avoid singularity. By thus disguising our motives we may impose upon others, but, at the same time, we impose upon ourselves; and whilst we are deceiving others, our own hearts are deceiving us; and of all impostures, self-deception is the most dangerous, because least suspected.

Now, unless we examine this point narrowly, we shall never reach the bottom of it; and unless we discover the true spring and real motive of our actions, we shall never be able to form a right judgment of them, and they may appear very different in our own eye and in the eye of the world, from what they do in the eye of God: "For the Lord seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart." 1 Sam, 16: 17. Hence it is, that often "that which is highly esteemed among men, is abomination in the sight of God." Luke 16: 15. "Every way of man is right in his own eyes; but the Lord pondereth the heart." Prov. 21: 2.

Now, readers of the COMPANION, in conclusion I will say to myself, and to all, whatsoever we do, let us do all to the glory and honor of God.

Woman's Mission.

From study and observation it has become clear to me that woman's is a domestic mission, which is to affect society through the medium of family influence. How much in the present system of education is calculated rather to prepare females to dazzle in the circle of fashion and gayety, than to shine in the retirement of home. To polish the exterior by what are called accomplishments seems to be more the object than to give a solid substratum of piety, intelligence and social virtue. We want to see women educated, not to be a man's toy, but his companion. We want to see her invested with something higher and better than fashionable littleness, elegant trifles and fashionable airs.—Selected.

To Stop Bleeding.

It is said that bleeding from a a wound on man or beast may be stopped by a mixture of wheat flour and common salt, in equal parts, bound on with a cloth. If the bleeding be profuse, use a large quantity, say from one to three pints. It may be left on for hours, or even days if necessary. The person who gave us this receipe says: "In this manner I saved the life of a horse which was bleeding from a wounded artery; the bleeding ceased in five minutes after the application."

For the COMPANION.

Meekness and Humility.

Meekness and humility are two of the christian graces which cannot be lost sight of by the true and faithful follower of our Lord and Master, Jesus Christ. And in calling the minds of my brethren and sisters, and the dear reader of the COMPANION to this fact, I shall refer you, for the best and only proof of this truth, to the blessed volume, for that alone is our guide to that celestial city, the New Jerusalem, which John saw coming down from heaven, and which shall be the habitation of all the saints. And we ask a careful examination of every enquiring soul to that city, to examine well the record book, for that alone will tell us if we have a good title. For you will then see that among the several christian graces, which we are so earnestly enjoined to cultivate, there is probably none more taught and practiced by our Savior, while on earth, than "peaceableness, and gentleness" with humility.

Meekness is a disposition of mind to which Jesus, in his sermon on the mount pronounced a blessing.—"Blessed," says he, "are the meek." Now the definition that Webster gives to meek is, "mild of temper; not easily provoked, or irritated; given to forbearance under injuiries; soft, gentle, yielding." Now do we not see plainly the character of the christian man, the one who is a true and faithful follower of Jesus, (and that should be our aim) must be a man who cherishes a peaceable disposition, and consequently, loves peace, and will seek to promote it in every possible way. O that we might have more of the spirit of meekness, which would cause lasting peace in families, in churches, and in communities. How much misery is brought upon the human race, through the violation of this christian grace! Brethren and sisters, let us try to cultivate more of the mind which was in Jesus. We shall then be more ready to bear with each other. (Here I would like to add a few words in regard to feet-washing, but think it best to withhold my pen till after the Annual Meeting.)

We will now go to the word of God. See Paul in his letter to the Romans, twelfth chapter, and 18th verse. He says: "If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men." By this we understand Paul to mean that we should cherish and exemplify that meekness of spirit, which will make us willing to yield, and some times bear the cross, and by that means avoid all occasion which may lead to quarrels, or even to controversy. And in Paul's epistle to the Galatians he commends the same christian virtue, for in the fifth chapter, 22d and 23d verses, he says, "But the fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such, there is no law." And in the first verse of his next chapter, he seems to give prominence to this christian grace of meekness, when he says, "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted So too, does Paul commend his brethren to inculcate this grace of meekness in his third chapter of his epistle to the Colossans. In that chapter, he says: "Put on therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long-suffering; forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any; even as Christ forgave you so also do ye." But not to weary the reader by quoting passages of scripture, which we might do, and fill several pages, to sustain the ground of the christian grace meekness, having quoted sufficient we think, for every unbiased mind. So then for farther testimony, take the book, read for yourself, you will then see it full of the spirit of meekness and humility, which was so much seen, in our blessed Jesus, and his disciples.

I cannot help before I leave the subject to refer the reader to Christ himself, who is our pattern, and who has given us instructions, how we are to talk. He having declared himself our Good Shepherd and bid us as sheep to follow. "Learn of me," he says, "for I am meek and lowly in heart," and not a single incident ever occurred in the whole history of his life, which was in the slightest degree at variance with the character for meekness and humility which he thus gives himself. And the Apostle Peter very briefly sums up the character of Jesus, as the meekest man that ever trod this sinful earth on which we dwell, when he says in the 2nd chapter of his first epistle 23: verse: "Who when, he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously."

The mind of a meek man is a stranger to those storms and tempests, which rage in the heart of so many of our fellow men. He may have, and indeed the true christian has his trials, his troubles, his disappointments in this life, but he remembers the words of the meek and humble Jesus, "come unto me and I will give you rest:" "Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart." And again, "In the world ye shall have tribulations, but in me ye shall have peace." He therefore goes to Jesus, and he realizes in his daily experience, how true his words are when he says: Blessed are the meek. A spirit of meekness, if we possess it, leads us to look upon all the vicissitudes of life in a very favorable light. We see good, and extract good from all the dispensations of providence which would weigh down and almost crush those who are strangers to that spirit.—What peace, what harmony, what happiness would prevail in the human family if all were possessors of this lovely disposition. We would then be indeed like Jesus, and would inhabit, or dwell with him on the earth, when he shall come with the holy angels, and with all the saints, in that beautiful city, the new Jerusalem, "who's builder and maker is God."

The Fashions.

"Fashionable" dress and equipage are the uniform of the army of "god of this world," and "fashionable costumes" are his tactics. Why should Christians adopt them? See Rom. 7: 1, 2, and 1 John 2: 15, 16. Many a soldier of Christ has been infected with the clothing, or taken prisoner by the tactics, and millions of the Lord's money have been taken from his work by the devices of the enemy. How long shall this course continue? Shall Christains still ask of Paris, or any other worldly fashionable centre, instructions how long to live?—American Messenger.

Design of Christ's Death.

"And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so shall the Son of man be lifted up." John 3: 14.

I have been hindered from going to meeting to-day, by the cold rain and sleet, and I thought it would not be out of place to offer a few thoughts on the design of the death of the blessed Savior, for the consideration of the readers of the COMPANION.

I heard a minister of the gospel, not long ago, preach that Christ died to make satisfaction to Divine law and justice, and to appease the wrath of God, and to reconcile God to man. This view we consider to be inconsistent with the teachings of the gospel; and as the gospel is the rule by which we should try men's opinions, we will therefore try to make an application of the same, and see whether this opinion will stand the test. Now, if Christ died to make satisfaction to law and justice, for our sins, in order to our justification, then it would follow that all must be saved, and that Universalism must be the true doctrine. If all are not saved, then Christ did not die for all, and Calvinistic election and reprobation must be the true doctrine. Now, we truly believe that the scriptures condemn both of these doctrines, or systems. In order to decide whether the above system is correct, it is necessary to make the inquiry, What is the demand of "Divine law and justice?" We are answered in one voice by all—Death, temporal, spiritual and eternal. "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Now, in order to know whether Christ paid these debts, we will make the inquiry, Did Christ die a natural or temporal death, in our stead? If so, why do we all yet die? If the debt was paid by him for us, can it be just that we suffer it again?

We will farther inquire, did he die a spiritual death for us? If so, why then do we all suffer this death? All are destitute of spiritual life; all are dead in trespasses and sins; have no desire for God. Could a holy law make such demands? Could the holy Jesus pay such? Impossible. Well, then, did Christ suffer eternal death in our room and stead? Impossible; for he rose from the dead the third day, and is now living in heaven forever. Besides this, eternal punishment has no end, and to all eternity the debt could not be paid; therefore, until the debt be paid, justice cannot be satisfied, and consequently there can be no justification forever on this plan. Therefore, the system that teaches that Christ died to pay the demands of Divine law and justice, is false, and falls at the touch of truth.

We have tried also the assertion that Christ died to reconcile the Father to us. This we find to be an unscriptural assertion. None of the sacred writers have said so. They represent God as an unchanging being. The death of Jesus is never represented as having any effect on God; but the whole effect passed upon man, for his good. The apostle says: "For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life."

There is another opinion, that is become very common, that we think to be very unscriptural—that is, that Jesus died to open the door of mercy to the world, or to make it possible for God to justify him that believeth in his Son. This door is represented to be in the breast of God. Justice and truth are said to have closed it against the egress of mercy to save sinners. Therefore it was impossible for mercy to get out until the door was opened; and justice opposed its being opened until satisfaction was made to its demands. These demands we find, too, as before stated, death, temporal, spiritual and eternal. We see that the doctrine is not true. The door that is closed against mercy is not in the breast of God; for the greatest gift of mercy, yea, all the gifts of mercy, were vouchsafed to us in the gift of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, before justice could be satisfied by his death: "for God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life." Therefore, the gift of Jesus was before his death: and this, according to the system, must be before the satisfaction could be made. The door that is closed is in our hearts: but the Lord is represented as knocking. When we open, he, with his fulness, will come in and bless us.

Having thus far examined the above systems, and finding them faulty, we will now try, in as few words as possible, to give our views in regard to the design of the death of Christ. In order to ascertain the design of his death, it is important to know what he accomplished for us. The Apostle Paul in his letter to the Hebrews, says, "Christ being come a high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building; neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood he entered in once, into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us." Heb. 9: 11, 12. Again the apostle says, "For this cause he is the mediator of the new testament, that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first testament, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance."

According to the above scripture we perceive that the Savior by means of death, obtained eternal redemption for us. Then it follows that this was the design for which he died; and those that are called can receive the promise of eternal inheritance. Now as we could not receive this promise by means of the first testament, it was highly important that there should be a new order of things brought about, and this new order of things is turned the new testament. It was also important that this testament should be dedicated by the precious blood of Jesus Christ. There was no other sacrifice which could be offered, which would pertain to the purging of the conscience or purifying of the soul. Now those that are so called, we understand to be, all that will comply with the conditions upon which this redemption is offered; because there are conditions upon which salvation is offered, and it is by complying with the conditions that we come into contact with the blood of Christ. The apostle John says: If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with the another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. Now the above scripture teaches us that the blood of Jesus Christ is the precious element by which we are cleansed from sin, and makes walking in the light the condition. The apostle Peter explains to us what walking in the light is, when he says, "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently." Then we see that walking in the light implies walking in obedience to the truth, and that it is by obeying the truth that we receive the atonement that Jesus made for the sins of the world or that our sins are obliterated, and we are again at one with God.

We will offer a thought or two on the design of lifting up the serpent in the wilderness. The design of Moses lifting up the serpent in the wilderness was, not to pay the demands of a violated justice, neither to appease the wrath of God, neither to procure the mercy of God to the rebellious Israelites, but it was the mercy of God that caused it to be used that those who were bitten might be healed. This was offered upon conditions; and the promise was that it should come to pass that when those that were bitten would look upon the brazen serpent, they should be healed. Neither was the cure effected until the conditions were complied with. "And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so, (that is for a similar design) shall the son of man be lifted up; not to pay the demands of a violated law and justice; neither to appease the wrath of God, neither to reconcile God to man nor to procure the mercy of God to man but it was the mercy of God that caused him to give his Son, that all who would comply with the conditions prescribed by him might receive the atonement, and become reconciled with God by his death; "for God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

No Editor.

During the past week we have had no editor. For some time we have been very much behind time, caused by a lack of mechanical aid, greatly to the annoyance of publisher and readers. Determined to endure it no longer, if it can be avoided by our efforts, the editor laid off his coat and went into the printing office. And by our aid, and other assistance, we are again within a day of being up to time. Next week, unless some unforseen hindrance occurs, we hope to catch up.

Errors in Our Book List.

Some of the price figures in our List of Books for Sale, had been disturbed, and in replacing them were set up so as to make the prices much too low. For instance we have the German and English Turkey Morrocco, quoted at $10 30 instead of $13.30 per dozen. These errors also occur in the Almanac advertisements.—Those contemplating the purchase of Hymn Books will please note these errors.

Answers To Correspondents.

WHAT I KNOW ABOUT PREACHING, No. 4.—Perhaps you could please yourself better by writing again, after reading last week's COMPANION. The authorship need not be denied, at all events. Try again.

D. S. MCDANIEL. No: We cannot give you the address of brother John Filmore. That is one minister's name that is not in Brethren's Almanac. Would be pleased to have it, as well as the names and addresses of all other ministers who are found not to be in our list. We have a copy conveniently arranged to enter all such. Who knows of any? We thought we had them all.

E. BRUMBAUGH: It is an error. The English and German hymn-books are $12.00 per dozen, by express: $13.50 by mail, postpaid.

J. P. HORNING: The book was sent to Huntsville, Ill. We have ordered the P. M. to forward it to you. If it does not reach you soon, write us again.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. H. R. HOLSINGER, Dear Brother:—I am here where there are but few Brethren, the following questions are often asked of me, and answered in the negative: "Do the Brethren take in members without baptizing them?" Am I right? If not correct me. I have no church. If I had I could admit members without infringing on any law. And if the Dunkards have a church of their own they can do the same: I profess to belong to the church of Christ, or of God in Christ Jesus, as in Matt. 23 : 8. Is not the commission "go ye therefore teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost." We might have quite a congregation here, if we would take members on their own terms. JOHN STOUFFER.

My dear brother in the Lord:—My love and greetings to you and to the brethren and sisters in your vicinity. I read an article in the COMPANION, written by J. A. Sell, with whose relatives I was well acquainted when I was young, and now I am nearly eighthy-two years old. I worked for old brother David Albaugh, and for old brother Stephen Ulery, and for old brother Jacob Shenefelt, in Moorisons Cove. I was well acquainted with all the old brethren and sisters in that country. It made my heart rejoice to hear their names mentioned by brother Sell. And now, brother I will give you a short sketch of my history.

My parents belonged to the Presbyterians. By being so long among the Brethren, I got an inward love for the church of Christ, but my parents made me come to their church. The preacher's name was John H. He came to my house one Saturday evening, to lodge with us and visit his children. I had but a limited education. In the morning, while my wife was preparing breakfast, I happened on the 13th chapter of John and I put the question to the old preacher in our church (as I then called it), "Why do we not attend to that ordinance?" He dropped his head for a while; then he looked up again, and, with a great sigh, said, "My beloved child, that belongs to the Dunkards." Well, we afterward moved to Ohio, and father, mother all came to the Brethren. How often have I thought of the deception practiced by many who profess spiritual leaders. ADAM WIMER.

Brother Holsinger:—I noticed a query by Noah Longenecker, in No. 2 page 30, "Why is John's baptism called the baptism of repentence?" I would answer it by saying, that the gospel of Christ requires repentence before baptism.

2. "Was John's baptism the cristian baptism?" I would say, yes, it was christian enough for Christ; therefore it should be for us. If it had not been christian baptism, surely Christ would not have accepted it, and says, "Thus it becometh us to fullfil all righteousness."

3. "Why were those twelve of Acts. 19 rebaptized?" Because they were never before baptized by the proper authority. Take for illustration, the following: (as there are many such cases.) A member leaves our church; set up for themselves; babtizes with our baptism; finally the baptized become dissatisfied; they come to us for admittance, we take them, or receive them as we do all other applicants; we rebaptize them. So I believe that the first administrator in the above case was one who took John's baptism to be a good one, and the only one to be valid; hence he baptized with or unto John's baptism. These are my views of the queries. If not corret, they stand open for correction.

Yours in brotherly love,
JOSEPH HOLDER.

Dear Brother:—I want you to try and send us a minister to preach for us; for we have a hard time of it here, as the Brethren (Dunkards) are something new. I also desire you to publish some good articles on baptism, and other ordinance Friend Holsinger:—I wish to inform the readers of the C. F. C., that we fell to rejoice because we had our minds refreshed by the the true gospel, and our hearts filled with the true revelation of God's word by two of your kind brethren, George Long and Josiah Winey. We feel to thank them for their visit and pray the Lord that they may return again and cheer us up in this unfriendly world. Now there are but six of your members here, and have been visited five times. In the first place there were only three members and in five visits they gained one-half. I think that is pretty well considering the opposition they have had. They have a hard row to hoe; but they are bound to build up a church here, and I glory in their resolutions, I shall stand by them and rejoice. But I want you to remember that these brethren are poor, and some have large families and they have paid 20 dollars for traveling expenses that I know of. Now then these brethren should have preaching and use some of the treasury money, for they are robbing their familes.

I think some of the Indiana Brethren should make us the next visit, for there is a good prospect for a church here. But it can't be done without preaching. Now if you will not go and preach to all nations, come out here to Clinton county Mich., and help to build up your scattered brethren, and multiply their number.—Don't let your money lay in your treasury, but put it to use. You must rouse up and be a doing while it is day, for night cometh when no man can work..

We hear of some meetings through the C. F. C. where there are half a dozen preachers. When these few scattered members read this it makes them feel sad, and discouraged, and I don't blame them. Here at Green Bush, the brethren have no preaching. Will none of you pity them and come and preach for them, and the brethren 2 miles south of Shepardsville. Remember them, they will give you shelter, food, and friendship. Will not the Indiana brethren come and strengthen them with the gospel? There are a good many pondering between two opinions and several have already expressed that the Dunkard church was their church. This is encouraging, I think. Will you not come where there is so encouraging news? The brethren here expect to be visited from Indiana before long. Don't put it off too long. There is a work to do here. H. HUNT.

Dear Brother Henry:—Having been a member of the COMPANION family from its birth, and having received many good lessons therefrom, and as you invite all to contribute to its columns, I have thought perhaps it was my time to cast in a note.

How shall we make church going and home attractive to our children?

This thought has been somewhat bearing upon my mind this day, and I should be pleased to hear some of our able brethren write upon the subject. Brethren and sisters, are we discharging our duty in this matter? Are we bringing them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord? O, how heart-sickening it is when they have been good boys and girls, and obeyed their parents, been as olive branches around our tables, when they grow up to years of accountability, and then turn to the left and take that broad way that leads to everlasting ruin, and then death overtakes them before they can come back! And O, how soon man must sometimes leave this world! We have witnessed this of late in our town. One man, seemingly in perfect health, conversing with his friend, fell over dead, not having time to utter a word. O, what a warning to the sinner! Another one was working in his yard; an apoplectic stroke cut him down, and now he is in eternity.

Think, young man—young woman—before you go so far from home. My mother would talk to me, and weep as she talked. I left her, and went out of the house; but wept too when I got out.

I do believe we could make home and the church more attractive by letting our children mingle with our religious exercises in the family worship, by letting them read the chapter, or all sing a hymn together, with the spirit, and with the understanding also; and at church, where there are no Sabbath-schools, take them with us, and all exercise in singing the short songs of Zion.

> Gracious Lord, our children see,
> By thy mercy we are free;
> But shall these, alas! remain
> Subjects of Satanic reign?
> Israel's young ones, when of old
> Pharaoh threatened to withhold,
> Then thy messenger said, "No:
> Let the children also go."

Brother Henry:—Will you give an explanation of the words, "And when he had made a scourge of small cords, he drove them all out of the temple"?—John ii., 15.

Brother Holsinger:—By the severity and uncertainity of the weather, and the condition of my health, (being much afflicted with rheumatism,) I was kept at home from meeting to-day. I have therefore a little leisure time which I will employ in writing a few thoughts which you are at liberty to reject entirely.

There are some who object to our church periodicals, saying there is too much controversy and difference of opinion published in them. I suppose all agree that it would be better if there was not so much difference of opinion, but the publishing of the papapers does not neccessarily make this difference. It is only a means whereby we learn of differences already existing. It also may be a means whereby these differences can be reconciled, in a great measure. It is a means whereby we become better acquainted with each other. True, some things have been published which may have done more harm than good; but how many of us often say things that do more harm than good? Are we willing for this reason to remain silent? Let us therefore try to look for good rather than faults. We will be almost sure to find it. Oh! how it makes our hearts rejoice to learn that there is so much sympathy manifest throughout the brotherhood.

Beloved! does it not make your hearts leap for joy, at reading such expressions as "I often think of the dear brethren and sisters in the west?" Yes! when we feel lonely, discouraged and entirely unable to discharge the responsible duties dovolving upon us, and then to know that they, being perhaps much more favorably situated than we, think of us—sympathize with us—and what is still more effectual pray for us—should encourage us to be more zealous, and "by patient continuance in well-doing seek for glory and honor and immortality, and eternal life.

To Sister Sarah Hape.

In No. 3 of present volume of C. F. C., there occurred a short, but touching lettle from you. It is truly painful to be so much isolated from our dear brethren and sisters, that we have not the privilege of enjoying their society. Your words, "I am so glad for any reading or news of the church &c," crave our sympathy for you. You speak of not knowing of any brethren being in Georgia. We know of one brother, (E. Heyser of Madison, Ga.,) of whom we read an article in the C. F. C., a short time ago. We also had the pleasure of hearing him preach a few years ago while on a visit north. We sometimes feel dissatisfied that we have not the privilege of mingling with the sainted ones as we desire, but then when we reflect that there are numbers of our dear brethren and sisters who do not even enjoy the privileges which we do, we feel like taking new courage. But we all have one grand privilege. We can pray to our dear heavenly Father to take care of us wherever we may be, and we read in His holy word, that if we ask in faith, we shall receive. Let us then, dear sister, daily renew our convenant with God; love Him more dearly, and obey Him more fully, even unto the end of time. Our troubles and our trials here will only make it richer there, when we arrive at home. I will send to your address some of our church periodicals. They may be of some benefit to you. Hope you may receive them. Also hope the gospel of salvation may be preached in your distant land as well as elsewhere and sinners may come flocking home to Jesus.

Covering the Head.

In vol. 8, page 38, I find an essay on the covering of the head. I was much pleased to see that sister take up the pen and so ably defend their privileges and duties. For evidently there is a great difference of opinion in regard to that covering, of which the apostle is speaking, so that some merely comply with it, not feeling or considering it a privilege, or duty, consequently not with much credit to themselves, as followers of the blessed Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, nor in honor to the church as an humble, and separate people from the world, not conforming to its follies and fashions, but being transformed by the renewing of our minds, as the Apostle Paul teaches, Rom. 12: 6, 2. This subject is, to us, an interesting one, since it concerns every one of us. Paul says, in 1 Cor. 3: 10, that he as a wise master builder, has laid the foundation. Let us then examine what he says, for it is Paul, writing in this same epistle, 11th chapter, concerning this matter, so that we may worship according to his divine will. With much interest and pleasure, we read our sister's letter and would like a little more explanation of the closing of her letter, where she says, to wear a covering in public service is a plain injunction, to wear it at all times is a privilege, accompanied with the promise of angelic assistance. To me it seems that we should make use of all the privileges within our reach, for the apostle intimates that the righteous will scarcely be saved, so it will require all; and the Savior says, when we have done all, to say we are unprofitable servants; we are saved by grace. Now if it is the sisters privilege at all times to wear the covering, it is her duty. Then it becomes our duty, as brethren, to be uncovered. To my mind, the two seem parallel, When the sister shall be covered, the brethren uncovered. It is as important for us as for the sisters, for Paul puts the same stress on both. For farther information I write, and not for controversy, hoping thereby we may be mutually instructed and edified.

Plagiary.

While it appears as if some of the brethren did not know the meaning of the word at the head of this article. I will in the first place acquaint them with the definition Webster gives it; to wit: "A thief in literature; one who purloins the writings of another and offers them to the public as his own—the crime of literary theft," &c.

We would not suppose anybody knowingly guilty of such meanness; and yet, I have frequently been grieved on account of it; even by brethren whom I love. And quite recently again by a sketch that brother Moses Miller gave of his ancesstors, and still more recently by an article in the Brethren's Almanac, under the heading, Eld. George Kline.

The maternal part of the first, and nearly the whole of the second is but a verbatim transcript of my own indefatigable researches—published under their own name without my knowledge and without the least credit to the original. I regret it because it is somewhat incorrect and very incomplete, and cripples an intended article for a future number of the Almanac.

While I spent my life, and my eyesight nearly, besides thousands of hard earned treasure in collecting and reproducing such materials of the past, that were long since buried in the grave of oblivion, I ask, is it right, or is it honorable for others now to publish these researches (as if they were antiquarians themselves) without ever mentioning the source from which such information is obtained. To say the best—it is a fraud that no one who has any regard for his honor would knowingly be guilty of.

Brother Henry:—I was traveling some this winter in Nebraska. We had some very good meetings in Washington county; thence west to Seward county, and intended to have several meetings there, but the weather being very unfavorable we had only one. There are some brethren living there that do not have the privilege of meeting, who wish the brethren to visit them and preach for them. Some of the Falls City brethren, perhaps, would go, as they are the nearest. You need not fear but you will have work and a good turn out. If any wish to go, you can address George Oaks, Seward, Seward county, Neb.; David Kelley, Fairmont, Fillmore county, Neb.

P. R. OAKS.

Brother Henry:—Brother Wm. Schrock wishes you, or some other brother or sister, to say who those two witnesses are that we read of in Revelations, 11: 3, etc: "And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth."

My old Bible (age not known) has an explanation on the third verse of the eleventh chapter of the Revelations, which reads as follows, in German:

"Durch die zween Zeugen, die da weiſſagen, werden treue Lehrer, Prediger und Bekenner verſtanden, welche ſich zur Zeit des Antichriſts ihm wiederſetzen, und ſeine falſche Lehre und Tyranney ſtrafen würden: Derer wird nur zween gedacht, dieweil ihrer wenig geweſen, gegen dem groſſen antichriſtiſchen Haufen zu rechnen."

TRANSLATION.

By the two witnesses, which shall prophesy, we understand faithful teachers, ministers and professors, who, in the day of Antichrist, shall withstand his false doctrine and tyranny; who are reckoned but two because of their small number compared with the great multitude adhering to Antichrist.—EDITOR C.F.C.

Brother Henry :—There was a query published in the C. F. C., volume 7, No. 50, called the Moser query.—There have been several views of the brethren published in the COMPANION. The last brother directs us to Acts 2 : 38. I do not understand this scripture to touch his case. I understand these persons to be inquiring what they should do. It appears they had never asked this question before. They knew nothing about baptism as a divine ordinance; but this young man did. I understand he was about the age of sixteen years. These things were not done in secret. Now, dear brethren, I know the case well. The querist, I believe, had never consulted the church on this subject. Now the query is brought into council, and disposed of by three of the ministers, as a committee, and he is reconciled to the church again on his first baptism. No doubt, had there been no troubles in our land at that time with the North and South, that our young brother had stayed in the fold of the church. Nothing of this would have occurred. Oh, young brethren, when we enter the Ark of the Lord, (as Noah did,) shut the door to the world, and stay within the church, and you shall go in and out and find pasture. But when we run for temptation, then we must do as Peter did, when he denied his Lord and Master—go out and weep bitterly, or otherwise go into our closets and open our hearts freely to Jesus, and perhaps he will intercede with the Father.

Now, dear brethren, I will try to give my opinion on rebaptism. When an official minister performs the act of baptism according to the scripture, there remains no more sacrifice for sin, by the burial of baptism by water. I understand in this case that water is water, and spirit is spirit. 1 Peter 5: 21, reads as follows: "The like figure whereunto ever baptism doth also now save us; not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God." Now, dear readers, the work commences. Next, 2 Peter 1 and 5 : 8, "Beside this, giving all dilligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly-kindness; and to brotherly-kindness, charity." I understand from the reading of this scripture that repentance is a progressive work in a christian life. And now brethren, I have written this in love to all; and knowing that the many readers of the COMPANION would like to hear something of the young brother, my prayer is that the good Lord may pardon him of his trespass in his young life.

J. J. COVER.

Dear Brother :—The COMPANION is truly a welcome visitor in our family, as we are only having preaching about twice a year. There are thirteen members living here, in Wilson county, Neb. A good minister is very much needed here; and we would be pleased if some one would locate among us. Nearly all other denominations have organized churches here and hold meetings regularly.

She also was a member of the church upwards of forty years, and a mother in Israel. She was well spoken of by all who knew her.

Occasion improved by S. Cox and the writer. Grabill Myers.

In the Lower Deer Creek Congregation, Carroll county Ind., October 19th 1871, brother ELIAS CRIPE; aged 45 years 10 months and 26 days.

He was a faithful Deacon in the church; dearly beloved by the Brethren, and much respected by friends. He leaves a large family and many relatives to mourn their loss.

Funeral service by John Metzger and others, from Rev. 14 : 13.

R. YOUNG.

In the Big Creek Congregation, Richland county, Ill., sister MARGARET HAGUE: aged about 92 years. According to special request by the deceased sister, her funeral was attended by elder Michael Forney, and others, from the words, "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord," October 22nd 1871.

Same Congregation, January 29th ult., sister CATHERINE GLOTHART, wife of brother John Glothart; aged 70 years, less 9 days. Both of the above sisters were humble and zealous in serving the Lord. Funeral text: "If a man die shall he live again?" SAMUEL M. FORNEY.

At the Blair county infirmary, Nov. 12th, 1871, JOHN WILT, in the 21st year of his age. The subject of this notice was deprived of his mother when quite small, when his grandmother and aunt took him as a member of their small family. About a year previous to his death, his grandmother, sister Susan Wilt was called to bid this world adieu, and pass through the valley of the shadow of death. After this their little family circle was broken, and he entered into business in Altoona, Pa., where he took the Small Pox. He was taken to the Blair county infirmary, Nov. 2nd, and on the 12th, after intense suffering, he breathed his last. The day following at 10 A. M. his body was interred in the graveyard connected with the almshouse.—He was a promising young man, but Death had marked him as a victim and called him home. Dec. 31st, 1871, his funeral sermon was preached by brother James A. Sell to those who had assembled to hear the word preached, at the church at Duncansville, Pa. He read the 14th chapter of Job. Text, Job 14 : 14, "If a man shall die he shall live again ?"

Died, Nov. 18, 1871, near Middleberry, Clay county, Ind., MELINDA BURGER, infant daughter of Christian and Sarah Burger, aged 3 months and 7 days. Funeral services by the writer. A. Hensel.

Died, in Union Church, Marshall county, Ind., our dear old sister MARY WELLBAUM, wife of Henry Welbaum, though she did not live with her husband for 37 years. She was a daughter of brother John and sister Barbara Root. She was a good and consistent sister till her death. She died on the 20th of Nov., 1871, aged 68 years, 7 months and 18 days. Disease, lung fever. She bore her sickness with Christian fortitude. She called for the Elders and was anointed before she left this world. She said she was willing to go, but that some would soon follow after. She died at her son-in-law's, G F. Snell, leaving her children and grand-children to mourn her loss. Funeral services by brother John Hoover, Adam Appleman and the writer. John Knisely.

Fell asleep in Jesus, in the Manor branch, Indiana county, Pa., February 5th, our sister POLLY LIDY, wife of elder Samuel Lidy, (her maiden name was French,) aged 81 years, 11 months, 23 days. She lived in wedlock with her sorrowing husband 57 years 5 months; and was a member of the church more than 55 years, always consistent and faithful, willing to make all the sacrifices that fall to the lot of that class of our sisters whose natural protectors are called to the ministerial post; and indeed her sacrifices and opportunities of usefulness were not a few nor light. Her husband was called to the ministry nearly a half a century ago, in the Conemaugh branch, where he labored a long time, faithfully He moved to to the present limits of the Manor branch about thirty years ago; when his duties and difficulties were augmented, and presented themselves in a number of ways, not least among which was a limited English education, (having received his education principally in his mother tongue—German,) in which language it now became necessary for him to exercise his talents. But what was lacking in him, his wife, the subject of this notice, supplied. She was of New England Extraction. In her death elder Lidy loses a dear companion; a number of children, a loving mother; and the church a faithful member. She has gone to fill a more important station; being dead, yet speaketh. Do you understand the language of those mute lips? They say, "Be faithful".

Funeral discourse from Rev. 15: 13 20, by Joseph Holsopple and Levi Fry.

In the Panther Creek congregation, Woodford county Ill., November 9th, brother JOHN LEEDY, aged 50 years. He was sick about 4 days, and bore his sickness with Christian fortitude. He leaves 4 children and a loving wife to mourn his loss. Funeral service from Rom. 5 : 17, 18, by James R. Gish Jacob J, Kindig.

"HOW TO GO WEST."

Forty years ago, Illinois was as far West as most people wished to go, and journeys were made in the legendary "Prairie Schooner," but in these days of Progress and Improvement, the word West has come to mean Iowa. Nebraska, Kansas, Colorada, California, and the Territories, and the Traveler reaches almost any point therein by a splendid Line of Railroad.

This Line of Railroad is the Burlington Route, which starts from Chicago over the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R., from Indianapolis, over the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western Short Line, and from Logansaort, over the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw R. R., and running through BURLINGTON, reaches Omaha. Lincolen, Nebraska City, St. Joseph, Atchison, Leavenworth and Kansas City, connecting with the Union Pacific, Kansas Pacific and other Railroads running from those cities.

Always go "By way of Burlington" and you will be sure to be right.

The Burlington Route has admirably answered the question, "How to go West?" by the publication of a truthful and interesting document, filled with facts in regard to Time, Connections, Accommodations, rates of Fare, and otner interesting items and illustrated by a large map, truthfully showing the whole West, which they distribute free of charge. THE

Christian Family Companion.

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

VOLUME VIII. DALE CITY, PA., TUESDAY, FEB. 27, 1872. NUMBER 9.

'Twas All a Dream.

What heavenly sounds are these I hear come stealing o'er the mind.
Like drops of dew they gently fall upon the weary mind;
They raise the thoughts from earthly things to dreams of bliss above,
And through celestial gardens with seraphs fondly rove.

'Mong sweet ambrosial flowers of every tint and hue,
In cool, sequestered grottoes all glistering with dew;
By "warters still" and "pastures green" we freely glide along,
And angel harps keep toning a low melodious song.

Thick groves whose trees are laden with fruits of choicest kinds,
Round which the purple grape luxuriantly entwines;
Pure odors, fresh and fragrant, float on the balmy air,
And fill the soul with ecstacy—delightful, rich, and rare.

Gay birds of brightest plumage are fluttering gently round,
And in harmonious concert trill notes of sweetest sound;
Sweet rills of living water from mossy hillocks flow,
And fairy nymphs are laving their tiny feet below.

In ivy bowers, where myrtle and rose and jesamine entwine,
Unnumber'd groups of cherubim and seraphim recline;
Their heavenly faces beaming with pure, resplendent light,
And each holy brow encircled by a crown of glory bright.

On His imperial throne in the heav'n of heav'ns above,
Jehovah sits surrounded by the angels of his love;
With soft enchanting voices they chord Elysian strains,
That echo and re-echo, "Our God eternal, reigns."

Enraptur'd and enchanted, from scene to scene I flew,
My spirit drank from heav'n fresh draughts of pearly dew;
So sweet, so pure and holy, did all around me seem;
Nor 'till the music ended did find 'twas all a dream."

"The Commission."

"And Jesus came, and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and lo, I am with you always even unto the end of the world." Matt. 28: 18–20.

The above scripture is a "Divine injunction," uttered by the "Prince of peace," who hath declared that He is "Alpha and Omega—the beginning and the ending." "Go ye therefore and teach all nations," is the "very foundation" upon which every Christian's faith is grounded. Without being taught the will of Christ, (his Gospel,) no man is able to become a Christian. Hence it is necessary that the nations be taught aright; that is, according to the gospel. For we are told that "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God;" Rom. 10: 17. So if the word of God is not preached in its purity, there is danger of being led astray; and oh! how many are led astray, into that way "which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof is the way of death;" and the unthinking, the careless-minded, enter it, and travel thereon to perdition, even as the dumb ox to the slaughter-pen, not knowing what will shortly befall him. Therefore, how important it is, to teach the true and perfect will of the gospel, so that, when they come into the church, they may know for why and that they may be fit subjects to be baptized "in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost;" that they may then be taught to observe all things, whatsoever the Saviour has commanded.

The teaching of commission is two-fold. The first teaching is out of the Church; and the second, is in the church. When in the church they shall be taught to "observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." And here is where we may most easily err in the great work of "teaching the nations." We may be satisfied when we have received people into the church, and may think the work is done: they are in the church now, and all is well; they will learn of themselves. Thus we may neglect an important part of the Savior's commission. A church, without the proper teachings, will be much like a garden that is neglected, or like a school without a Master in it to keep order. We may belong to the "true vine," and still bear no fruit. We may be baptized; we may commune together; we may practice the "Kiss of Charity," and still be perfect ignoramuses in regard to the faith which we claim to be members of. If we are asked by those without concerning our faith and practices, we cannot tell, or "give an answer concerning the hope that is within us," and this latter, the Apostle tells us expressly, we shall be able to do. We should be taught in the right way, and also let ourselves be taught. We should try and make ourselves well acquainted with the Bible, so that we may know its requirements of us—that we be not as stumbling blocks in the way of others. We shall let our light so shine before men, that they may see our good work, not hide it under a bushel. We should not, when we are among the ungodly and sinners, do as they do; talk as they talk, act as they act, laugh when they laugh; else we are just as they are, and our light will be in darkness to all around. Knowing that man is prone to evil, ever forgetful of his duty, it becomes neccessary to have him reminded of his duty as a follower of Christ, that he be not found a curse to the church; but a pillar whereupon the good work may rest as on a good foundation. We need not "marvel" that Paul was so deeply concerned in regard to what kind of a man a Bishop or Minister should be, and charged his son Timothy to be careful that no novice might be set forth as teacher; who perhaps, would desire to be a teacher of the law or understanding the scriptures, or whereof he affirms.

The minister has a great responsibility resting upon him. He must be very careful that he does not preach too much as the hearers would have it. He must be careful that he does not too often say, when he preachers to a congregation before him, "I have no one of my hearers in view," and preach as though he was merely relating to his hearers what other people do; saying, "there are such people in the world who do so." He must be very careful that he does not hide Christ behind his cloak and forget to admoish his hearers directly "You are the people to whom I am speaking." And if he must call them "Foolish Gallatians," and say "Who has bewitched you that ye should not obey the truth, before whose eyes Jesus Christ has been evidently set forth, crucified among you." And if it be neccessary to say "Wo unto you, Scribes, and Pharisees, and hypocrites!" let him not be afraid; for Jesus also uttered the charge before you did. Oh, let us be careful that we do not become too much as the world! For the nearer we are related with the world, the farther we are from heaven; and as we cannot live to ourselves only; but shall also have the welfare of others at heart, we would say again, forget not the commission of the Saviour in its true sense, that we stir up the pure minds of our brethren and others by way of remembrance, in "Observing all things that are commanded us of the Lord;" and if you must preach a full sermon on every subject; as faith, prayer, repentance, baptism; non-conformity to the world, non-resistance, Lord's supper, holy-commemoration of the Lord's body, holy kiss, feet washing. Charity, covetousness, idolatry, &c. In conclusion, I would say, I now have in the fear of the Lord, tried to set forth a little of what is contained in the expression of the Saviour's commission. I give it over to the serious consideration of all who may think it worthy of reading it.

LEVI ANDES,

Lincoln, Pa.

For the Companion.

Consolatory.

TO ISAAC PRICE.

Beloved Brother:—Prudence forbids that I write at all, and debility and suffering utterly incapacitate me to write much, but love constrains me to write a little.

I am both sorry and glad that your bosom companion is about to be gathered to the white robed multitude. Going down the dark valley in the light of Emmanuel's love, reposing on the Cross, she will pass away without leaving a ghastly interrogation-point standing at the grave's mouth, with which to pain and deject her surviving friends. The believer's sepulcher is a hyphen of celestial light linking the Christ-hidden earth-life with the blissful, deathless, ever-expanding life of Heaven. "The sting of death is sin," and the death of Christ is the utter exhaustion of the venom that sting contained. "The strength of sin is the law," and the life of Christ is the perfect embodiment of all that the law demands. "Complete in Him," is the great central truth which supports the saint in every step of his pilgrimage. He lived for our righteousness, died for our atonement, and lives again for our justification. "For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of His Son; much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by His life." Rom. 5: 10. Our best righteousness cannot qualify us for Heaven in its relation to divine law. "The law of the Lord is perfect," and is satisfied with no righteousness less perfect than itself. One of the glorious titles of our Redeemer is, 'The Lord our Righteousness." It is with His blood that our title-deed to the Heavenly Inheritance is written. It is in His life that we find the ground of our acceptance with God. "He hath made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God IN HIM." 2 Cor. 5: 21. "The strength of sin is the law," for its requirements are inexorable; but by "walking after the Spirit, and "crucifying the flesh with the affections and lusts," "the righteousness of the law is fulfilled in us." Rom. 8: 4. The believer in Jesus reaches over his sins and demerits, and back of his own defective righteousness, and takes hold of the righteousness of God, thus "making his calling and election sure." To such "there is no condemnation." Their "life is hid with Christ in God," and "whatever touches them, touches the apple of his eye." Here is an immutable foundation for the soul to rest upon in life, in death, and forever. When the sting is plucked away, life's sorrows and sufferings are means of sanctification, and life's terminus is "an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." The saint is the protege of the Most High, is distinguished by the signature of the kingdom of Truth, carries with him wherever he goes the evidences of his supernal lineage, and passes through the closing stage of time zoned with "the glory that excelleth," and spends eternity in the presence and enjoyment of God, and in occupations befitting his high character and station. Just as impossible as it would have been for Jehovah to "receive sinners" without satisfaction to His dishonored law, equally impossible is it for him to reject those who "commit the keeping of their souls to Him" in Christ Jesus. He "cannot deny himself" in either case. Certain damnation out of Christ: certain salvation in Christ. Mercy seconding justice in the one instance, and justice embracing mercy in the other. Your wife, and all the elect, have an Advocate with the Father, who knows what to plead, and how; who never deserts His clients, and never lost a suit committed to His care. 'They shall never perish." "All power is given unto me in Heaven and in earth." "Neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand." Never will He break His oath, nor falsify His word. "All the promises of God are yea and amen in Christ Jesus." When God speaks let love cast out all fear, and faith all doubt. While we are grateful for the grace promised, and enjoy the blessings promised, let us above all things adore, cling to, and rest in the God of the promises.

Go Forward.

When Moses led the children up out of Egypt and they were encamped by the sea beside Pihahiroth, before Baal-zephon they lifted up their eyes and behold the whole host of Pharaoh were in hot pursuit. What was to be done? The Red Sea was spread out upon one side and a mighty army sweeping down upon them; to fight was out of the question—to run was impossible. They were afraid and no wonder, but they determined not to die without letting their illustrious leader know what they thought of him as a strategist. So they said to him "Because there were no graves in Egypt hast thou taken us away to die in the wilderness?"

"Is not this the word that we did tell thee in Egypt, saying, Let us alone, that we may serve the Egyptians, for it will be better than that we should die in the wilderness?"

And the Lord said unto Moses, "Wherefore criest thou unto me? Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward." Here was an opportunity for the exercise of faith; but as they obeyed and Moses stretched out his rod the sea opened and afforded them a means of escape.

Whatever the difficulty, Christian, "go forward" and the Lord of Hosts will be thy Captain and guide thy feet as last into the ways of peace.

"MANNERS," says the eloquent Edmund Burke, "are of more importance than laws. Upon them, in a great measure, the laws depend. The law can touch us here and there, now and then. Manners are what vex, or soothe, exalt, or debase, by a constant, steady, uniform, insensible operation, like that of the air we breathe in. They give their whole form and color to our lives. According to their quality they aid morals; they supply them, or they totally destroy them."

The New Birth.

"Except a man born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God." John 3: 5.

While there are so many different opinions as regards the new birth, I thought I would try to write on the above subject.

We learn in the word that stands firmer then heaven and earth, that we "must be born again." By the word "must," we understand that we are bound to be born again; that is, if we expect to meet God in peace, who has spoken the above words through his Son.

This subject is of vast importance; and if we neglect to comply with the duty we have no promise that we will ever be saved from our sins.

The heading reads, "Born of water and of the Spirit." Here we understand that the "water" is a common noun; and consequently it does not require particular water; because the article "the" is not used before water. So, I think, all who understand English Grammar, will agree with me in this point.

But the article "the" precedes the word "Spirit" and consequently it signifies a particular spirit. If the word should read, "of water and a Spirit," then we might think it would not be so particular. But that is not the case. Then we must at once admit that it means a particular Spirit. Well now what spirit doth it signify? Why the Spirit of Christ, of course; for we read in God's word, "If any man has not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his."

But now, what does the expression, "Born of water" signify? In answer I would say, baptism. To prove the correctness of this assertion, get your Bible, with references, and see whether they do not refer to the passage that reads thus: "He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved;" and also to the day of pentecost, when they inquired what they should do, and Peter said, "Repent and be baptized, every one of you," &c. If we search the scriptures, we must acknowledge that the sentence "born of water" signifies baptism. Well, now, admitting that, we will now see if there is any difference in the natural birth. If any man can convince me that there is more than one law by which we are born the natural birth, then I will also admit that there is a different way to produce the spiritual birth But I claim as there is only one way by which we are all conceived and born the natural birth, that there surely is only one way to be born the spiritual birth.

I have conversed with some of our christian friends about the new birth, who positively denied that baptism was connected with the spiritual birth, but claimed that by going through an exercise at the mourner's bench they are born again. But let us hear what Luther said, whom they claim as their founder. Well what did he say? Why in his catechism, in a prayer he prayed on this wise, for some children that joined the church, that God should keep them that are born again through the holy ordinance of baptism. And in another place, speaking of baptism, he said, "Through baptism they are regenerated by the Holy Spirit."

I claim, according to the word of God, that no man has the promise of receiving the Holy Spirit without baptism; that is, I claim that the baptism of water and the baptism of the Holy Spirit are so closely connected that they cannot be separated; and no man can be born of the Spirit without baptism. The two births are bound together, and can not be severed; for what "God joined together, let not man put assunder."

But admitting that, how is it with those infants that are baptized before they can believe, or before they have committed any sin? Why, it is contrary to the gospel to have infants baptized; and what is contrary to the gospel, I claim, is sin. Now let us reason together and see if it is not very plain; yes, as plain as we see the sun shine, that if a child is born the natural birth that he or she has no need to be born again before they commit sin, either by commission or omission. If this be the case, we must at once admit that children are no fit subjects for baptism; for if baptism is connected with the new birth, it is plain that the subjects must believe; and as long as they are not capable of believing, they are not to be baptized. We learn in God's word that the children are holy; and as long as they are in their infancy, they remain holy, and need not to be born again to make them holy. Those parents that get their children baptized (as they call it) are trying to separate the new birth which cannot be lawfully done; and I venture to say that parents commit a great sin by having their children baptized before they can believe for themselves; by so doing they make the word of God of none effect. Christ died for all men, and consequently he died for the children; and any man who has his children baptized before they commit sin, is trying to make them better (or worse) than Christ made them. I heard a minister preaching about the new birth, and he said, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved;" but then he remarked, "Though a child cannot believe, but the parents must believe for the children." Now if that is not idolatory I am at a loss to know what is. Just as well might they take the authority and tell at once that they can forgive their sins. If I have the power to believe for my children, then I could also believe for my brethren and sisters; and if I could believe for another, I also could forgive sins for another. For if one is possible the other surely is. I said, that I believe it to be a sin to have children baptized. Well, one might ask why is it a sin? Because it is not founded in the word of God, and if we get our children baptized we are adding to the words. Some will say, (and often do,) "If it don't do a child any good, it don't hurt a child." I admit that it does not hurt children as long as they are not capable of believing; but when they grow up and become capable of believing, and read the word where it saith. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved;" and their parents will tell them that they are baptized, if they believe their parents more than the word of God, and are not willing to be baptized according to the gospel, then is the time it will hurt them. You might compare infant baptism to a cradle; at first parents rock the cradle, but soon the child can rock himself. A child cannot be half born when a child, and afterwards the other half.

NOAH B. BLOUGH.

The no Pardon Doctrine Repudiated.

And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?" Matt. 7: 3.

In December number of Gospel Visitor, page 362, an article appears, written by a brother, upon the subject of the unpardonable sin, that is committed both by the unregenerated person and the believer in Christ, as he avows with so much positiveness. He bases his assertions on Paul's language, 1 Cor. 6: 18, 19, where he finds a sin that the Church cannot forgive, nor will the Lord; for that is the meaning of the term by Walker and Webster—"Beyond forgivness." Paul says, "Flee fornication. Every sin that a man doeth is without the body; but he that committeth fornication sinneth against his own body." The writer says that is "unpardonable"—a term not found in the New Testament scriptures. But the writer seems to have found it somewhere in his library; and we are charitable enough to allow him all the facilities that he may avail himself of, to acquire his boasted knowledge and to make such an important discovery in this nineteenth century. The ancient brethren were never so positively certain, in their investigations of the word of God as to what is that sin that is unto death. Perhaps they, not being so much enlightened, it was hidden from them to be reserved for some future light to arrive and shine.

The writer quotes Heb. 10: 26, 27: "For if we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin; but a fearful looking for of judgment, and fiery indignation which shall devour the adversaries." I suppose he considers it unpardonable from the phrase, "No more sacrifice for sin;" implying there had been a sacrifice once offered. How does this prove his position, when the sin he considers as fatal to the perpetrator is not once mentioned in the connection? But he supposes the wilfulness will make it unpardonable? Well, we will admit that such sins are high-handed crimes, that should sincerely be repented of with a godly sorrow and an amended life; not that Christ should be slain a a second time to expiate sin,—for that he did once die for sinners and took away sin without their repentance,—but now they must die unto sin and be made alive unto righteousness; which is true repentance and humble confession to God, praying earnestly with faith for the desired blessing of pardon and mercy, and they will obtain it; for the Lord has promised it upon those conditions. Many sins, yea, very many, that are committed by the children of men, both saint and sinner, are wilful; and if that would make them unpardonable in this world and that which is to come, as avowed in the writer's essay, would be restricting the pardoning power of Christ, and the prerogative granted by him to his Church, in exercising the forgiving power.

The writer again refers to Heb. 6: 4–6, "For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God and the powers of the world to come, if they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance, seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame." We may ask the writer, what caused the above characters to fall away? He would answer, "The sin of lewdness." He says he has lately received light on the subject, and that it is an unpardonable sin; for it is impossible to renew them. With whom is it impossible? Certainly with men; but not so with God. The Church may make every possible effort to reclaim such offenders, but all is unavailing; because men's efforts won't reach his heart. But let God take the matter in hand to work, and it is possible to renew those crucifiers. Let the ministers of vengeance visit them; bring death, mourning and sorrow to their dwellings; take loved ones from their embrace; strew their pathway with grief, pain, misery; let all manner of troubles and trials, like pointed arrows, pierce their souls, and compel them to cry out, "What must we do?" A corresponding answer would be such as Peter gave to those crucifiers of the Son of God, on the day of Pentecost, "Repent, * * * every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins." Would the writer doubt such a renewing as above stated? We would think not, for it is God's plan of pardoning and saving erring souls.

The writer says, the Jews who rejected Christ as the Son of God, who performed signs and miracles in their presence by the power of the Holy Spirit, they ascribing them to the influence of Satan, notwithstanding they had never been converted, were most certainly guilty of an unpardonable sin. According to Christ's own language, those Jews betrayed and murdered Christ; yet he on the cross prayed to his Father to forgive them, saying, "For they know not what they do." The great prayer was heard and answered by the eternal Father, when he revealed himself to those Jews by mighty signs and wonders on the memorable day of the birth of his infant Church. When the Spirit descended in lambent flame, its effect was seen when Peter preached. Those Jews, the betrayers and murderers of the just One, were convicted of sin. Their earnest inquiry was, "What shall we do?" Peter proposed the terms. They accepted and did the work. The Father granted the blessing prayed for by his Son. An overwhelming tide of penitents entered the Church, washed, sanctified and justified by the Spirit of God, enjoying the full pardon of all their sins. Yet the writer says it is plain to his mind how an unconverted man might commit the unpardonable sin. We think he has utterly failed to show it so, in his arguments, as shown in the above treatise.

Again he says, he that commits lewdness sins against his own body, and thus he defiles the temple of God; making his mortal, sinful and corrupt body, the temple of the living God, in which he is worshipped, thus making the above sin an unpardonable one. Paul was certainly addressing the Corinthian Church, as being the temple of God, and not the fleshly and sinful body of man. But the mystical and spiritual body of Christ, the Church, of which every man and woman who believes, is a component part—the great building typified by the ancient temple built by King Solomon, but far surpassing that ancient structure in glory and grandeur, by being a greater production of its author, Jehovah, whose presence fills it with glory and honor in the salvation of souls. Such a temple, the antitype of the original type, where God was worshipped in the sacrificial offerings of slain animals and ceremonial rites, is superceded by a greater structure, wherein God is worshipped by his people in spirit and in truth, with humble and contrite hearts. Such, if any man defiles, him will God destroy; that is, be separated from the temple, cut off from the Church till he sees his condition and thoroughly repents. When the dignity and honor of the Church are properly vindicated, he may return to the Church with humble confession, be received into her bosom with open arms and rejoicing hearts. All will and should forgive such, and the Lord will sanction the act as though nothing had occurred.

In my humble judgment, the above sin is not unpardonable, as the writer maintains. 1 Cor. 6: 9–11, Paul mentions a number of gross sinners, and among them fornicators and adulterers which shall not inherit the kingdom of God; then adds, "And such were some of you, but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God." Prepared to inherit the Kingdom. The meaning is, the Corinthian Church, or temple, was made up of the above rough and irregular materials, being hewn from the quarry of nature, squared and polished by a Master Workman, and fitted in the great building; washed and made clean through the Word; full pardon for all their sins, as the sequel shows; set apart and dedicated to the service of God; justified, wholly acquitted from all guilt and made pure in Christ. Now, from the above sweeping testimony adduced, where is the foundation for the no-pardon doctrine maintained by the writer. Then, if he is conscientious in his views as set forth in his essay, it would be reasonable to require him to reconcile those views with his own case, if he can without criminating self, for there seems to be a beam lying in the way, obstructing his vision, rendering him inefficient to take motes out of the eyes of the unregenerated and the brethren's. I Believe In God,

I belive that their is a God, who is one, true, supreme, and alone infinitely wise, just, good, free, eternal and blessed; and in him alone we are to put our trust.

THE FATHER,

I believe that he is the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and of all that believe in him, when he had begotten by his word, and adopted to the inheritance of sons; and because he is our Father, he will do us all that good to which we are created and designed, by grace; and because he is almighty, he is able to perform it, and therefore we may safely believe in him and rely upon him.

MAKER OF HEAVEN AND EARTH.

He made the sun, the moon and the stars, and all the regions of glory; he made angels and men, and he made the air, the earth, the waters and all that live in them, and he only, can preserve them in the same being, and thrust them forwards to a better; he that preserves them does also govern them, and intends they should minister to his glory; and therefore we are to worship and obedience to him in all that we can and that he hath commanded.

AND IN JESUS CHRIST.

I also believe in Jesus Christ, who is call as Saviour and the anointed with the Holy spirit; and with power to become the great prophet and declarer of his Father's will to all the world, telling us how God will be worshiped and served; and is anointed to be the mediator of the new covenant, and our highpriest, reconciling us to his Father by the sacrifice of himself; and to be the great king of all the world. And by this article we are christians, who serve and worship God the Father through Jesus Christ, HIS ONLY SON,

Jesus Christ is the Son of God, he alone, of him alone. For God by his Holy Spirit, caused him to be born of a virgin. By his power he raised him from the dead, and gave him a new birth or being in the body. He gave him all the power, and all excellency; and beyond all this, his is the express image of his person, the brightness of his Glory, equal to God, beloved before the beginning of the world; of a nature perfectly divine, very God by essence, and very man by assumption; as God all one in nature with the Father, and as man, one person in himself.

OUR LORD.

Jesus Christ God's only Son is the heir of all things and persons. In his Father's house, all angels are his servants, and all creatures obey him.—We are to believe in him, and by faith in him only, in his name we shall be saved. TOBIAS M. KAUFFMAN.

Shut the Door Softly.

Shut the door softly mother's asleep,
Her fever is broken; her slumber is deep.
Look in her pale face, and, see, there's no pain!
Darling, be thankful; we've mother again.

Shut the door softly, and come to her side.
What should we do if our mother had died?
She has loved us our weary lives through—
Shut the door softly and do as I do.

Shut the door softly, and kneel with me here
To him who has spared us our mother so dear;
Who has given her back to our arms once again—
Born her through danger and softened her pain.

Shut the door softly, and look in her face,
And see how it gathered in health and in grace.
Is she not handsome this mother of ours,—
Waking to life like the budding of flowers.

Let us love all in this fast flying life—
Sister and brother, and husband and wife;
Mother love only all time has defied,
Shut the door softly, and come to her side.

Shut the door softly, mother's awake—
Back from the shores of the fathomless lake;
Weary with travail, but laden with charms;
Longing to clasp us in her dear arms.

Mother, dear mother, we loved you before;
New we shall love you a thousand times more.
Welcome, dear heart, frome the shadowy land;
Shut the door softly, and kiss her dear hand.

If We Knew.

If we knew the woe and heartache
Waiting for us down the road,
If our lips could taste the wormwood,
If our backs could feel the load;
Would we waste the day in wishing
For a time that ne'er can be;
Would we wait with such impatience
For our ships to come to sea?

If we knew the baby fingers,
Pressed against the window pane,
Would be cold and stiff to-morrow,—
Never trouble us again:
Would the bright eyes of our darling
Catch the frown upon our brow?
Would the print of rosy fingers
Vex us then as they do now?

Ah, these little ice-cold fingers!
How they point our memories back
To the hasty words and actions
Strewn along our backward track!
How these little hands remind us,
As in snowy grace they lie,
Not to scatter thorns, but roses,
For our reaping by and by.

Strange, we never prize the music
Till the sweet-voiced bird has flown;
Strange that we should slight the violets
Till the lovely flowers are gone;
Strange that summer skies and sunshine
Never seem one-half so fair
As when winter's snowy pinions
Shake their white down in the air.

Lips from which the seal of silence
None but God can roll away,

Never blossomed in such beauty
As adorns the mouth to-day;
And sweet words that bright our memory
With their beautiful perfume
Come to us in sweeter accents
Through the portals of the tomb.

Let us gather up the sunbeams,
Lying all along our path;
Let us keep the wheat and roses,
Casting out the thorns and chaff;
Let us find our sweetest comfort
In the blessings of to-day;
With the patient hand removing
All the briars from our way.

The Family Bible.

In this enlightened age of the world, nearly every home has a Bible. It is found in the hut as well as in the pallace. The Bible is adapted to every family. It points out our errors, reveals our authority and government, sanctions our obedience, proclaims our promises, and points out our path to Heaven We may have large and splendid libraries; history, poetry, philosophy, yea, all the works of classic Greece and Rome, may be crowded upon our shelves; but of these we will soon grow wearied, and the dust of neglect will gather thick upon their gilded leaves; but the Bible the Christian can never become weary. Its sufficiency for all our purposes will throw a garland of freshness around every page It is a book for the mind, the heart, the concience, the will and the life. It suits the palace and the cottage, the afflicted and the prosperous, the living and the dying It is simple, yet grand; mysterious, yet plain; and though from God, it is, nevertheless, within the comprehension of a child. Parents may send their children to school to study other books, from which they may be educated for this world; but in this divine book they study the science of the eternal world. The Bible should therefore be the textbook for every family. It is the basis of all true teachings, because it reveals "the truth, the way and the life," because it is God's testimony, and message, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, and was written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the scripture, might have hope, and be made "wise unto salvation."

How often is this precious book abused; in many places it it used more for an ornament of fashion than for a lamp to guide their path. We find the Bible upon their parlor tables, but how seldom in the family room, they make it a part of their fashionable furniture, to be looked at as a pretty gilded thing; and to show to their visiting friends that they have a Bible. Go to some other places and there you will see no Bible; while you behold piles of romance and novels, those exponent of a vitrated taste and a corrupt society suited to destroy the young forever; whose outward appearance indicates that they have been well studied. But upon the Bible you cannot trace the hand of diligent piety it is shoved back into some part of a room as a worthless thing obsolete and superfuous, and often to our sorrow we find among our "brethren" those who neglect reading in this sacred book, and often times when at the house of God, "when our ministering brethren" read from it and by the grace of God try to explain it to us, even then I have seen some of the brethren sitting half asleep, others with their pocketknife in their hand trimming and cleaning their finger-nails, which is not even good manners much less christian like. This at once shows to the world that they are not interested in the "word of God," as much as they should be. "Christian parents" when you thus close up the wells of "salvation" by degenerate taste you are despising the testimonies of the Lord, and leading your children step by step to the verge of destruction, you may buy them splendid Bibles gilt and clasped with gold and have their names labeled in golden letters upon its lid; but if this is neglected, and you permit them to buy and read lovesick tales in preference to their Bible and they see you do the same, you are but making a mock of God's word and must answer before Him for the neglect of its sacred pages. Therefore be admonished be faithful to that precious book called the Holy Bible." Read it to your children every day. From its sacred pages teach them the way to love and die. Let it be an open study, a family chart to guide you and them in visions of untold glory too the many mansions our Father's offered home in Heaven. It will sooth your sorrows, calm your fears, strengthen your faith, brighten your hopes, and throw around the graves of the loved, and the cherished dead, the light and promise of reunion in Heaven.

Philosophy and Preaching.

It is clearly set forth in the New Testament, that iniquity shall abound, and the love of many shall wax cold. When we once get ashamed of the simplicity of the gospel, we are far gone indeed It has been said by a writer in this vicinity perhaps a brother, that we should be acquainted with Philosophy, in order to preach the gospel. Paul denounces the idea. Beware of it; it is the tradition of men—the rudiments of the world, and not taught by Christ, and condemned by the Apostle Paul. Then Paul would be ashamed of it. Preach the tradition of men or the rudiments of the world? Yes. I say amen to what Paul says,—"I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth." Rom. 1: 16.

I do not condemn education by any means: it is good if properly used. Who was it, however, that first applied the word 'non-essential' to the holy commandments of Christ? It was undoubtedly a classical man. Can that word be found within the records of the Bible? I answer, no. Where did it take its origin? I answer, from the bottomless pit, whenever it is used to condemn the commandments of Christ? Whom have we to contend with in defending the faith once delivered to the Saints? It is with classical men. "Though we be rude in speech, yet not in knowledge," says the apostle. "I thank God that he has chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; 1 Cor. 1: 27. And I, brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisd m, declaring unto you the testimony of God: for I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ and him crucified. * * * And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and power; that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God" 1 Cor. 2: 1-5. Thank God, I am not ashamed of my brethren, neither ashamed of the simple word of the Lord Jesus Christ, lest he would be ashamed of me before his father and the holy angels.—Mark 6: 37

Universalism not of God. No. 4.

It will be our purpose in this, to examine some of the most prominent proof texts, that our friends use to vindicate their doctrine.

The first passage that we will present is recorded in 1 Cor. 15 : 22.—"For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."—This passage reveals the certainty of the resurrection from the dead, a truth which was denied in the apostolic age. It asserts nothing of the salvation of all men ; but only teaches that all shall live again, beyond the grave. Universalists have not done their work, when they prove that all shall live again ; that is a truth which no Christian denies. We understand that the apostle, in the chapter from which the quotation is taken, wants to impress upon the minds of his Corinthian brethren, that there was a resurrection, for it seems from the reading of the chapter, that some of the Corinthians did not believe in a resurrection ; for he says in the 20th verse, "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept." He then goes on with his argument, to show that by the resurrection of Christ all should be resurrected, but not all at once ; for he says in the 23rd verse, "But every man in his own order, Christ the first firuits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." And the Revelator demonstrates the matter more clearly, we think, in the 20 : 5, "But the rest of of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection." We are forced to the conclusion, from the arguments of the apostle, and from the language of the Revelator, that the bodies of all mankind will be resurrected—brought to life again; some to eternal joy and happiness, and some to everlasting shame and contempt, from the fact, that the Revelator tells us in the same (20th) chapter 15th verse, "And whosoever was not found written in the book of life, was cast into the lake of fire." We think we have presented enough to convince any rational mind, that the apostle had reference, to the resurrection of our vile bodies only, and not to the final salvation of all ; for if he had reference to the salvation of all, as our Universalist friends argue, there seems to be quite a collision between the Revelator and Paul ; for the Revelator says, "And whosoever was not found written in the Book of life, was cast into the lake of fire." We think this is enough to convince any intelligent man or woman, that Universalism is not of God. But let us pass on.

Their next passage you will find recorded in Gal. 3 : 13, "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us, for it is written, cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree." Here they do not prove their point ; for it is very clear, from the passage under consideration, that he has only redeemed us from the curse of a broken law, originated by our first parents in the garden of Eden ; agreeing with the language of the great Harbinger, when he says, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the World." Yes, thanks be to God for ever and ever. He has made a way possible, by the great sacrificial offering upon Calvary's brow ; that we may have free access to a throne of heavenly grace ; and we are not indebted for the original sin ; but only for our own actual transgressions. Yes, praise and adoration be given to him ; for he hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, so that infants and idiots go to heaven without repentance ; for they have nothing to repent of. We will let this suffice, and pass along.

Another one of their strongholds, we find in Rom. 5 : 6, "For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly." Here our worthy friends seem to think that they have us ; for they do strongly maintain, from the passage under consideration, that, if Christ died for the ungodly, the ungodly will be saved ; for it is impossible for Christ to do anything in vain ; hence it is, all will be saved.

My dear, fellow traveler, Christ died for the ungodly, we admit, but only upon conditions ; and the conditions are such, that if we repent and believe the gospel, we shall be saved through his death ; and here we assert that, if we believe the gospel, we will obey the gospel. We are taught that Christ came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance. If you will closely observe the chapter from which the passage is taken, then pass into the 8th chapter, and particularly the 6th and 13th verses, you will see that it is upon conditions alone, that the death of Christ will avail anything for the ungodly: 6th verse, "For to be carnally minded is death ; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace ;" 13th verse, "For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die ; but if ye through the spirit do mortify the deed of the body, ye shall live." Here, dear reader, the conditions are so explicitly set forth, that the wayfaring man, though a fool, should not err therein, and it needs no more comment. So we pass along.

The next stronghold for the proof of their system, is in God's promise to Abraham, "And in thy seed shall all nations be blessed." They claim that the seed is Christ, and the blessing, spiritual ; therefore, all nations will be saved. It is very true that that seed is Christ, and the blessing spiritual ; and in the fullness of time, all nations will be blessed in Christ ; but the promise of the blessing is conditional ; and the conditions are alone by obedience ; for he, (Christ,) "is the author of eternal salvation unto all that obey him." Yes, he is that blessed seed, which the nations of the earth are to be blessed : no one excluded ; for he has made no difference between Jews and Greeks, bond and free. But nations may be blessed, and yet individuals living in those nations shall perish. A nation may be free, and yet thousands in it may be bound in prison. A nation may be intelligent and refined, while many individuals in it are rude, uncultivated and very ignorant. The storehouses of a nation may groan with the burden of a buontiful supply of food within them, and yet many persons may gaze with a wishful eye at these granaries, and perish for lack of bread. Some out of every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, John saw upon Mount Zion, before the throne of God ; but all the individuals out of those nations were not there. "O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth?" "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Gal. 3 : 29. It seems as though our friends fail to examine the passages just quoted, when they search for their many isolated passages to sustain their inconsistent doctrine. The gospel is to be preached in all the world as a witness unto all nations, and yet many trample it under their feet, and count the blood of the covenant an unholy thing. But when men believe and obey the gospel they become the seed of Abraham, and are adopted into the family of God, with the household of faith, and the heirs of the promise.—These are the candidates by which the nations of the earth are blessed.

The next passage that we shall present that they claim as a universal promise, you may find in Isaiah 25: 8, "He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces; for the Lord hath spoken it." This they claim as a promise of the universal salvation of all mankind, without any exception. It is plainly seen in the text, that the promise is only for his people; and the rebuke of his people shall he take away. God has made no Universal promise, without annexing thereto a condition, a compliance with which is indispensable to the obtaining of the promise. God has made a feast; man must eat thereof to be blessed by the provision. God has thrown open a road to heaven, and made it clear and plain; man must walk in it to get there. The promise in Isaiah, to which we have referred, while it proves that none are excluded from the offer, most evidently alludes to the people of God, and not to the people of Satan. It assures us that many will miss the promised blessing; by rejecting the invitation they at the last should be trodden down as straw is trodden down for the dunghill; while the people of God alone were to have their tears wiped away, and their rebuke taken from off the face of the earth.

The next they find in Isaiah 45: 23, 24. "It is the oath of God that every knee should bow, and every tongue should swear." All who believe the scriptures, most evidently believe, that all things must bow and be subject to Christ; for he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. But it does not follow that the subjection is a willing one, or that the subjected are reconciled or blessed. There is a subjection of conquest as well as of love. The bold culprit bows to the discipline of prison, and allows the grated door to be bolted between him and liberty, because he cannot avoid it. Devils, and fallen angels, are subject to Christ, yet are they not blessed or reconciled. They are subject, because confined in chains and darkness, they await their final doom at the judgment of the great day, when death and hell shall deliver up their dead, and the nations of the universe shall stand before him, the great Judge of the quick and dead.—While it is called to-day, men are commanded to repent and bow the knee to Jesus Christ. Now they may bow, as willing subjects, and take Christ's offered pardon; otherwise they must bow at the judgment as rebels; without hope must they lie beneath the feet of earth's Almighty Conqueror.

We will let this suffice, and leave the passages referred to, to the earnest consideration and better understanding of our friendly readers.

The Lost Power.

As Brother Grove has introduced the subject of working miracles, I feel as if I would not be doing my duty, or at least would not be clearing my conscience, in keeping silent, when there is an opportunity offered to open my mind and bear testimony to the truth of what he has said on the subject. Brother Grove has reached my feelings; and oh, that more brethren and sisters would sharpen up their faith concerning this matter! It is quite refreshing to hear that there are some that do believe there can be miracles wrought through prayer. The Apostle Paul positively says, that God has set the gift of working miracles in the Church, and who will undertake to say it is not there 1 Cor. 12: 28. I have been several times asking brethren whether they thought there could be something done for me in restoring my hearing; but they all seem like Peter, when he walked on the water; and then it causes my faith to sink a little too, but not very deep; it will still rise again in the face of all they can say, and sometimes so strong that I can scarcely keep silent. Indeed, I know of no scriptural reason why we can not all believe in it. If there are any that do know, let us have it. I, for my part, believe the Church has as much power now as ever she had, if the brethren would only make use of that power. But there are some that concern themselves very little about it, so as they are themselves in a comfortable situation; but I think if any one would just be one year in my situation, he would begin to believe, or would at least wish there could be something done for him. I very often go to meeting and home again and know very little more what was preached than before I went. But, thank God, I have our periodicals to cheer me on my way, which is almost the same as preaching. But who would like to go to meeting and not hear more than one-half what is preached? Perhaps some might think, I would stay at home and read my Bible. But no, that's not my disposition. I love to be among the brethren, whether I can hear what they say or not; but then it would be more pleasant and satisfactory if I could hear what the brethren had to say. I can take time to read my Bible without staying at home on meeting days. But I have one comfort, there are a great many brethren and sisters who visit me, as I live near the meeting-house, which is a great pleasure to me, especially in waiting on them; and oh, that God would spare me long, that I may be of some benefit to the brotherhood in this way, if in nothing else.

Brethren and sisters, let us pray for each other; the prayer of the righteous availeth much. Brother Balsbaugh reached my soul to the very core when he asked, "Do the saints remember me? do they bear my name on the incense of prayer to him who sitteth between the cherubims above the mercy-seat?" Yes, brother, there is one (I hope a good many) that does not wilfully forget those who are in affliction; and we ask Brother Grove, and all those who believe in the efficacy of prayer, to send forth their united petitions to him who sitteth over the mercy-seat, in our behalf. Written in love and in earnest.

The Lost Power.

In the closing paragraph of the communication of my esteemed and venerable brother, elder Isaac Price, which appeared in the C. F. C., of the 6th inst., he writes: "Ere I close, allow me to request you, dear brother, to call the attention of Brother Grove, of Baltimore, to the closing of the 13th chapter of Corinthians, where the apostle tells us "that miracles shall cease, but faith, hope, and charity shall remain." In vain have I sought to find the quotation in the said chapter, or any other chapter within the lids of my Bible. What version does brother Isaac use? As I believe my beloved brother wrote the note in love, I read it in love, and in love I desire to give my reasons why I join issue with him.

At the time I read his quotation, I thought it very strange that so important a sentence should have escaped my observation. I resolved, however, to be honest, and be instructed by St. Paul; even though it required me to acknowledge myself in error. On examining Paul's declaration, I was made stronger in my faith; for I found that my brother had, no doubt through an error of memory, mis-quoted the Apostle. The proper quotation is, "And now abideth faith, hope, charity these three, but the greatest of these is charity," 1 Cor. 13: 13. Not a word about "miracles ceasing." If my beloved brother had read the preceding chapter (12th,) he would have learned that St. Paul was using his talents and energy to enlighten the church at Corinth. from their ignorance of the spiritual gifts, that God had provided for them to exercise. In the 27th and 28th verses we read: "Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular. And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues." This does not look as if Paul had any idea of giving up this power which made the unbelieving Jews acknowledge, that no one could do such things by or through his own power. I am no zealot, no enthusiast, no bigot; but I defy the whole world to point to a single passage of scripture, where the working of miracles was to cease with the pilgrimage of the Blessed Redeemer and his disiples.

We are creatures of education, and we have all learned to believe that the days of miracles had passed, through the economy of Jesus Christ. Where did we learn it? Not from God's word nor the Holy Spirit; but from man. I was a Methodist for upwards of thirty years, and believed that sprinkling was baptism. I learned it from the same source—man. I feel it my duty, as a follower of the Lord Jesus Christ, to claim, and "earnestly converted for, the faith once delivered to the saints." If we, as a church, live for, and expect God to own and confirm his word, by a manifestation of His Holy Spirit, by causing his followers to perform miracles, through by that Spirit, what would be the result? It would do for the church and God's glory, what it did for it under the Mosaical dispensation, and also under Christ's dispensation, during his ministration; and for hundreds of years after his ascension to the Father. The moment we, as a church, admit of adding to, or taking away any thing from God's Holy Word, we give the skeptic an argument with which he makes inroads on our faith and practice. I want to see something offered by those who take the negative, which will throw light upon the subject. May the good Lord send it speedily.

Yours in Christ,

What is Marriage in its True Signification?

In COMPANION No. 5, present volume, we find a number of questions asked by J. Shelly, concerning the marriage contract, which I consider of vast importance, as it is not only J. Shelly that is living in a state famous for divorces, but all over our country adulterous living is engaged into an alarming extent; and, no doubt, thousands are now living in adultery ignorantly; supposing that their union is lawful and right, because sanctioned by civil authority. Perhaps if that part of the word of God which teaches the binding power of the marriage vow were oftener taught, both from the press and from the pulpit, something could be done toward retarding the steps of this enormous evil. With this object before us, I will attempt to answers to the questions alluded to, hoping thereby to draw out from the brethren who write for the COMPANION the truth as it is in Jesus upon this momentous subject.

"What is marriage in its true signification?"

Answer. It is a covenant or contract between one man and one woman, uniting each to the other in a conjugal union for life; in which the husband is to "love his wife, even as himself, and the wife see that she reverence her husband." Eph. 5: 33.

"From whence did it come?"

Answer. It comes from him who created the universe, and therefore does not want for authority, but stands paramount to all civil authority of what ever character. The first union of the above named character we have any account of, was that formed between Adam and Eve, when God created one woman for one man and brought her to him; and because she was taken out of man, it was said, "For this cause, shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife, (not wives, but wife,) and they twain, (not they three or four, but they twain) shall be one flesh." Gen. 11: 24. The Savior gave this marriage his sanction, and held it up to view as a correct model under the gospel dispensation, when he answered the Pharisees, "Have ye not read that he which made them in the beginning made them male and female; and said, For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother and shall cleave to his wife, and they twain shall be one flesh?" What therefore God has joined together, let not man put assunder. They say unto unto him why then did Moses command to give her a writing of divorcement and to put her away. He sayeth unto them. Moses, because of the hardness of your hearts, suffered you to put away your wives; but from the beginning it was not so. And I say unto you, whosoever shall put away his wife, except it be for the cause of fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery; and whosoever shall marry her that is put away, committeth adultery." Mat. 19: 9—10.

In the above we find one cause for which a man may put away his wife, given under the seal of the same authority that first gave the law, the creature of the universe; and this is the only cause found in the New Testament for which a man may put away his wife. And even in this case, the same authority says, "And if she depart, let her remain unmarried or be reconciled to her husband." 1 Cor. 12: 2. This implies that the husband must hold himself ready to receive her back again, whenever she returns a penitent; as the Lord ever holds himself ready to receive back to himself the returning penitent, so the believing partner to be Christ-like, must hold himself ever ready for a full reconcilation, if the erring partner will return fully penitent. See also 1 Cor. 12: 39. "The wife is bound by the law so long as her husband liveth; but if her husband be dead, she is at liberty to be married to whom she will, only in the Lord." Bound by what law? The law of God, as given in the beginning, and again held up to view by the Savior, as above stated with this declaration added, "What God has joined together, let not man put assunder." God alone has the power to form this mysterious union and to make of twain one flesh; to him alone, and not man, belongs the power to separate this deep and unfathomable union, made by himself which constitutes them one flesh; and this he accomplishes only in death. It follows then that this law, which emanated from the Creator of the universe stands out boldly and unalterably above my and all the proclamations that ever have been, or ever will be issued by the civil governments of earth. By it (the law of the Lord) all men finally will be judged; hence if the above construction of the law of the Lord is correct all second marriages formed while the first partner is living are adultery, and its character will not be changed through all the civil powers of earth should pronounce them legal and right.

"For what purpose was marriage authorized?" will be answered in essay No. 2.

For the COMPANION.

Hypocrisy.

Here too, we discover in mankind a vast imperfection. The hypocrite is one of God's vilest and most despicable people, and not meritorious to be called His who is former of all mankind.

"No man's condition is so base as his;
None more accurs'd than he; for man esteems
Him hateful, 'cause he seems not what he is;
God hates him, 'cause he is not what he seems;
What grief is absent, or what mischief can Be added to the hate of God and man?"

Truly, man is in a dreadful condition when he has degraded himself to the position of the hypocrite; when he has brought upon himself the hate of God and man; when he has stamped upon his spiritual body the work of sin and hell; and when he is disdained as the vilest of the vile, and as the most contemptible of all beings created. But this is the true condition of the hypocrite. Not only is he scorned by the entheastical body, but by the nefarious, and he carries with him the mark of sin, hatred and contempt. Yet man seems to care not. His self-esteem, excessive prejudice and blind zeal will not tolerate a conscientious thought to interrupt in the advancement of his hypocrisy. Nought can impede the progress of this extreme depravity, but it lies buried deep in his heart, as does thirst for blood in the murderer's heart. Like the evil one, his eye is resting without intermission upon those whom he can snatch from the path of chastity and virtue, and hurl them into the deep gulf of wickedness, wherein he himself is traveling. And even with this he is not acquiescent.

The dissimulation and insincerity of mankind is exhibited to us in many various forms. We take, for instance, the offering of counsel. Man's hypocrisy in this case is strongly evincible, by the fact that he is ever dextrous and spontaneous in preaching, but when it comes to practicing we find him to the reverse His lips are fluent in the utterance of words of advice, but when we investigate and examine this man's heart, we detect that his words were merely uttered, and that he was not prompted by any sensibility to offer them.

Probably the worst form of hypocrisy is that practiced by the Christian. No sin is deeper, more atrocious, or more villainous than hypocritical Christianity. They pray to God only in time of sickness and afflictions, but during prosperity and happiness they show him no love; or if they do sometimes pray during their good fortune, their prayers are not the prayers of a Christian. They upbraid and judge others of smaller faults, when they themselves are guilty of greater crimes. For the sincere and ecclesiastical worship of God they care not, but are raptured in their extrinsic ceremonies and human traditions. In the events and actions of this world they are quick-sighted, but in heavenly things they are blind. Christ often accused the scribes and Pharisees of hypocrisy, and we find that they were guilty. Their ostentatious and exaggerated displays of their Christianity brought the wrath of Christ upon them, and he spake unto them: "But wo unto you scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men: for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in. Wo unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye devour widows' houses, and for a pretence make long prayers: therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation. Wo unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when he is made, ye make him twofold more the child of hell than yourselves. * * Wo unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye are like unto whited sepulchres, which indeed appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones, and of all uncleanness. Even so ye also outwardly appear righteous unto men, but within ye are full of hypocrisy and iniquity."

The hypocrite can dissemble his sin from the observation of others, and even from his own conscience, but he can never delude God. 'Tis the only evil that walks invisible, except to God alone. God's eye is continually resting upon him, and his dissimulation cannot escape his notice. His wrath is upon him, and he has shut himself out from God's kingdom, and from all the glories hereafter.

The sin of hypocrisy may be effectually cured, but not without much difficulty. When man has once allowed himself to depress so deep into this awful element, his path from it is difficult and hard. He must be assiduous and dilligent in obeying the commands that God has given him. He must have a steadfast belief in the pure and all-seeing eye of God, and not depart from his instructions. He must discern his own sins and depart therefrom. Ever be prompt and faithful in the maintenance and support of God's word. Incessantly be ready and willing to assist a brother in his afflictions and trials. Throw away all pride, bigotry and self-esteem, and bow in humiliation and lowliness both to God and his own fellow-creatures.

"Seeming devotion doth but gild the knave,
That's neither faithful, honest, just nor brave;
But when religion doth with virtue join,
It makes a hero like an angel shine."

Brother Henry:—I wish you gracious health, and grace mercy and peace to all the brethren in Christ Jesus our Lord. May the good cause of our divine Master still continue to prosper. I wish to drop these lines for the good of us all. In the COMPANION, vol. 7 No 48, page 769, over signature of I. J. Cover, appears an item of church news that (as some brethren have informed me) might be construed to indicate some degree of partiality, which is not in accordance of the gospel of Christ; "Do nothing by partiality;" 1 Tim. 5: 21. The author of this article referred to is brother John J. Cover, and doubtless nothing of misrepresentation or partiality was intended. In all probability the services of brother Isaiah Custer, who labored so assiduously and arduously among us here, were appreciated much and fully realized. The Lord do for him richly what shall be his reward in a better world. May the Holy Spirit light the lamp-stand of his holy temple, and enkindle a flame of zeal among the ministers of his church, to preach forth the kingdom of God's dear Son, and the unsearchable riches of Christ to a lost and ruined world This is my prayer. Let brotherly love continue.

Be Kind.

Could mankind but realize how much they can increase the felicity, and how much real happiness every one can strew in the pathway of life, to all with whom he may chance to meet, by exercising true charity, there would be no necessity of urging any one to be kind. Yet it is to be feard, that not only mankind in general, but even a larger proportion of professed christians, in this respect often forget the example of their Savior, who was ever kind even to his most bitter enemies. And what could we not accomplish in striving to cultivate in our hearts those feelings which prompted him, even before the cross, to say, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do?" Has a son become disobedient and forgotten the precepts taught him in childhood by maternal life? Let these precepts be kindly repeated, and if necessary, let him be chostened in love. Has a brother become reckless and wayward—let a sister's kindness lead him to respect her if not himself, and induce him to turn his feet into the path of the iust, which alone leadeth to true happiness. Has a sister, once loved and respected by all around, wandered from the path of rectitude? Let a kind brother buoy up, as it were, her dropping spirits; and save her from an untimely grave. Who of us have not witnessed the expressions of joy which flit across the sad countenance of a child, because of a kind look given, or a kind word spoken? Does not our experience plainly testify that we are most easily influenced to well doing by expressions of kindness? What heart is so hard that cannot be softened, and directed into the path of virtue and piety by the exercise of kindness and affection? And what countenace is so defected by grief, that it will not brighten with joy in the presence of him whose kindness is manifested, not only by his ways and actions, but also shines out through the very windows of the soul, and sheds a halo of delight upon all around? Let us all, therefore, carefully consider how many of our fellow mortal might have been saved from the felon's doom, had some kind heart been near to assist them in the hour of trial. And let us see to it, that no one is worse than lost to society, and his precious soul lost to all eternity, because we were unkind. But rather let us ever remember that "charity suffereth long and is kind;" and that "if we have not charity we are nothing."

Yours truly,

On the Death of Sister Susan Shoemaker.

Wednesday, the 7th of Feburary, was the close of the acceptable year of the Lord with our dear mother, and sister in the Lord. When we muse on the life of our departed mother, we see the trials she had to encounter. In the midst of prosperity the Lord saw fit to place her in adversity, by taking from her side her dear husband. Now she was left to the cold charities of a sin-besetting world; but her sorrow soon was turned into joy, for she remembered the promise of the Lord, who would be "a judge of the widows." But, by and by, as she was raising her family in the admonition of the Lord. The angel that kept watch by night saw one that was too good to be left in this sinful, a soul-destroying world, so he took him on his white wings to heaven. By and by her frail bark commenced to get ready to drop the anchor. A messenger was sent to tell us all for the last time to assemble. We left our home in Oakland, and, in seven hours we stood beside her couch. Oh, what a change in her vital condition since we had seen her a few months before! But when we all met at home amidst tears and sorrows and joys, we could only say, "Thy will, O Lord, be done." She sank gradually for the first few days after our arrival, and we all saw our time to administer to her temporal wants was short. While strength remained, she continued to speak words of comfort to us; telling us how she longed to fly away to feast on Jesus' love. But now I come to the morning of her last day. The family now becomes more sad, as they all see that death is at the door, and now her words become more sacred, as she calls by name, and presses the hand, and loved lips meet for the last time in this world. Now we hear her say, "The hour of my departure is at hand; for I hear a voice calling, 'Come Home.'" Death has entered inside the door. It is now 12, M. As the house draw wearily on; as we all stand around the bed watching the grim monster at work, while, now and then she, like Mary of old, her love for Jesus often told, by a godly walk and conversation:

> And all who knew her, plainly tell,
> She loved her Lord and Master well.

As she is nearing the shores, me thinks I can her the angels call:

> "Oh, Jesus, our Master,
> Command to beat faster,
> These weary life pulses, that brings us to thee;
> Till past the dark portals,
> We stand up immortal,
> And sweep with hosanna, the Jasperlit sea."

Two o'clock has come, and "it is done" The soul has taken its everlasting flight. As all spirits had now entered into the closet to weep the silent tear, I tried to raise my soul to God, with other spirits, in this sad hour. Wandering up to the gates of the city, me thinks I see the angels coming and bearing the spirit that has just now left this clay built house. She knocks, the Savior opens. Seeing their white wings, and being well acquainted with the accompanying spirit, he bids welcome. SAFE IN JESUS, FOR EVER MORE.

Now to the family, and friends who may live at a distance, who read this, remember she died as she lived. She lived a life devoted to God; and in her family she was always cheerful; always ready to speak words of comfort; a careful reader of the word of God, and atall times ready to give an answer of the hope of eternal life She always contended earnestly for the truth as taught in the Bible—for the doctrine of the church. How oft did I think, if we had many such zealous members, oh, what way marks! Those who knew her will bear me witness that she had as close conceptions of the gospel truths as can be found. She extensively cultivated the gospel grace.

Funeral services by J. Calvert, of Indiana, assisted by J Kelso, from the words, "Death is swallowed up in victory." They spake words of comfort. Oh, how our hearts rejoiced as they spoke of the meeting of the saints. These soul-cheering thoughts stire up our hearts, and keep us in view of the thought that we too are passing away. There is no work nor labor in the grave." "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord. Yea, saith the spirit, They shall rest from their labors." Therefore let us comfort one another with these words, thanking God for the hope within us. P. C. HETRICK.

Social Gatherings.

To some excellent persons, the time, labor and expense, slight as each may be, may seem of little importance, if not a positively culpable waste, but we are persuaded they greatly err in their judgment of the effect of them upon the young, and their usefulness to all. In agricultural districts where the villages are small and the population comparatively sparse, social gatherings as a means of strengthening the ties of home, and its virtues, and of filling the young mind with wholesome food for its cravings and the young heart with increasing love of the pure and good can hardly be exaggerated. The time passed in these home "sociables," in which friends and neighbors mutually greet and enliven each other, is well spent. In many instances it returns an hundred fold in advantages to the growing character of the young, and in fresh courage and good cheer to those who are bearing the heavy burdens of the day.—Vt. Chronicle.

Female Taste.

A cultivated taste marks a woman of elegance and refinement as decidedly as a knowledge of classical literature does a gentleman; and there is nothing in which female vulgarity is more clearly shown than in want of taste. This is an axiom that we think will not admit of dispute; but it is a question how far taste is natural, and how far it may be acquired. A delicate taste must to a certain extent, depend upon the organization of the individual; and it is impossible for any rules to be laid down which will impart taste to persons entirely devoid of it. But this is very seldom the case with women; as it is one of the few points in which women naturally excel men. Men may be, and probably are, superior to women in all that requires profound thought and general knowledge, but in the arrangement of a house, and the introduction of ornamental furniture and articles of bijouterie, there can no be doubt of the innate superiority of women. Every one must have remarked the difference in the furnishing of a bachelor's house, and one where a lady presides; the thousand little elegances of the latter, though nothing in themselves, adding, like cyphers, prodigiously to the value of the solid articles they are appended to.

God is the source and centre of our being; nearer we get to our centre, the greater our repose.

Feet Washing.

This is as plain a commandment as we have in the new testament, "and Christ came down himself to show us how the Father wanted us to do." Matthew 11: 28. "Come unto me take my yoke upon you, and and learn of me. For I have given you an example that you should do as I have done to you." Now brethren, if we want to learn of Jesus, we must do as he showed us how to do. And how did he do? He raiseth from supper, and laid a side his garments and took a towel and girded himself Now this shows plain enough that the one that washed ought to wipe and finish his work.—Mow brethren this looks to me that if a brother washes others feet and don't wipe them, that he don't finish his work. P. DICE.

Newtonia, Mo.

Brother Holsinger:—In reading so much news from other churches, and seeing none in print from our own, I thought I would write a few lines for your columns. I have been a reader of the COMPANION ever since volume second, and am well pleased with its good advice, which it always brings. I greatly sympathize with the brethren and sisters that have not the opportunity of attending meetings; for we are greatly blessed in having the gospel preached to us. We have meeting every Lord's day; and also every Thursday night. Our church is composed of five speakers and about three hundred members, and is in a prosperous condition, under the care of Elder Jacob Berkey. Yet with all these great blessings which we enjoy, we need to watch and pray that we hold out faithful to the end; for the crown is not in the beginning, nor in the middle, but they that endure unto the end shall be saved. I remain your humble sister in Christ. C. BERKEY.

Goshen, Indiana.

Brother Holsinger:—On the 26th of January, Brother Jesse Calvert, of the State of Indiana, came here from Redbank. He preached one week—thirteen sermons—and the Spirit of God worked powerfully on all. Many shed tears that I never saw affected before; and, I think, if he had stayed another week, a number would have been added to the Church; but his time was too short. May the Lord bless his labors.

LEVI WELLS.

The Coming Kingdom.

Brother and sister, wherever you are, I feel it my duty to warn you to prepare for the coming kingdom of Christ. Read the 24th chapter of Matthew, the 21st of Luke, the 13th of Mark, the 6th of Revelations, and the 24th of Isaiah. There you will find the signs and tokens that were to be preceding his coming. We read in the 24th chapter of Matthew, 29th verse, "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light; and the stars shall fall from heaven and the powers of the heaven shall be shaken. Luke, in the 21st chapter uses the same words. The tribulatian of those days commenced at the destruction of Jerusalem under Titus the Roman General. How long were those days of tribulation to continue? Daniel says, "Until he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people." The Jews were the holy people Daniel had reference to here, in my judgment. We find the persecution of the Jews ceased about 1750, the time when the beast, the Roman power, had accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people? Then we read, "Immediately after the tribulation of these days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens be shaken." In 1780, "Immediately after the tribulation that came on the Jews at the destruction of Jerusalem, and ended as above stated about 1750, the sun was darkened, so that the people had to light their candles; the chickens went to their roosts, and cattle to the stables, and the general cry was, "The Judgment is coming." So we find some five years after, the moon, as it were, turning to blood. In 1833 we find the falling stars and we have eyewitness living now who can testify to the fulfilling of this sign. And Christ says this generation shall not pass away till all these things shall be fulfilled. And mark you what he says now in the 32d verse of this chapter: "Now learn a parable of the fig tree; when his branch is yet tender and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh; likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors. The tribulation of the Jews ended, the scattering of the power of the holy people accomplished by the beast; and the signs of the sun, moon, and stars having been fulfilled exactly in the order as they have been foretold by Christ and the apostles, coming in immediately after the tribulation of those days; and our Savior telling us when we see all these things come to pass, then we know that it is near, even at the doors, is it not high time that we turn our hearts and minds and affections with all our effects to the most high God—the God of Abraham Isaac and Jacob? When we look around us on every hand, do we not see his mighty hand shaking the political institutions, and nations of the world! Even now principalities and powers, sects and parties, are reeling and tottering to their final doom; and soon, very soon, the welcome cry may be heard ringing from one end of the earth to the other, that Christ the Lord is coming with ten thousand of the saints; and that the kingdoms of this world must become the kingdom of Christ the legal heir. Brethren and sisters pray for me, for I sensibly feel my shortcomings and unworthiness. Pray for me, so that God may strengthen my mind to do his will; for I verily believe that the time is short—that a few more years and may be but a few more month or days, we may be so happy as to meet our King in his glory. May God's peace be with you all, is my prayer. Amen. H. F. LONG

Brother Holsinger:—As church news is read with interest by myself, and I presume by a great many others also, I will, as I have been requested by some of my brethren, give you some news from our arm of the church. We organized a year ago some time in September last, by electing one speaker and a deacon. Since then we have had regular preaching twice a month, council meeting once every three months. Have had three additions by baptism and three by letter, and four more are intending to move in by spring, when we will number in all, twenty-five. Our church is known by the name of Bear Creek. It is situated along a branch of the Toledo, Wabash and Western Railroad, running from Decator, Ill., to St. Louis. We very much desire ministering brethren traveling east or west, to stop with us and preach for us. As the brethren that generally come to us have a great ways to come, we do not get to hear them as often as we would like; though they come as often as we could ask them to. Brother Daniel Shively from New Paris, Ind., stopped with us this winter, on his way home from Missouri and Kansas; preached for us twice, and as he is an old acquaintance of the greater portion of the brethren here, we were very happy to see him, and more especially to hear him preach. And we would like very much to see that article come out in the C. F. C., that he said he would write. A. S. LEER.

Morrisonville, Ill.

Brother Henry:—I have just returned home from Patawatamie county, Iowa. We had four days meeting there, and there were two added to the church by baptism; the second addition this winter making seven in all. There was quite a feeling manifested. On my way home several more expressed a desire to attach themselves in a short time. There is a great work to be done here in the West, but who shall do it? May the Lord help that the work may go on.

Errata.

In my notice to the N. W. district of Ohio, in C. F. C., vol. 7, page 800, second line from top, the word And was omitted. Our copy reads, "And on the 21st day of August, the place of holding said meeting was agreed to be at the house of brother Hoover's," &c. In this we did not mean to have any reference to the time of holding Annual Meeting, to commence the first Tuesday after Penticost.

The station nearest brother Hoover's on the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railroad, formerly Wooster Summit, is now Smithville station.

Dear Brother H. R. Holsinger:—As you see, it is with a trembling hand that I write to you, being afflicted with rheumatism and neuralgia. Your C. F. C., has come to hand; and we shall do all we can to circulate its contents, and get subscribers. You have many things NEW to us. We hope you will send us a "Weeping Prophet," to call after poor sinners; not to build up sectarian bigotry, or will worship, for we have enough of that already; but to save souls from ruin. Our quarterly meeting is the third Saturday and Sabbath in March next, and the third Saturday and Sabbath following in June next.

May the good Lord prosper you and build you all up in the most holy faith, is the prayer of your unworthy brother. JOHN DENNIS.

Skowhegan, Maine.

MARRIED.

By the undersigned, at the residence of the bride's parents, February 15, 1872, Mr. U. M. MILLER to sister SARAH FIKE, both of Summit township, Somerset county, Pa. JOEL GNAGY.

On February 6th, at Lancaster, Pa., by the bride's father, brother J. W. BYRNE, of Maryville, Tenn., and sister MARY A. REINHOLD, of Lancaster.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Nettle Creek congregation, Wayne county, Indiana, February 3d, JOHN HENRY HOLDER, son of brother Joseph and sister Catharine Holder, aged 3 years 8 months and 28 days.

Funeral services by the brethren of the above named congregation, from the 131st Psalm. LEWIS W. TEETER.

Died in the Coal Creek congregation, Fulton county, Illinois, February 9th, SAMUEL ESHLEMAN, son of brother Samuel and sister Catharine Eshleman, aged 18 yrs. 2 months and 22 days. Disease, typhoid fever—an extreme case.

A solemn thought for our dear young friends; "Prepare to meet thy God." Funeral services by the writer from Job 14: 14.

Samuel Tennis.

In the Yellow Creek congregation, Stephenson county, Ill., January the 31st, sister MARIA, wife of Jacob S. STUDEBAKER, aged 52 years 9 months and 8 days. Sister Studebaker has long been a worthy member of the Church; and, from our personal acquaintance for the last three years, we can say she was a kind companion, and an affectionate mother. She came to her death by poison in coffee which she drank; also four others of the family; but they all recovered. We have all reason to believe that she has gone to await the crown of glory that is in reserve for the faithful. She has left a sorrowing husband and eight children, with an aged mother, and a large circle of friends to mourn their irreparable loss. May the Lord sanctify their afflictions, as a means of bringing nearer the great Savior of the world; and may they ever live in his fear, and for his glory, that when it is their lot to exchange this world they may exchange for a better, a heavenly, and there join the loved ones who, through the grace of our Lord Jesus, have gone on before them.

Funeral services by the brethren from Amos 4: 12. MARCUS H. FOWLER.

(Visitor please copy.)

Departed this life, January 7th, in the bounds of the Mineral Creek church, Johnson county, Mo, EUGENE JOSEPH, aged 7 years and 11 months; also, January 24th, ARTHUR A., aged 3 years and 6 months; also, February 4th, MINNIE L., aged 1 year 4 months and 14 days; children of friend Ezra and sister Nannie J. ROOP. Disease, diphtheria. Thus, in the space of less than four weeks, have the voices of three, who were the objects of parental affection, been silenced by death; yet, who, ere this, have tuned them anew in their fairer, better home.

Funeral services by the brethren.

S. S. MOHLER.

Elk Lick branch, Somerset county, Pa., February 15, of dropsy of the chest, MARY, daughter of brother and sister Elizabeth, PECK, aged 10 years 9 months and 18 days. Occasion improved by Eld. C. G. Lint and Joel Gnagy, from Isaiah 40: 6, 7.

Same branch, February 18th, LAURA B. DARRAH, aged 7 weeks and 4 days.

Subject, Luke 18: 15, 16, by Eld. C. G. Lint.

Sister SUSAN SHOEMAKER was born in Westmorland county Pa., April 10th 1814, and died February 7, 1872, aged 57 years 9 months and 27 days. The subject of this notice was truly an affectionate and loving mother in the domestic circle, as well as a most faithful mother in Israel. She was afflicted for some months, which she bore with christian fortitude, relying on the strong arm of the Lord. Having her house set in order, she bade farewell to her loving children and friends and the world; her spirit fled, and was wafted by hovering angels into the presence of God who gave it, to bask in the celestial clime of immortal glory, where parting is known no more. Funeral discourse from I Cor. 15: 57, by brother Jesse Calvert, from Indiana, who was at the time holding a series of meetings in the Plumcreek Congregation, Pa., assisted by the writer.

Jacob Kelso.

"HOW TO GO WEST."

Forty years ago, Illinois was as far West as most people wished to go, and journeys were made in the legendary "Prairie Schooner," but in these days of Progress and Improvement, the word West has come to mean Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Colorada, California, and the Territories, and the Traveler reaches almost any point therein by a splendid Line of Railroad.

This Line of Railroad is the Burlington Route, which starts from Chicago over the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R., from Indianapolis, over the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western Short Line, and from Logansaort, over the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw R. R., and running through BURLINGTON, reaches Omaha, Lincolen, Nebraska City, St. Joseph, Atchison, Leavenworth and Kansas City, connecting with the Union Pacific, Kansas Pacific and other Railroads running from those cities.

Always go "By way of Burlington" and you will be sure to be right.

The Burlington Route has admirably answered the question, "How to go West?" by the publication of a truthful and interesting document, filled with facts in regard to Time, Connections, Accommodations, rates of Fare, and other interesting items and illustrated by a large map, truthfully showing the whole West, which they distribute free of charge. Copies, and additional information can be obtained by addressing, General Passenger Agent. B. & M. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

THE

Christian Family Companion.

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

Pressing into the Kingdom.

BY D. B. MENTZER.

There are innumerable little occurrences in common life which serve to remind the thoughtful of things that are spiritual. This life is full of parables. They are unfolding continually, and the student of nature and human nature will observe many striking illustrations of things in the life of the Christian.

Our blessed Savior when here among men, used many common things and incidents of this life to show forth the force of what he came to teach the people. On one occasion, he said: "The law and the prophets were until John, since that the kingdom of Heaven is preached, and every man presseth into it." He meant that the law of Moses consisting of offerings, and sacrifices, and ordinances, and the messianic predictions of the prophets, were allowed or valid until John, the Baptist, commenced preaching the Baptism of Repentance, and the Advent of Christ, the Saviour of the world. At this point another order of things was instituted. The good news of the gospel were proclaimed, "the kingdom of heaven" was at hand, and he said: "Every man presseth into it." I think he meant every man who was ready for his coming, willing to be taught the glorious Gospel of salvation. Such, however, were generally despised by the pharisaical Jews. The Jews were too stubborn to accept Jesus, and would have their own way. This shows their destitution of fellowship and communion with God whom they professed to serve. If they would have had true love to God, they would have received his Son. Jesus, whose acts and events of life on earth, fulfilled the very same prophecies which they, the Jews, read in their synagogues every Sabbath-day. But their hearts were too hard in formality and in sin.

Jesus spoke gracious words, made kind invitations, and taught nothing but that which was and is conducive to the highest, noblest, purest manner of life here, and a consequent happy, glorious life in the world to come. He proved his divinity at his baptism, and in the succeeding grand, supernatural achievements which transpired during his earthly career. When I read of him, and meditate on what he said and did when on earth, I must exclaim: Surely Jesus, Thou art the Christ of God—my victorious, sufficient Savior. Who, who would not follow him? None but stiff-necked Jews, and hard, world-bound sinners. Since Jesus was here, millions have pressed into the kingdom—the militant kingdom or church on earth. Many are pressing into it in these days. Many more think they are pressing into the kingdom of Christ, but we fear they mistake for, when the matter is tested by the Christian's Law-book written by the inspiration of evangelists and apostles, we find that only believers can enter and then only by One way—One Door—One Faith. There are too many [illegible]. God's will is but One Will. He brought but one Gospel to light in the revelation of Christ—the Gospel of His Kingdom. We fear a great multitude is pressing into a door where eventually, they must reap disappointment and remorse. If we tell them of our fear in this respect, they will denounce the idea as an uncharitable one. We have much love and respect for such as will reason about it, but what shall we do with those who become intractable, unreasonable? O how careful Christians ought to be! How we should search the scriptures for the right and truth, instead of doing as some puffed up willful, ease-loving man would teach us! We should press into the right door, and then we can keep all the commandments as Jesus said, "Observe all things whatsoever I commanded you." Matt. 28: 19. While attending our last Annual Meeting in Berks county, I was somewhat forcibly reminded of the subject of this article. The Brethren's entrance into the boarding tent was long and narrow, and this entrance was unusually well filled when a second table was to be served, more so at noon than at any other time. Some persons in the rear of the entrance would press toward the door. This was a parable, and in observing it I thought, if persons would press into the Kingdom of Christ to partake of food that perisheth not as they do after these earthly comforts, what a vast number would be added to God's people. O ye who are feeding on fashion, pleasure, and the foul morsel of sin, come to Jesus. Come learn of Christ. In the Kingdom is peace, joy, humility, the Bread of Life, the Water of Life, and the Hope of Heaven. Come, press into it, and be saved. "Many shall seek to enter and shall not be able." What a pity! "Shall seek." Dear reader, if you are a professor of religion, be careful you do not be one of that number who "seek to enter in and shall not be able." Let us not be satisfied to go in the way our fathers went, or as the circumstances in life may incline us, but let us go in the way of God's commands and do them, and we shall inherit the promises, for the Lord is faithful in that He has promised.

How to Spend the Year.

Happy it will be if you begin it, continue it, and end it with Christ for your best friend and helper. Happy it will be, if its days are filled with deeds of kindness, happiness, and love, all performed for the sake of him who went about doing good. Therefore work for Jesus: make this your chief business. Try to win souls to him. Keep your hearts with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life and death. Consecrate your time, your business, your pleasures, your all to Christ. Love the church; sustain her ordinances; pray for her peace and prosperity; work for her enlargement; attend prayer-meetings; join the Sabbath-schools; study the word.

Every day do something for which yourself and others shall be the happier. Let no day pass without your thank-offering to the Master. Be watchful; deny yourself; bear the cross; avoid evil; help the poor; care for strangers. You will gather your rich harvest when the king shall say unto you: "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Then work on until he bids you rest from your labors. To one whose days are thus spent, death can have no terrors, since it will bring with it his coronation in that happy land. Are you ready for the message?

The old year is gone beyond your reach: its records you cannot change; but the new year comes to you with a pure page for you to fill. What will you write thereon, Christ, or mammon? life, or death? The Master says: "Go work to-day in my vineyard." He has much work for you to do. From every side comes the cry for help. As a servant of the Lord, find your work and do it. Happy is that man who seeks first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. Happy is that man who has Jesus for his portion. BARBARA BARCHUS.

Time.

HOW FAST it flies! Soon it will be gone, and eternity will take its place. Can we keep pace with it? Do our actions correspond with our faith, and the time in which we live? Do we economize our time, and give all we can spare from other necessary duties of life to the cause of God, in doing good to others? or do we spend it in pleasure-seeking? in visiting? or any way to please the carnal mind? Do we realize that time is precious? and every moment that is wasted, or not improved to the glory of God, is sinful in his sight, and will be brought into judgment? If we partook of the spirit of our Master, who went about doing good, and who suffered with hunger and fatigue in ministering to the wants of others, our hearts would be in the work, and we should find no time to use unnecessarily for ourselves, but our hearts would yearn over those who have not the light of present truth. We should put forth a mightier effort to get the truth before them. Oh! that a deeper sense of the shortness of time, and our accountability to God, might rest upon us. The great day of God's wrath hasteth greatly. Soon the great controversy with mankind will be closed up. There is no time to spare. If we have any part to act in life's closing drama, we must be about it; and while we may feel deeply humbled under a sense of our unworthiness and inability to fill even the smallest place, we must not get discouraged, but do what we can. Oh! may we obey the truth by living out all the light. Then shall we feel its sanctifying power resting upon us, which will fit us for our place wherever it may be.—Advent Review.

"Who is the Lord, that I should Obey his Voice? Ex. 5 : 2.

This interrogation proceeded from the mouth of the most cruel king upon the earth. He had a heart as hard as adamant. He inflicted upon his people the most grievous burdens. He lessened the facilities for the work to be accomplished by his people, yet he requested the same amount of labor from them as before. Though all those scourges inflicted upon this people by their cruel king, their cries were heard by the Lord, and he sent Moses and Aaron, his servants, to persuade the king to let the people Israel go, that they might hold a feast unto the Lord in the wilderness. Then the king interrogates them, "Who is the Lord, that I should obey his voice?" Though he was threatened with pestilence and with sword, yet he would not hearken unto them, but made the burdens of the people, Israel, more grievous to be born. But their cries were raised to God and he sends his servants to the king and plead him to let the people go, that they might serve the Lord in the wilderness. They wrought signs and wonders in the presence of the king, turned the rivers of water into blood. Plague upon plague was inflicted upon the Egyptians, yet the king hardened his heart and would not let the people Israel go. God sends his servant once more to the king and says, "About midnight will I go out into the midst of Egypt and all the first born in the land of Egypt shall die." When this came to pass the king's heart was moved, and the language from him is, "Rise up, and get you forth from among my people, both ye and the children of Isreal; and go, serve the Lord, as ye have said." This cruel king would not hearken till "there was not a house where there was not one dead." This touched his heart, and he gave up and let others go and serve the Lord, but he and his host lingered without the camp, and were finally destroyed.

How many are to-day lingering without the camp, consenting that others may go and serve God, but they will not go, and hence must perish if they do not! "Who is the Lord, that I should obey his voice?" How many after meditating upon the sacred word as hearing it preached to them, are led to ask this question? Yet they will not obey, but stifle those holy feelings, the operation of the Holy Spirit, until their heart grows hard and they are left without the camp to perish by their crimes. Some are led to the foot of the cross by the first warning; others may be warned time and again, yet will not come. Some will not come until the Lord calls a companion, brother, sister, or a dear little olive plant from the family, to direct their minds heavenward. Then the cry is "who is the Lord, that I should obey?" The Lord is your Benefactor; he is gracious and full of compassion, if you come unto him, he will in no wise cast you away. O how many will say like David? "My voice shalt thou hear in the morning, O Lord; in the morning will I direct my prayer unto thee, and will look up." Let us look up to God, to God our exceeding joy. Let us hearken to the voice of God and obey it. "If any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him and he with me." Here we have the pleasing promise of God's presence with us if we hear his voice? To-day if you hear his voice, harden not your hearts." Then let us all ask the question, "Who is the Lord, that I should obey his voice." The voice of God is his word. Then let us obey his voice in all things whatsoever he has cammanded us, that we may all be able to stand in the great day.

A merchant who, from being a very poor boy, had risen to wealth and renown, was once asked by an intimate friend to what he attributed his success in life. "To prompt and steady obedience to my parents," was the reply. "In the midst of many bad examples of youths of my own age, I was always able to yield a ready submission to the will of my father and mother, and I firmly believe that a blessing has, in consequence, rested upon me and upon all my efforts.

Universalism not of God. No. 4.

It will be our design in this, to try to show the great design of Christ's mission on earth. It is true, as stated upon former occasions, that Christ came, as he said himself, "not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." He came into the world, "not to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved." "He came unto his own, and his own received him not. But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God."

We do strongly maintain that Christ came into the world to set up a visible kingdom, or, in other words, to establish his Church. And if he came to establish the Christian Church, as we are plainly taught he did, I maintain that he made a tangible, visible mark, by which it could be distinguished from the world.

We read in the prophecy of Daniel of the setting up of a kingdom by the God of heaven, which shall never be destroyed. And it was, according to prophecy, to be set up in the days of the fourth universal empire; which was fulfilled by the coming of the Son of God, the babe in Bethlehem. We hear the words of Zacharias, when rejoicing that the full time had come: "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel; for he hath washed and redeemed his people, and hath raised up a horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David; and as he spake by the mouth of his holy prophets, which have been since the world began: that we should be saved from our enemies, and from the hand of all that hate us; to perform the mercy promised to our fathers, and to remember his holy covenant, the oath which he sware to our father Abraham. * * * And thou, child, shalt be called the prophet of the highest; for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways."

Next we hear a declaration from the great harbinger himself, saying, "I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight." O, Universalist! why did the great harbinger say, "Make his paths straight," if your doctrine be true?

We find the King himself was born in Bethlehem, (see Matt. 2: 5,) "And thou Bethlehem, in the land of Juda, art not the least among the princes of Juda; for out of thee shall come a Governor that shall rule my people Israel." Here we see the term "Governor," and the sentence, "He shall rule." We understand the term "governor" to mean, a ruler, or, in other words, one who dictates how the governed shall do. But according to the doctrine of Universalists, all will be saved whether they are governed or not. But this Governor upon a certain occasion positively declares that his kingdom is not of this world. But he institutes certain laws in his kingdom, by which his subjects are to be governed, and which the world does not engage. Yes, he positively declares to a certain Nicodemus how to enter his kingdom: "Except a man be born of water, and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." John 3: 5. How is it, Universalist, that you and the King of Kings so widely differ?

The prophet Daniel declared that the God of heaven should set up a kingdom, which should never be destroyed; and the kingdom should not be left to other people,—no change in the character of its citizens, or members,—and it should stand forever and ever. The Savior also declares, "Upon this Rock will I build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." It is the humble opinion of the unworthy writer, that Christ's kingdom, or Church, has existed and will exist entire and unchangable: no change in its laws; as he ordained it, so will it go on more, and still more gloriously, until it shall have redeemed its precious jewels and filled the entire earth, and restored the sceptre of its loyalty to the hands of the King of Peace. When he "shall descend from heaven with a shout,, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God;" yea, when he shall, as said in another place, descend from heaven in flaming fire with his mighty angels, "taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Universalist, what will you do with the language just quoted? The prophet Jeremiah, in speaking of the new covenant,—we think he had reference to Christ's setting up of his kingdom, or, in other words, his establishing his Church on earth,—"Behold the days come, saith the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and the house of Judah; not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day when I took them by the hand and led them out of the land of Egypt; because they continued not in my covenant." The King of Peace descends to earth, to fulfill the promise of the Father by delivering the covenant to the children of men. He set it up by the direction of God the eternal Father; and set it up in order that its laws must be obeyed. I understand the very term covenant to be a condition. Yes, friendly reader, Christ came to deliver a law; and that law must be obeyed, if we expect to share the glory of his presence and the rich provisions of his kingdom. O fellow traveler in the household of faith, is it not heart rending to see our fellowmen inculcate a doctrine gotten up by the wayside, a seed sown by the devil and Satan. While we write upon those solemn reflections, we are aware of the fact that should this come before the eyes of those who vindicate Universalism, it will be offensive to them: yes, unwelcome truth; but we do it in the spirit of love and in the fear of God: "Knowing the terror of the Lord we persuade men," says the apostle.

I believe that it is admitted by all, so far as my acquaintance is concerned, that a oneness should exist on earth, and that a unity of the Christian faith is of the highest importance. This is what the Savior prayed for in his ardent devotions to his heavenly Father, John 17: 20, 21, "Neither pray I for these alone, but them also which shall believe on me through their word, that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." And now, fellow-citizens in the commonwealth of Israel and the household of faith, if all professors of religion could be one—be in the unity of the faith of the gospel, as Christ hath delivered it—there would not exist so many faiths gotten up by the wayside, through the influence of Satan, as the car of everlasting truth hath hauled her banners onward from generation to generation. If Christ appointed any externals in his Church, we are compelled to conclude that he fixed the most important ones; and to say he did not, is impeaching his un bounded wisdom. The government of his Church is the most important of all externals, from every conceivable consideration. He must then have appointed it by giving principles that would determine it, or giving a pattern or example; which he did on the evening of his betrayal; for he said, "If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet; for I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you." It would not only be an impeachment of his eternal wisdom to suppose that he left the earth without appointing laws, or ordinances, in his kingdom, for the observance of man, but it would reflect upon his goodness and dignity. And if he left us without a chart, or map, to follow his steps, we are of all men in this age most miserable, and he has no kingdom; for the term kingdom implies three particulars: first, a king; second, a law; third, and lastly, subjects.

Man is so constructed, that he, in the flesh, with all his fallible temperaments, is compelled to have a law by which he is to be governed. Nature itself is governed by laws. The beast of the forest has laws that nature has given it, by which it is governed. And we say again that if Christ's kingdom has no external laws by which his subjects are to be governed, he has no kingdom here.

No one thing so determines the destiny of a nation, or community, as its government. A good government will conduct a nation to prosperity, and secure the welfare and happiness of all its subjects; while a bad government will, sooner or later, overwhelm it in ruin, and entail wretchedness, misery and woe. O Universalist! where is your government, upon which you base your hopes? Verily, we think, you have none; and if you have, we fear that it will crumble and totter down, if not sooner, "when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." 2 Thess 1: 7–9.

No nation or community can be truly prosperous with an ill-regulated government. There is not anything in the world of more grave importance throughout the whole life of man than is a law or discipline. If the head of a family have no discipline to govern his children, he is sure to have a rude and reckless family. We are well acquainted with a family who was brought up without a well regulated discipline, and we can testify of a truth, with all the evidence that might be demanded, that it is a miserable family indeed. We will not personate here, but one of that family is arrested, once in awhile, for his rudeness. And as stated before, if Christ has no discipline for the government of his subjects, his kingdom cannot stand. But hark, Universalist, the Savior said, "A kingdom divided against itself cannot stand;" and Christ's kingdom is not thus divided as you will have it. Yes, we have a discipline originated in the celestial courts of heaven, and handed to us by the hands of the babe of Bethlehem; and that discipline must be obeyed; if we be subjects of his kingdom. Our discipline closes with the following words: "And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book."

Wisdom.

It is generally said, "much reading makes wise men." But there are two kinds of wisdom—worldly wisdom and heavenly wisdom; and it is said in God's word that worldly wisdom is foolishness in the sight of God. But we are to read that we may become wise. We should try to obtain that heavenly wisdom; and in order to do this we must read the Bible, the "Book of Books." It is the best book that the world has ever seen—the noblest that has ever honored and dignified the language of mortals. If we look into its antiquity we discover a title to our veneration, unrivaled in the history of literature. If we have respect to its evidences, they are found in the testimony of miracle and prophecy; in the ministry of man, of nature, and of angels; yea, even of "God manifest in the flesh." If we consider its authenticity, no other pages have survived the lapse of time that can be compared with it. If we examine its authority—for it speaks as never man spake—we discover that it came from heaven, in vision and prophecy, under the sanction of Him who is Creator of all things, and the giver of every good and perfect gift. If we reflect on its truths, they are lovely and spotless, sublime and holy as God himself; unchangeable as his nature, durable as his righteous dominion, and versatile as the moral condition of mankind. If we regard the value of its treasures, we must estimate them by the enduring perfection and supreme felicity of an eternal kingdom. If we inquire who are the men that have recorded its truths, vindicated its rights, and illustrated the excellence of its scheme, from the depths of ages and from the living world, from the continent and the isles of the sea, comes forth the answer: "The patriarch and the prophet, the evangelist and the martyr." And if, raising our eyes from time to eternity, from the world of mortals to the world of just men made perfect, from the visible creation, marvelous, beautiful and glorious as it is, to the invisible creation of angels and seraphs, from the footstool of God to the throne of God himself, and ask, What are the blessings that flow from this single volume? I say, let the question be answered by the pen of the evangelist, the harp of the prophet, and records of the book of life. Such is the best of books the world has ever admired; such, the noblest that man has ever adopted as a guide. You may read all the writings and the books of the present and enlightened age; you may peruse all the writings of philosophers, and all the wise men the world has ever known or heard of, you can not gain the heavenly wisdom which may be learned in the Bible; that wisdom that will last through all the ceaseless ages of eternity. Read your Bible, then, for it will make you wise unto salvation.

Spiritual Leprosy.

And it came to pass, when he was in a certain city, behold, a man full of leprosy; who seeing Jesus, fell on his face, and besought him, saying, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean. And he put forth his hand, and touched him, saying, I will; be thou clean. And immediately the leprosy departed from him. Luke 5: 12, 13.

The leprosy was a cutaneous disease; and it appears that in an early day, it was very common among the people. We also find that it existed among the Children of Israel. Those that were affected with the disease were counted unclean, and had to be separated from the congregation until they were cured. According to the law of Moses, there was only one remedy that would affect a cure, and that had to be applied precisely as directed from the Lord; if it was not, the cure was not effectual; and if not healed, they could in go case enter into the congregation.

We read of a case of leprosy in 2 Kings, 5th chapter—a man named Naaman, captain of the host of Syria—who had a great desire to be cured; but, as a great many more, would like to have it done according to his own way of thinking. And when Elisha had told him the remedy—"Go and wash seven times in the Jordan"—we find that he was wroth, and said, "Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters in Israel? may I not wash in them, and be clean? So he turned and went away in a rage." But his servant entreated him to go. He therefore went and washed, as directed by the man of God, and, behold, he was clean. Just so, sinner, you must come in order to be cleansed of your spiritual leprosy, which, if not cured, will perhaps sink you lower than the grave, to a place where there is darkness and woe forever. Think, O sinner, think how unclean you are! For one moment take a view in thy heart. Behold, what uncleanness! With that heart you can never come where God and his Christ are. Polluted with all manner of wickedness; polluted with all manner of uncleanness; polluted with all manner of filthiness. O dreadful condition to be in! But, thank God, there is a remedy which, if you use it, will cleanse you and make you clean. There is balm in Gilead to heal all your bruises and putrefying sores. There is a Savior who can cleanse from all unrighteousness. But in order for you to be cleansed, you must comply with the prescriptions laid down by the Lord Jesus Christ in his word, and those are to be observed to the very letter. Methinks I can see, by the eye of faith, Naaman in Jordan obeying the commands of the inspired prophet. But, dear sinner, he was not cleansed by dipping himself once in Jordan; neither by twice, nor by thrice; but when he dipped himself seven times, which was the word of the Lord, that performed the cure. I do not, for a moment, think, that there was any more virtue in the water of the river Jordan, than there was in the waters of Abana and Pharpar; but the word of the Lord had to be fulfilled, and then it had its desired effect. In order that you, my dear reader, may be made a fit subject for the kingdom of heaven, you need a washing of regeneration, and to obey the commands of the Lord Jesus Christ, as it is written by the holy apostles. But you cannot enter into its healing virtues, unless you exercise faith in the word; that is, believe, and then enter in by obeying the commands. That will not only lead you into the waters of purification, but it will be an answer of a good conscience toward God.

If you obey the Lord, you can rest assured that you will come out a clean person—a fit subject for the kingdom; and oh, what a different state of things; a clean man made from a filthy man, a sinner into a righteous man, a degraded man into a man of respect and virtue; and besides that, you can rejoice in your new birth, for Jesus says, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of heaven." But you need not rejoice alone; the angels in heaven rejoice to see you made happy in the Lord and on your road to heaven. Oh, who would not be in the service of the Lord! What joy, what peace, what consolation, what a prospect of a hereafter enjoyment with the Lord in glory! Dear reader, give yourself a careful examination; and if you find that you are affected with the loathsome disease, get to work at once and have yourself delivered from it while you have time, place and opportunity — while there's mercy to be found, and pardon given. More anon.

Blessed are they that Mourn for they shall be Comforted.

Every crumb of the bread of life acts like a charm upon the soul, though all that feast upon it and live by it, may not be conscious at all times of a cause to mourn; yet the glorious promise to the mourner affords a soul reviving food.

Mourning, in order to be followed by the blessing of God, must be an unalterable reality. The wearing of mourning apparel alone will no more insure God's blessing than the wearing of modest apparel without other necessary requirements will merit God's approval.

The soul that has never been conscious of a cause to lament cannot of itself become an heir of the comforts that will surely be enjoyed by the real mourner. A sufficient cause, however, always exists to supply all that desire to be comforted with the enjoyments which the Savior has promised. The poor, lone widow, sitting with a broken heart by the side of her little children, who like little unfledged birds, open their mouths to receive food which none but a parent such as they have lost can give them, is an object of real mourning. The poor orphan that is thrust out upon the charity of a cold, regardless world; in whose mind the disadvantages and dangers of such a condition are gradually developed, is an example of the characters to which Christ referred when speaking of mourners that should be blessed. But the same lamenting emotion of the mind is also experienced by every true follower of the meek and lowly Jesus. Gayety flies away at the approaching thought of how many fellow beings feel death in each moment. Pride, licentiousness, cruelty and riotous, wastefulness vanish at the thought of the innumerable ills that make this world a vale of tears. The sufferings and the fate of humanity furnish sufficient material to kindle a flame that will burn up all giddy mirth in the heart of every christian.

It has pleased God in His goodness and wisdom, to bestow blessings, in an eternal world, not upon those who are surrounded in this world by pleasure, power, and affluence but upon the poor of this world, who are rich in faith toward God, upon the real mourner. It has also pleased Him to send His Son in the person of Christ to proclaim His will to the children of men, which He did, pointing out distinctively those whom He had chosen heirs of his kingdom. And not only so, but He has also given directions by which all men may become heirs, joint-heirs with those who were predestinated, foreordained, to be His children if they will. Blessed be His name forever more. J. B. GARVER.

Letter of Condolence.

WM. FLICKINGER.—My dear brother-in-law, of both Christian and civil:—It is through a strong feeling of mutual sensibility and christian affection, that I address you at this time of deep gloom and sorrow on your part. In the death of your dear companion, your have realized how closely two that have the same objects in view, whether of a religious or secular nature, may be allied together; and, indeed, we cannot know the very excellent qualities of one so dear, until we pass through an ordeal as thou have lately passed through. Perhaps, last upon the list of subjects for meditations, on the first day of January 1872, was the thought, that you and your dear companion in life would so soon in the presnnt year bid a long and lasting farewell, as it was yours to do. Yet, my dear brother, nothing could you look for when you started out in life together short of this, that one of you would have to lead off to pass through the dark portals of death. And as it has pleased Him who seals the destiny of all the living, to strike the rod of affliction upon you and your family, you should by no means give yourself over to too much sorrowing and lamenting, lest you run into murmurings, and thereby destroy the beautiful lesson that God wishes to impart unto us, that He is no respecter of persons; that whether our prospects for the future are great or not so great; that whether we have much of this world's goods or not; whether we make calculations and lay plans of a greater or less magnitude, in which man and wife may mutually enjoy themselves together in those things with which God may bless them temporally or spiritually and as to how they intend doing with those dear little ones with which God has blessed them, He can, with one stroke of his mighty arm, frustrate all plans by cutting assunder the life string of either wife or husband what your plans mutually were for the future I know not, yet one thing have I learned through a messenger traveling as it were with the rapidity of lightning, that all things of this character were broken up and severed between you and your dearest one. How solemn the sentence, My wife died at five; telling us at once, that what God joins together he can separate again without violating any written law. The eye, the ear, yea, all the avenues of communication are closed and stilled in death. Yet there is a still, yet powerful emotion of the soul, that brings up before us some of the beautiful characteristics of loved ones. We often think of their laudable qualities, and then welt away in a flood of tears. Brother, be consoled; dry up your tears; close up the fountain of bitterness; let the wells of God's mercy be unstopped, that a lotion may gush forth upon you commensurate with the wounds inflicted upon you and your dear family. The deportment of your dear companion was of such a nature that it gives you the consoling hope that it is hers to enjoy the realms of the blest, in that country so bright and so fair. Console yourself in the thought, that it was God's divine pleasure to so deal with you, and that God can open a way unto you through which you can find relief. Often go to your closet; and while there, lay your case before him who can give great consolation. It will only be a few more day, or at most, years, and you, if found faithful, shall again join your loved one for whom you now mourn; and more than this, the little daughter already gone over and with all the disembodied spirits, and join in the sweet authems of praise in that world without end. Cease to mourn, brother; let not the waters of affliction cover thee entirely. Give not way to the great sorrow of life. It was thy God that did all this. Say with Job, "Blessed be the name of God." Be assured that you have my sympathies and prayers, as well as the prayers of kindred ones. I close this letter with the salutation of brotherly love and greetings. Give my greeting to my dear old brother, John Peck, and his companion. Peace be with thy house. Amen. Written by your brother in Christ. C. G. LINT.

Vain Speculations.

There are a great many people in the present age of the world who get up into the tree of curiosity and speculation to see Christ, and get a view at his divine character and attributes. They ask a thousand queer questions about His divinity, about God's power and sovereignty and the eternal laws and decrees; they reason and philosophize, and hang on to the outside limbs of a great sycamore; but they must come down from that and cast aside such vain and profitless speculations if they would be saved, and come unto the knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, for we cannot be saved as philosophers, but as little children and humble followers of the meek and lowly Lamb of God, who gave himself for us We cannot go to heaven by the way of Athens, but by the way of Bethlehem. What matters it who are chosen and elected to be saved, when it is declared in the volume of inspiration, that, "except we believe and repent from our sins, and obey the truths as it is in Christ, we shall all be damned.—Why then be perplexed about the way that sin came into the world, when the great question is, how shall we get sin driven out of our breasts. How many there are who spend their time in criticism and religious speculations when the path to heaven is so plain that a wayfaring man though a fool, need not err therein; and yet men will stop, and cavil, and debate, and even quarrel about the essential elements of the divine law, showing, by such unnecessary arguments an unwillingness of mind to obey, in full, the requirements of the Gospel of Christ. Suppose that going toward the Pacific slope, I had resolved that I would stop until I could kill all the grizzly bears and the panthers on either side of the way; but when I went out to hunt the grizzly bears, the grizzly bears would come out to hunt me. Here is a plain road to heaven; men say they will not take a step on it until they can make game of all the theories that bark and growl at them from the thicket. But they forget the fact, that, as they go out to hunt the theory, the theory comes out to hunt them, and so they perish. Remember that we must receive the kingdom of God in simplicity of heart, for it is written in the books of holy truth, that except we repent and become as little children we shall in no wise enter therein. We must be willing to follow and obey Christ our leader in all things, through evil as well as good report, and for his sake to cast aside all the vain and fruitless theories and speculations entertained by hypocritical professors respecting the way to life and salvation.

William Pennington was one of the wisest men in this country, and Governor of his own State, and afterwards speaker of the House of Representatives, yet when God called him to be a Christian he went in and sat down among some children that were applying for churchmembership, and said to his pastor: "Talk to me just as you do to these children, for I know nothing about it.

There is no need of bothering ourselves about mysteries when there are so many things that are plain and easily to be understood, if there is a willingness of heart to obey the same. It is evidently ignoring the principles of the divine law to entertain such foolish and irrational ideas and theories respecting the plan of salvation, when the same is revealed in as plain and unmistakable language as could be devised. It is a stultification of religious truths to adopt such theories as have no foundation in divine revelation. Yet what will men not do to be saved aside from the plan proposed to him in the teachings of God's sacred word: He is always more willing to adopt his own foolish ideas, and fabrications than the teachings of the law of life, which is in Christ Jesus. Nevertheless a continuance in such a course will eventually prove his disapprobation in the sight of him to whom he must render strict account, for his work and conduct in the present life.

Human Sympathy.

Sympathy, as defined by a lexicographer, means fellow feeling; feeling mutual sensibility; having mutual sensation. We are so peculiarly constructed, so sensitively created, that we need a great deal of sympathy from our fellow creatures, in order that we may fight the battles of life successfully, and that we may wade through the great deep of adversity, in any and every form that it may come to us, and not be "swallowed up of overmuch sorrow." The husband needs the tender sympathy of his wife, when laboring and toiling day after day, and week after week, to support his family; after denying himself many of the comforts of life, in order that the family may be the better provided for, both mentally and physically. The wife needs the loving sympathy of her husband to support and cheer her in her monotonous and laborious duties. She, as the weaker vessel, (which is so readily accredited to her,) needs much sympathy, and if she receives it from him who made a solemn promise before God and witnesses that he would cherish and protect her; it strengthens her, comforts her, brings her up, in short does her more good than if received from any other source. She is often taxed beyond her strength, in the endeavor to rightfully fill the place of wife and mother; often at the expense of health. Her cares and trials are numerous and often severe; her duties arduous and unending. Sometimes she feels almost like sinking under the accumulating weight of domestic cares, when a kind sympathetic word from her husband drives the gathering cloud from her brow, and causes her to feel a serenity of soul, akin to heavenly felicity, which will enable her to press forward again with redoubled diligence, and overcome all difficulties imaginary or real. The smile will again come back to her face, domestic peace and harmony will again reign in the household, and all for one encouraging sympathizing word.

"A little word in kindness spoken,
A motion, or a tear,
Will often heal a heart that's broken,
And make a friend sincere."

Parents need the sympathy of their children; children of their parents. Even the little innocent prattler has its cares and troubles which will at times cloud the usually serene and sunny brow, it will be distressed and sad, not knowing how to extricate itself from the difficulty; when a cheery sympathetic word from a kind father, or loving mother, and the little assistance given, that may be needed, all will again be smiles and loving caresses. Brothers and sisters need each other's sympathy; friends and neighbors. The Christain needs the the sympathy of his fellow Christian, each has trials and temptations the other knows nothing of. There is no Christian so happy, none whose way is so smooth and clear that he can say truthfully, I need not the sympathy or assistance of any one; I can get along very well without it: Sickness may come, death visit his family, a loved one is taken away by the fell destroyer. O then is when sympathy is needed If ever we need it in this life it is when our hearts are lacerated and bleeding, caused by the struggle we necessarily have to undergo in relinquishing our claim to that dear child, to that dear friend, to another's claim, one that is stronger than we. Ah, Christian friends, ministers, brethren and sisters, here is where we should be very careful, when the heart is submerged in sorrow caused by sore bereavement. O how it needs that oil and wine to be poured into it by some good Samaritan. Then if some unfeeling priest or levite passes by and turns the cold shoulder toward us, and when in a paroxyism of grief some of the many ways in which the loved one will be missed be spoken of, and receive something cold unsympathetic in return, some hint perhaps (that some are so prolific of) that we are receiving no greater scourging than we deserve, or that we are not very well prepared to follow those who have died happy. We are all willing to admit our delinquency in duty, willing to confess our sins and shortcomings: for "There is none good, no, not one," and we know it; but this seems not the proper time to chide. It is unmixed sympathy that we need, and while speaking words of comfort and consolation to the bereaved ones in soothing tender tones, how much more easily they can be induced to turn from their waywardness (if wayward they have been) than by cold, unfeeling, unsympathizing words.

The pastor needs the sympathy of his flock to encourage him in his arduous duties. The members should all be Aarons and Hurs. The members need the sympathy of the pastor. And does not the unconverted need sympathy? Ah! yes, they need the sympathy of every Christ-loving, cross-bearing Christian. Let the Christian show the unconverted, by his deportment to him in every respect that he is interested in his welfare, and feels a deep concern for the salvation of his never-dying soul, and much more good can be accomplished than by a "Stand off I am better than thou" demeanor towards him. In short we all, all need the warm unselfish sympathy of each other, in order that we may make sure work for heaven and happiness. Jesus the great phsician of our souls has a deep, tender, and an abiding sympathy for us.

"Yes; for me, for me he careth,
With a brother's tender care;
Yes, with me, with me he shareth
Every burden every fear.
Yes, for me he stands h pleading,
At the mercy seat above.
Ever for me interceding,
Constant in untiring love."

Marriage in its True Signification, No. 2.

"For what purpose was marriage authorized?" As the Creator of the universe is so merciful and kind, that he always has the good of his creatures in view, I conclude, that he ordained the union of one woman to one man during life, in order to secure to themselves the greatest amount of happiness, and the greatest possible advantage to their children. He created them male and female in order that they might multiply, and replenish the earth. "In their image of God created he him, male and female created he them, and God blessed them. And God said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth." Gen. 1: 27, 28. Thus he created them male and female, and located in the brain of each an organ that would prompt each to naturally love and be drawn to the other, as also another organ, by the exercise of which both would be prompted to love and protect their children. Now each individual of the forthcoming race, in order to become useful to society and to be comfortable and happy, must be cared for and instructed by some one. Children, as well as older persons, in order to be comfortable and happy should have a permanent home, where habits of industry can be encouraged, which are so necessary for the good of society, Now, in order that the highest facilities for the comfort, security, and future well-being of the race might be secured, he saw fit to have society divided into small communities, or families, with a master or governor, over each little government: the husband to be the head of this institution the wife to be an help meet for him, and the children to obey their parents; Eph. 5: 23, "The husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church." "It is not good that the man should be alone; I will make him an help meet for him." Gen. 2: 18. "Children obey your parents." Eph. 6: 1; Col. 3: 30.

Now to give it in a summary: God, in the beginning, created only one woman for one man, and brought her to him for an help meet for him; and for their descendents it was said, "For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother and cleave to his wife (not wives) and they twain (not they many) shall be one flesh." The Savior, in his day, again holds up to view this model marriage as being then still, and consequently for ever will be, the only correct one. I conceive, then, that it is in accordance to this divine institution for one man and one woman mutually to love each other, even as they love themselves; and to agree upon a time when they will seal, or ratify, their contract by complying with the conditions of the civil government under which they live, in order that their rights as husband and wife, may by the same be recognized and protected. There is no law given by the Savior for regulating this ceremony directly; yet it seems that he gave it his sanction by his presence at the "Marriage at Cana," where he wrought his first miracle. All nations, so far as my knowledge extends, from savages to the most enlightened, have some rule or ceremony that makes the setting up of this new government, and from which their rights as husband and wife date; either of which will answer the purpose, only so that we do not connect with them such things as are in themselves wrong; such as very extravagant dinners, &c., which superfluity I think, would better be given to the poor or sent to the COMPANION office to the charity fund, to help furnish the COMPANION to such as are not able to get it otherwise. I suppose if all men were real christians, and no other law but the gospel needed, (as would be the case if all were real christians,) then no further ceremony would be needed other than for the church to know that, from such a date, brother A and sister B had enterd into relationship as husband and wife, for the purpose of raising up under the Lord's appointment, a family of children for the Lord, who should be qualified so far as possible, to assist in carrying on the Lord's cause, even after their parents are worn out and are in their graves. Thus love to God and love to man would be the highest motive that could possibly prompt two persons to enter into this relationship; and their enjoyment while thus engaged would then be of the highest type. Their children would then be brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. They would be provided with a permanent home; proper care would be taken for the health and comfort of their little bodies; and their expanding minds would be stored with such knowledge, as in the judgment of their parents, could best be turned to the Master's account in future years. It seems to be a law fixed by God himself, that the higher and purer the motive for action in any matter, the greater the amount of happiness it brings. Even in feeding and clothing our own bodies the motive should be, that with these bodies we may work for the Lord. Could we only arrive at this state of perfection, then we would, whether we eat or drink, or whatever we do, do all to the glory of God. 1 Cor. 10: 31. Then our joy would be full, both in time and eternity. As the marriage institution, as given under divine sanction, will have the man and woman who love one another even as themselves, to set up this little domestic government, where they can enjoy each other's companionship in private seclusion, be happy in the enjoyment of each other's love, provide, permanent home for their children, where, under parental care they can be instructed, clothed, and fed, and where habits of industry can, to the best advantage be encouraged, society benefitted, and the greatest happiness of the race attained, it has the blessing of God pronounced upon it; while fornication, by which term I mean lewdness of a particular character, does not thus provide for the offspring; and it develops, not happiness, but envy, and jealousy the blackest passion of the human heart, and hence is denounced in the sacred volume in the most forcible terms.

Put on thy Beautiful Garments.

In the sermon on the Mount, our Saviour told his disciples that they were the salt of the earth, and the light to the world. Previous to the dawn of the Christian Era, God had manifested His written will to Jews only. Being the only nation on the earth who had the true light, they ought to have reflected this light among the nations of the earth, that the world might have seen it as visibly as they would a city that is set on a hill, which the Saviour says, "can not be hid."

But instead of the Jews being a light to the world, we find, that even the light that was in them was midnight darkness. They put their light under a measure—rejected the true light; and fearing others might receive it, supposed they would extinguish it by crucifying God's only Son.

As a nation, they were righteous only in one thing, and that was self-righteousness. They were so good that they dare not eat with Publicans and sinners, and accused the Saviour of being a friend of sinners. They would stand at the street corners where the passers-by would see and hear them pray; thanking God that they were better than other men.—They did not desire the respect or esteem of any but Pharisees, believing no others fit for heaven. This egotistical, self-righteous spirit drove the unconverted away from God, and caused the Pharisees to reject the meek Savior.

The spirit of the Pharisee still lives and is to-day driving unconverted men and women away from the church of Christ. Not one of our brethren will be turned form his faith by men who dogmatically assert that "The doctrine of the Brethren is not of Christ." Neither will they quit repeating, "Thy Kingdom come," because Ben. Franklin says, "The Church of England, and some ignorant people in this country, are still praying, "Thy Kingdom come."—Neither will our Brethren cause one Methodist to forsake his religion by telling him that his church is a daughter of the Mother of Harlots.

We can not drive a man out, even of a hut, by telling him that the roof leaks—that it will fall upon him; Neither will he leave though we try to punch "daubbing" from the cracks. He would probably try to throw dust in our eyes, or a missile at our heads, but a better way, and one not likely to fall, would be to drive our easy carriage to his door, and invite him to ride with us; drive to our home, give him a good warm dinner; show him that our house is founded on a rock, that it is all fitly framed together, and though the rain may descend, and the floods come, and the winds blow, it cannot fall, for it is on a rock. Tell him he may have equal rights with the rest of the house-hold. He will stay and have no more desire for the flesh pots of Egypt. Church Festivities, &c.

It has become fashionable to have church sewing parties, festivals and fairs. Of course, anything which a church does to make money for as good a purpose as the Church is, must be right—at least this is the general plea.

Now allow me to tell you how I look at these things. If the church can make use of gambling, tableaux, comic songs, &c., &c., and not be conforming to the world, against which the Apostle Paul, in Rom. xii. 2, warns the brethren so earnestly, I must get different light from what I have now to see it. I would like to know the difference between gambling and theatrical performances inside or outside the Church, unless we would call that of the Church holy gambling, and a religious theatre, whilst that outside the Church is looked upon as unholy and even sinful. It seems to me, on looking at things as they are carried on, and are getting popular in the different Churches, that the devil is on a fair way of getting ahead of the so-called religious world. If I am wrong I am willing to be convinced, but there be "thus saith the Lord" in favor of holy gambling.

The original intention was that the soil of the Church should be kept pure, and the devil kept his own ground on which to carry on his works to which it is generally acknowledged that gambling belongs, theatres and such like not excepted. To such places then, it was a clear case that devoted Christians should not go. Here, then, were many, whom the enemy could not induce to take part in the work, in opposition to true religion, because they could not be persuaded to go where he had his work on his own ground outside of the Church. But now he (the enemy) has learned a new game, and it seems to work well. He has moved his base of operations right into the Church, and here carries on gambling to get money out of the people by the hundreds of dollars, for which they have no real value, but are, if I may use the expression, religiously cheated out of it. But then, of course, if any good Christian should become uneasy thinking such carrying on is perhaps wrong, the answer is always ready—"it is for a good cause, we are raising money for the Church; we must get money the best way we can, and, in order to get people interested, we must have some innocent amusements; yes, it would be bad if the Church could not beat the world in drawing people unsuspected, and to get in right, we must have some chances to win, for which they must pay well, and have fifty chances to lose, to one chance to win, which, of course would be downright gambling, if not swindling, outside the Church—but this is for a good cause. When we have the money we need, and a church built or fitted out in a better style, then we will serve the Lord.—"There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." Prn. xiv. 12.

PUNCTURM.

For the COMPANION.

"For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all."—James.

Dear brethren and sisters in the Lord, have you ever reflected upon this passage of scripture which is now before us? How necessary it is for us to examine ourselves, and see whether we are obeying all the commandments. If we are not, let us abstain from that which is not in union with the gospel; and let us not think this or that is not essential. Remember that our Lord and his apostles have written just enough, and all that they have written is required of us. In Revelations we find, "If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book; and if any man shall take away the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book." Dear reader, how can man then say it is not for our salvation' but an outward form?

Brethren, let us be faithful and not get discouraged on our way to zion, where sickness and sorrow never shall enter and where no farewell tear is shed. HENRY STICKLEY.

TRUE LIFE.—The mere lapse of years is not life. To eat and drink and sleep, to be exposed to hardness and light, to pace round in the mill of habit, and turn the thought into an implement of trade—that is not life. In all this but a poor fraction of the consciousness of humanity is awakened, and the sanctities will slumber which make it worth while to be. Knowledge, truth, love, beauty, goodness, faith alone can give vitality to the mechanism of existence. The laugh of mirth that vibrates through the heart; the tears that freshen the dry waters within; the music that brings childhood back, the prayer that calls the future near; the doubt which makes us meditate; the death which startles us with mystery; the hardship which forces us to struggle; the anxiety that ends in trust, are the true nourishment of our natural being.—Martineau.

Charity.

Happy is the man who has sown in his breast the seeds of charity and love. The fountain of his heart-streams overflows for the benefit of mankind. He assists the poor in their trouble; he rejoices in promoting the wellfare of all men. He does not harshly censure his neighbor; he believes not the tales of envy and malevolence. He forgives the injuries of men; he wipes them from his remembrance; revenge and malice have no place in his heart. For evil he returns not evil; he hates not even his enemies, but requites their injustice with friendly admonition. The griefs and anxieties of men excite his companion; he endeavors to alleviate the weight of their misfortunes; and the pleasure of success rewards his labor. He calms the fury, he heals the quarels of angry men; and prevents the mischiefs of strife and animosity. He promotes in his neighbood peace and good will; and his name is repeated with prayer and benedictions. JOHN H. JUDY.

Cure for Burns.

A correspondent writes to inform the New York Sun that the readiest and most useful remedy for scalds and burns is an embrocation of lime water and linseed oil. These simple agents combined form a thick, cream-like substance, which effectually excludes the air from the injured parts, and allows the inflamation almost instantly. He mentions a case where a child fell backward into a bath tub of boiling water, and was nearly flayed from her neck to below her hips. Her agonies were indescribable: but her clothing being gently removed, and the lime and oil thickly spread over the injured surface, she was sound asleep in five minutes. Subsequently the parts were carefully washed with warm milk and water three times a day, the oil dressing renewed, and the little patient rapidly recovered. Though all the scalded skin come off, she did not have a scar. This remedy leaves no hard coat to dry on the sores, but softens the parts, and aids nature to repair the injury in the readiest and most expeditious manner. The mixture may be procured in the drug stores; but if not thus accessible, slake a lump of quicklime in water, and as the water is clear mix it with the oil and shake well. If the case is urgent, use boiling water over the lime, and it will become clear in five minutes. The preparation may be kept ready bottled in the house, and it will be as good when six months old as when first made.

Visits.

Within the last two months we have had a number of visits which should have been noticed in these columns, but for want of time, and on account of absence from the sanctum.

Brethren Trostle and Brown have spoken for themselves. We enjoyed their company very much.

Brother Jos. J. Cover of Fayette county made several flying visits to this place, but never remained long enough to give us a meeting. He called at the office and gave us a word of good cheer, and left his promise for a longer visit.

Brother John Wise, of Washington county, was with us lately, and preached for us four times, twice here and twice at Salisbury. His sermons did us good, and we trust made lasting impressions on others. If those Iowa Brethren knew how badly brother Wise is needed in the Western District of Pennsylvania, we think they would desist in their efforts to take him away from us; unless they are quite sure that they need him still more badly.

Brother John Johnson of Fayette county, passed by this way, and gave us a call, and preached for the Brethren at Salisbury. We did not hear him preach, but enjoyed him in conversation.

Brother Joseph B. Sell of the Duncansville congregation, Blair county, was with us on a business visit, looking out for a location. He found ready employment, at fair wages, and would have moved forthwith, had he been as successful in securing a house to live in. Owing to the great influx of families, houses are so scarce that many families cannot secure homes. Our citizens who have the means should not suffer this state of affairs long. They should secure lots and build houses for rent. It would pay them well at the rents which are readily obtained.

We also had a number of calls from miscellaneous visitors from the West, who were spending the winter among their friends here and elsewhere. We were glad to have them come to see us, and shall hereafter endeavor to keep a record of strangers who visit us and make themselves acquainted.

Pious Youth Department.

Brother D. B. Mentzer asks, "Could you not open a department in the C F. C. with the heading "Pious Youth?" We shall be pleased to open such a department, and invite brother Mentzer and all the contributors of the Pious Youth to contribute to it. And when this department becomes so interesting, and will be well supported by contributions and patronage, as to tresspass upon the columns of the COMPANION, then perhaps it would be safe to venture out again under our banner.

On Time.

We are about on time once more, and hope it will be a long while before we will again be called upon to endure a blockade like one just removed. "Fortune favors the brave," is an old adage; but it is sometimes very slow coming. It is in our case.

Back Numbers.

TWO HUNDRED SUBCRIBERS WANTED!

Expecting a large increase to our subscription list we prepared for it by printing a number of copies more than were actually needed, in order to be able to furnish back numbers. Now there are about two hundred still remaining on our hands; and we must soon cut down the issue to our actual list. Before doing so we make this appeal to our friends. Will not one out of every twenty of our friends send us a new subscriber who will take the back numbers of the present volume? Please make the effort friends. (tf.)

Apprentices Wanted.

We wish to secure several apprentices to the printing business. They may be either male or female, of the ages of 16 to 18. Members of the church preferred, and none but those friendly to the church need apply. (tf.)

Papers Wanted.

We are short of No. 48 of last year (Vol. 7) for our files. In endeavoring to give the remaining numbers of last year to new subscribers, we run ourselves so short that we are now suffering a severe loss. Will not some of those who may have that No. in good order, and yet not have the full volume, let us have several copies of said number. We cannot have the volume bound until we secure them.

The Phrenological Journal.

The Phrenological Journal for March has been received. Its contents more than confirm our high opinion of the magazine's character. The very instructive articles on "Fish Culture in America," and "Ague and Fever" are alone worth more than a year's subscription. But besides these there is a long list of readable matter. Attorney-General Williams; Expression; Harriet Hosmer; Our Horse-Cars; Will it Pay? Writing for the Press; The Aertic Regions; James Fisk, Jr.; Lord Brougham's Ghost; Rev. George H. Hepworth, etc., with fine portraits and numerous illustrations. Price 30 cts., or $3 a year. S. R. Wells, 389 Broadway, N. Y.

The Journal may be ordered from this office, by our subscribers, for two dollars, cash in advance.

Pi-Hahiroth.

EXODUS 14.

The sea is just before them, and its billows
lave the shore;
Who dares essay to ford it may reach its wreck-strewn floor:
Who proudly seeks to battle with you snow-
crested wave,
May sleep the sleep that knows no waking in some unfathomed cave.
Their faint hearts grow still fainter, their courage dies away:—
"Hast thou brought us out to perish? We are surely lost to-day!
Were there no graves in Egypt, in which our bones could lie,
That thus to Pi-hahiroth thou broughtest us
to die?
Better far to serve in Egypt than thus to be betrayed—
Said we not, at the beginning, it were better to have stayed?

Thus Israel spake to Moses, but the man of God replied:—
"Fear not, deliverance cometh; the Lord is on your side.
Stand still—see the salvation your God will work this day;
The face of your pursuers ye shall see no more for aye."
Then God's command is given, as the Hebrews trembling stand:—
"Speak to them, that they go forward; and thou with rod in hand,
Stretch thine arm above the waters and bid
the sea divide,
And the waves shall part asunder—a wall
on either side;
My people shall pass over, and I will honored be;
The foe shall sleep beneath the deep, and Israel be free."

So Israel went forward, and Moses took his rod,
And the waters were divided, and Israel passed "dry-shod;"
The fiery pillar followed, throwing light upon their way,
While shades of midnight darkess on the path behind them lay.
The Egyptians boldly follow—little reck
they of their doom—
A greater than Osiric is pavilioned in the gloom;
Jehovah is EL-SHADDAI,* and hath uttered
the decree:—
"To me earth's proudest monarch shall humbly bow the knee."
He who parts the sea's deep waters and ruleth Nile's strange tide
Hath power that none resisteth, a voice none may deride.

Onward, flushed with hope of triumph, the hosts of Egypt rode—Onward to the very centre of the path so late o'erflowed.
And then Jehovah's right arm for Israel was made bare,
Pharaoh's host were sorely troubled, fear came upon them there;
Their chariot wheels were loosened, the horsemen were dismayed,
The stontest hearts were quailing, the bravest were afraid.
"Let us flee," they cry, "from Israel, for God is on their side;
Jehovah is against us—can we breast a turning tide?
Let us fly before we perish, lest all too late
we know
The sea that hath such ebbing hath still more wondrous flow."

The Hebrews safe are landed, and their leader takes his rod,
Faith extends it o'er the waters, and they hear the voice of God:
Deep unto deep gives answer as wave embraces wave—
Israel's wondrous path of safety is Pharaoh's unmarked grave
The billows join together, intermingling far beneath,
While foam and spray dash far away in snowy veil and wreath;
The ebb t de tells the story of the flood-tide's fearful power,
When the slow retreating waters with wrecks skirt all the shore.
The Lord hath given answer, in the thunders of his word,
To Pharaoh's haughty question:—"Who is the Hebrews' Lord?"

Pi-hahiroth beareth witness to God's resistless might,
And stamps, with God's own seal of truth,
the majesty of RIGHT!
In many a house of bondage God's children
toil to-day,
While their hearts are growing weary through the hardness of the way;
A greater Guide than Moses points to a land more fair
Than Canaan, with its olives and vines and fruitage rare;
But the flood is rolling proudly, and enemies are near—
Faith and trust give way to doubting, and hope gives place to fear.
"Speak to them, that they go forward," is Jehovah's mandate still,
And the key of secret purpose is obedience to his will.

Remember, O ye doubters, the Red Sea's hidden way—
The victory and the triumph are yours when ye obey
And your glad thanksgiving anthem, grander far than Hebrew Psalm,
Beyond the tide shall echo wide, "Salvation to the Lamb!"

*"The Almighty God" (Gen. 17: 1.)

For the COMPANION.

Personal Acquaintance of John the Baptist and Christ.

In COMPANION number 6, brother Worst has an article in which occurs this sentence: "From our observations of the scriptures we are led to believe that John and Christ were not personally acquainted before his baptism." Now we think just the reverse of that, and with your permission will give our reasons for our belief.

After the Annunciation. Mary hastens to bear the glad tidings to her cousin Elizabeth, and they rejoice together, Elizabeth exclaiming, "Whence is this to me, that the mother of my Lord should come to me." They rejoice together before the birth of the children; how natural, that, after they were born, the mothers of these sons of prophecy, whose birth was announced to their parents by the angel Gabriel, should be anxious, each to see the child of the other, and to bring them together. We imagine more than one journey was made between Nazareth and Hebron.

Although Jesus was raised in Galilee and John in Judea, yet they would have had frequent opportunities of meeting each other at the yearly feasts at Jerusalem. We know that Jesus went with his parents to the Passover when he was twelve years of age,—and we know his parents went every year.

In the 3 i chapter of Matthew we read, "Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him.—But John forbade him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?" Now how could he have said, "I have need to be baptized of thee," if he had not known him personally? Surely he was acquainted with his holy life and character—knew him by personal intercourse, to be a better man than he himself was; and therefore he felt unworthy to baptize so good a person.

John said to his disciple: "There standeth one among you whom ye know not": neither did he know him; that is, he knew him not as the Christ. He says, "And I knew him not, but he that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending and remaining on him, the same is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost." John knew that the Messiah walked among them; but he waited for the sign that was to reveal him. That sign he received after he had baptized Jesus. Then he knew that his brother-friend was also his Savior, and he could boldly cry: "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."

Now we think we have given scripture to prove that John was personally acquainted with the Savior before this baptism; but we are fully aware how liable we are to err in our interpretations of scripture; and if you, brother Holsinger, should differ from us, as well as brother Worst, or think that we have wrested the scripture, perhaps you had better not give this to the readers of the COMPANION. You know we are prone to hide our responsibility behind your better judgment. E. WILLIAMS.

THOUGHTS KNOWN TO GOD.—The thoughts of man's heart—what millions are there of them in a day! The twinkling of the eye is not so sudden a thing as the thinking of a thought; yet those thousands of thoughts which pass from thee, that thou canst not reckon, they are all known to God.

EVERY man is ready to give a good catalogue of the virtues and long qualities he expects to find in the person of a friend, but a very few of us are careful of them in ourselves.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Brother Holsinger:—I noticed in COMPANION, number seven, present volume, a eulogizing notice of John L. Forney, to which I can subscribe to every word contained in said notice, with the exception of the disposition of his property. That is to say after all his just and lawful debts are paid, what remains is to be paid over into the hands of Elder James Quinter, to be used by the said Quinter "for disseminating the gospel in publishing and distributing tracts," and not preaching as is reported by some, and as the writer was called to write brother Forney's last will, and am now as good as charged not to have understood him in regard to this part of his will as reported, which has even reached the ears of our Editor of COMPANION, and is now published to the world as such, I feel like making the following full explanation for my own justification, and the satisfaction of others, that what is writen in that instrument is nothing less, nor anything more, than the motive impulse of his heart as it actuated him to dictate. After the will was properly headed I remarked to him, "If it is not asking too much from you please give it to us in your own language," and he did so. All then I had to do was merely to record it as it fell from his lips, word for word, and letter for letter, and for fear of making mistakes, we read it again so that if anything would have been recorded contrary to his last will he certainly would have objected to the same. His last will and testament may fairly be called his last and own composition. In order to relieve my own mind. I felt like making the above explanation through this medium.

W. G. SCHROCK.

Berlin, Pa.

Dear Brother Henry:—I feel to express my feeling in a few words, if God grants me grace. I am young in years and in religion, and often come short of the promise I made; but, with the help of God, I will try to travel on in all his appointed ways as long as he gives me breath.

Dear brethren, if we would always do as we read in the scripture—be a light to the world, and a salt to the earth, I believe many people would repent and turn from death to life. O my dear young brethren and sisters, I often think if we would live right near to our God, we perhaps might induce many of our comrades to repent. But if we dress up in the style of the world, and laugh, and talk only of earthly things when we come together, we are no light to the world, neither a salt to the earth. My prayer is that we give ourselves into the hands of our Lord, and take upon us his yoke, and learn of him, for he is meek and lowly in heart, and we shall find rest unto our souls. His yoke is easy; and his burden is light." Remember me in your prayers. From your unworthy brother.

ISAAC W. WHITMER.

Brother Henry:—A sorrowful circumstance occurred in our neighborhood. Eliza Watkins, married to John Watkins, living in Johnstown came home to her parents, William Barefoot's, on a visit, and shortly after she came home she took sick. Her oldest child, about two years old, took sick about the same time. They soon got very bad, and Eliza became alarmed about her soul's salvation, and sent for the Methodist preacher. On entering the house he feared it was small pox. Being afraid he refused to talk to her, but told her father that he should talk to her and pray for her as well as he could, and went home. They soon found out that it was the small pox, and in spite of all medical aid, both continued growing worse, and on the 9th of February the child died. And here comes the most painful thought, that the family, in a Christian land like this, had to bury it without the aid of one neighbor.

On the 11th the mother died. Arrangements were then made to bury her in the evening of the same day. At 5 o'clock the cabinet-maker took the coffin to the barn, unloaded it and went home. Some of the neighbors dug the grave at which place there was a small crowd gathered, until they saw the family come with the corpse when they moved away some ten or fifteen rods. Among them was a brother to the deceased who had not seen her after she had got sick, and on account of the terrible disease was afraid to see her put into the grave. The husband, father and young brother let her into the grave, then went away and some of the neighbors went back and covered it.

There never was any small pox in this end of Bedford county, and up to the time of writing (the 17th) there have been no more cases, and we hope and pray there may be no more.

C. S. HOLSINGER.

Alum Bank, Pa.

Dear Brother:—Perhaps a few thoughts from your unworthy correspondent, once more would not be amiss. I am deprived of the privilege to-day of attending meeting, on account of sickness, my companion took a serious spell of the cramp colic this morning at the breakfast table; is some better.

To-day brother Samuel Garber preaches his farewell address to our congregation, called the Desmoines Valley church, He intends to move to Hardin county, this State, as his ministerial labors are much more needed there than here, there being a supply of ministers in this arm of the church. May success and prosperity go with him, spiritually and temporally.

As this note may come under the observation of dear members in Illinois, whom we left about one year ago, I will say, we heard you had a great many meetings this winter by brethren from a distance. We hope you have been much encouraged in the Christian warfare to run with more patience the race set before us, and earnestly contending for the faith of the saint. We have had no extra meetings of brethren from a distance this winter. Brethren coming west we invite to stop with us. We live near the railroad, on the main thoroughfare from Chicago to Council Bluffs and California. We are much pleased with this part of Iowa. So far the health and climate are very good; the soil is rich and abounding in fertility. The society is also good There are about one hundred members in this arm of the church, scattered over this county, some in Jasper and some in Marion, and a few in Warren county.

J. W. MOATS.

Brother Holsinger:—The following article is clipped from the Philadelphia Post, of the 14th inst Please give it a place in the COMPANION, for it is well that the Brethren should know what the "woman sitting on the scarlet colored beast," is deign to break down free education, as promoted by the Common-school system, and upon its ruins build up her own false doctrines and despotic power, in sectarian seminaries.

The following are a few of the reasons which might be given why the Brethren should, in the interest of their posterity, and, above all, in the interest of the pure and unadulterated truths of the Gospel, use every means in their power to encourage and foster our Common-school system; and thus prevent the consummation sought by "the mother of horlots."

1st. The Common-school system is capable of expansion, so as to impart of life, both temporal and spiritual.

2nd. The benefits are intended alike for rich and poor, and:—

3d. What is of incalculable importance—it is the duty of every teacher, at least in the public schools of Pennsylvania, to read the scriptures, or cause them to be read, to his or her scholars, without sectarian comments.

SILAS THOMAS.

Philadelphia, Pa.

CHURCH AND STATE.

The question of appropriations of the public money by the Tammany Ring, in the city of New York, for sectarian purposes has occupied considerable public attention, and has been made a subject of investigation by the Committee on Political Reforms of Union League. This report was read to a meeting of the League on Thursday evening last, and reviews the appropriations in detail for the years 1870 and 1871. The appropriations to the various religious sects for these three years presents a grand aggregate of $1,725,702.15, of which the Roman Catholic Church alone recieved $1,396,388.51, about 80 per cent. of the gross amount. The great bulk of this large sum was devoted to the support or parochial schools and various brotherhoods and sisterhoods peculiar to the Roman Church.

In looking over the list of appropriations for 1869 we find the Catholic Pretectory received $98,009.36, House of Good Shepperd $40,000, Convent of the Sacred Heart $10,000, Sisters of St. Dominic $15,000. In 1870 the Protectory baggaged $113,252.92 of the public funds, and in 1871 it did better still, receiving $178,856.43. During the same period, in addition to receiving this large sum in cash, the same church has been presented with valuable lands and buildings, and apropriations made in several instances to pay the accrued taxes. The report, in calling attention to this alarming state of affairs, dwells particularly on this system of parochial schools introduced by the Roman Church, and agues that it is not only unnecessary in this country, but dangerous to the continuance of religious toleration. The report says:

In our country, where every citizen has a vote in the government, self-preservation requires the civil power to take care that education is universal. Hence the American doctrine that the property of the State shall pay the cost of educating the youth of the State. The method adopted is the system of free common schools. They are supported at public expense in every locality where there are children of the school age. The civil authorities prescribe a course of study and discipline free from sectarian bias, so that the youth of all sects may meet on this neutral ground and qualify themselves for useful citizens.

In the city of New York the public school houses are educational palaces—large, comfortable, healthful, well provided with apparatus, teachers and text books; judiciously located near to the houses of the children and with room for all. The parent has only to deliver his child, washed and clothed, at the friendly door of the school house, and he has everything necessary to enable him to acquire a good common school education furnished him free of cost. The child of the poorest laborer and that of the richest merchant stand upon the same level in this great and benificent republican nursery. Our common schools make excellent citizens of a free and tolerant republic, and furnish everything the sectarian schools do, except the single item of sectarian religious instructions. This should be received in the family or in the church of the sect, not in a school supported by public money.

But a single sect is taught by its head, a foreign and despotic ecclesiastical prince, that the civil authorities in a republic have not a right to control and direct the course of study and the choice and appointment of teachers in the schools open alike to the youth of all classes; but that this right belongs to the Church. Hence this sect makes war upon our schools; persuades its children to leave them; sets up an opposition school wherever it has a church, and admits that it does this solely for the purpose of indoctrinating the young mind with its peculiar sectarian tenets and observances. They then demand, and for the last three years have received, money from the public treasury to pay the expense of thus destroying the public schools and building up their sect. Many of their school rooms are damp basements of churches; so dark that gas has to be used on the brightest day.

In no country where the education of the youth has been left to the Church has it been as well, or as generally or thoroughly performed as when this duty has been assumed by the civil authorities.—Italy, Spain and Mexico are illustrations of the clerical system, and Germany and the States of our country, of the lay or civil system.

Strictly speaking, in a country where the organic law, like ours, proclaims absolute freedom of religion, we have no right to appropriate any of the public money or land to sectarian schools. The legislation that has heretofore permitted it is the entering wedge of a determined effort to destroy our system of free common schools, and upon its ruins to build up a State Church and put the whole subject of education under the control of religious sects.

However excellent a school may be the mere fact that the course of study and choice of teachers are not under the control of the public school authorities, but are under the direction of a sect or sects, should of itself alone wholly exclude it from the public treasury. Let the same authority support it that controls and manages it.

Every child is provided for, and liberally provided for, in the free public schools. If any sect desires its children to leave the public conveyance on the road to knowledge and take a private sectarian coach it cannot honestly object to paying the cost of this sectarian coach itself.

The tables forming part of this report show that a church in this city that counts its blocks of houses and stores by miles and their value at millions, all paying to it, yet, hat in hand, knocks at the door of the city treasury annually for a few dollars in aid of its two charity schools. That church could well afford to support twenty such charity schools out of its own treasury.

We have brought forward these alarming facts in no spirit of hostility to true religion, nor to any church or political party as such, but exclusively in the character of American citizens, and we call upon our fellow citizens, irrespective of sect or party, to oppose, in all lawful ways, taxation, or appropriation of public money or public land for sectarian purposes.

"HOW TO GO WEST."

Forty years ago, Illinois was as far West as most people wished to go, and journeys were made in the legendary "Prairie Schooner," but in these days of Progress and Improvement, the word West has come to mean Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, California, and the Territories, and the Traveler reaches almost any point therein by a splendid Line of Railroad.

This Line of Railroad is the Burlington Route, which starts from Chicago over the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R., from Indianapolis, over the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western Short Line, and from Logansport, over the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw R. Always go "By way of Burlington" and you will be sure to be right.

The Burlington Route has admirably answered the question, "How to go West?" by the publication of a truthful and inter sting document, filled with facts in regard to Time, Connections, Accommodations, rates of Fare and other interesting items and illustrated by a large map, truthfully showing the whole West, which they distribute free of charge. Christian Family Companion.

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Spurgeon on the French and German War.

Charles H. Spurgeon, the eminent Baptist minister of London, closes an address to the Emperor of the French and the King of Prussia, in very plain English. If all ministers of the Gospel would be equally bold and explicit. War would soon cease. He says:

"Did either of you ever think of what war means? Did you ever see a man's head smashed, or his bowels ripped open? Why, if you are made of flesh and blood, the sight of one poor, wounded man, with the blood oozing out of him, will make you feel sick. I do not like to drown a kitten; I can't bear to see a rat die, or any animal in pain. But a man! Where's your hearts, if you can think of broken legs, splintered bones, heads smashed in, brains blown out, bowels torn, hearts gushing with gore, ditches full of blood, and heaps of limbs and carcasses of mangled men? Do you say my language is disgusting? How much more disgusting must the things themselves be? And you make them! How would you like to get a man into your palace-garden and run a carving-knife into his bowels, or cut his throat? If you did that, you would deserve to be hanged, but it would not be half so bad as killing tens of thousands, and you know very well that this is just what you are going to do. Do you fancy that your drums and fifes, and feathers and fineries, and pomp, make your wholesale murder one whit the less abominable in the sight of God? Do not deceive yourselves; you are no better than the cut-throats whom your own laws condemn; better, why you are worse, for your murders are so many. Think, I pray you, for your poor people will have to think, whether you do or no. Is there so little want in the world that you must go trampling on the harvest with your horses and your men? Is there so little sorrow that you must make widows by the thousand. Is death so old and feeble that you must hunt his game for him, as jackals do for the lion? Do you imagine God made men for you to play soldiers with? Are they only meant for toys for you to break? O, kings, their souls are as precious in God's sight as yours; they suffer as much pain when bullets pierce them as ever you can do; they have homes, and mothers, and sisters, and their deaths will be as much wept over as yours, perhaps more. It will be hard for you to think of the blood you have shed when you lie dying, and harder still to bear the heavy hand of God when he shall cast all murderers into hell. Have pity upon your fellow-men. Do not cut them with swords, tear them with bayonets, blow them to pieces with cannon, and riddle them with shots. What good will it do you? What have the poor men done to deserve it of you? You fight for glory, do you? I am a plain-talking Englishman, and I tell you the English for glory is DAMNATION, and it will be your lot, O kings, if you go on cutting and hacking your fellow-men. Stop this war if you can, at once, and turn to some better business than killing men. Before the deep curses of widows and orphans fall on you from the throne of God, put up your butcher-knives and patent men-killers, and repent."—Messenger of Peace.

The Coming of Christ.

"Therefore be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh." Matth. 24: 44.

Be ready for the coming of your Lord, in whatever way he may come: whether he come by the pale messenger—Death, or by his personal coming. How often the words of our selection come to our mind, when we hear of some friend or neighbor being called from time into eternity and we hear of men being called to try the realities of an eternal world without a moments warning. How brittle is the thread of life; how soon it may be broken! We are at best but as the "grass of the field, which to-day is and to-morrow is cut down and cast into the oven." Our life here is but "as a vapor, which appeareth for a little while, and then vanishes away." Soon we must all pass away; we have no continuing city here. A solemn thought! Perhaps ere the close of the year eighteen hun dred and seventy-two your unworthy writer will be numbered with the pale nations of the dead. Perhaps, dear reader, it will be your turn. For aught we know, we may never see another new year. O brethren and sisters, and kind readers, whoever you may be, seeing how uncertain life is, and seeing we must soon all pass the gloomy vale, does it not behoove us to look well to our eternal interests? Let us individually examine our cases by God's revealed will, and see how the account stands with us, see whether we are ready for the coming of the Son of God. If the Master of solemn assemblies were to make his appearance to-day, are we ready? Have we on "a wedding garment?"

And he may not only make his appearance at death, but it is the opinion of many that the time is drawing very nigh when he will call forth the sleeping "Saints," and the just, living, will be caught up to meet the Lord in the air. Let us beware of the Siren that says, "My Lord delayeth his coming." But let us be prepared for his coming, though it will be as a thief in the night—sudden and unexpected to the world. Let me say to the careless, Awake, O careless soul! Shake off your carnal slumbers; nor indulge the false hope of security, whilst you slumber or in the embrace of the world. Your dream of worldly glory will soon end; the treasures you are heaping together will perish with you. Pleasure lulls you in her lap to rest; but ah! it is death to slumber there. Oh! I beseech you, no longer procrastinate, but without delay seek of Jesus the necessary preparations to meet him, that you may be able to stand in the great day of his wrath.

And now brethren and sisters, let us not forget the "assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is." Alas! for many, their love has grown cold. Amid the abounding of iniquity, self-gratification are their leading motives. Let us not imitate their example, for it is pernicious. Their end is destruction. Let us be warned and "exhort one another so much the more as we see the day approaching." We can not tell when our Lord will appear; but we see indications of his approach, and the fulfilment of prophecy. May the Lord help us all to be ready for his return, so that we may be admitted into the marriage supper of the Lamb, is the prayer of your unworthy writer.

The Author of Sin.

Some tell us that sin was brought into the world by the foreordination of God; that he foreknew that the devil would tempt the man whom he created, and that man would yield to his enticing influence; and because he foreknew these things, they were foreordained by him. At first sight this manner of reasoning seems to be logical; but by a close examination into this matter we find it is not in harmony with the teachings of the Bible. Because God knew a thing does not prove that it was determined by him; hence we take the ground that the foreknowledge of God does not, and will not, prove foreordination. We cannot believe that God brought sin into the world, or that he is the author of sin. For many reasons we cannot believe this. The nature of our heavenly Father is clearly taught in the Bible; and there is no Bible reader who would suppose, for a moment, that God would rob man of that happiness in which he was created, and plunge him into sin, pain, and death, where there was no eye to pity, no arm to save, only his begotten Son, who came into the world to die for what God fore-ordained should be done. Ah! did the eternal Father delight in the death of his Son, when everything in nature seemed to mourn on the day of that awful event? We understand Christ came into the world to destroy the works of the devil, and to die for the sin of the world—the original sin, perpetrated in Eden's garden, by the devil, through the wisdom of the subtile serpent. This is what our Savior came into the world to do, and not to destroy his Father's works. The serpent was the sole agent of sin, acting under the direction of old Satin; and therefore the devil is the author of all sin, it matters not what. Those who believe differently are either Universalists or Restorationists; for if God fore-ordained all things, there is nothing done under the sun without his approbation. According to this theory, what I have written was before ordained then it must be, so don't fall out with me.

Pride in Dress.

"We should deny ourselves all needless ornaments. Here we begin to tread upon delicate ground; for there are many in these days of refinement, who think that it is not only unnecessary for ministers to discuss such subjects as that of dress in the pulpit, but that it is letting themselves down below the dignity of the sacred office! What a misfortune it is then, that such wise people did not live in the days of the prophets and apostles; for they had no more judgment than to declaim frequently, pointedly, and powerfully, against vain superfluities of all kind! Thus, Isaiah said, "Moreover the Lord saith, Because the daughters of Zion are haughty, and walk with stretched forth necks and wanton eyes, walking and mincing as they go, and making a tinkling with their feet: therefore the Lord will smite with a scab the crown of the head of the daughters of Zion, and Jehovah will expose their nakedness. In that day the Lord will take away the bravery of their tinkling ornaments about their feet, and their cauls, and their round tires like the moon, the chains, and the bracelets, and the mufflers, the bonnets, and the ornaments of the legs, and the head-bands, and the tablets, and the ear-rings, the rings, and nose-jewels, the changeable suits of apparel, and the mantles, and the wimples, and the crisping-pins, the glasses, and the fine linen, and the hoods, and the vails. And it shall come to pass, that instead of perfume a putrid ulcer, and instead of a girdle a rent; and instead of well set hair baldness; and instead of a stomacher a girdling of sackcloth: and a sun burnt skin instead of beauty." (See Benson's translation.) Also, Paul said to Timothy, "In like manner also, that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array, but (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works." And again, Peter said, "Whose adorning let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel; but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price."

These quotations may serve to show, that if ministers are degraded by condemning superfluities, they are still in honorable company,—that of the prophets and apostles; and that whoever indulges in any superfluous ornaments, displeases God, for he as pointedly forbids them as he does any thing else. "But," says one, "we can well afford it; for we deal with our own money, buy what we want, and pay for all we get." And how does it come to pass, that you are in such easy circumstances? By whose providence are you thus favored with plenty? "What hast thou that thou hast not received?" We wish you to consider, our respected hearers, that you are stewards of God in these matters, and that all you have is only lent to you by him, which he can take away at any time. And what does he require you to do with the capital he has intrusted you with? After retaining enough to carry on necessary business, and supply the reasonable wants of yourselves and families, to give the balance, much or little, to aid the cause of piety, and the cause of humanity; and thus "mark to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, that when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations." We ask then, can you afford to take the Lord's money intrusted with you for these noble objects, and apply to another and an opposite use, by indulging in superfluities? Can you, especially, who are professors of religion, afford to break the rules of the Church, the precept of the Gospel, and inflict deep wounds on the pious feelings of your brethren? Can any one afford to offend God knowingly; Or can any people afford to injure themselves? We would ask, respectfully, if that young female can afford to environ her delicate frame with that engine of death, which now presents her in a distorted form, deprives her of free respiration, and is laying the foundation of a fatal decline of health? Or can that fashionable young man afford to contract his waist with a girdle, until he is both deformed and helpless? In a word, can any of us afford to cultivate in our hearts the most foolish, most troublesome, most hateful, and most self-destructive of all passions? We mean pride.

But the people say, "These things do not make us proud." What things? Superfluous ornaments. This, we think, is a mistake; for pride is a principle capable of being excited by a mere trifle; and the smaller the consideration, the more contemptible the passion appears; thus, he who is proud of a watch key, is more silly than he who is proud of a stately edifice. However, we will suppose, for the sake of argument, that these things do not increase our pride; yet they are the certain proofs that we are proud. If I see a horse in the commons with a yoke on, my natural conclusion is, that horse is a rogue. "But," say you, "having a yoke on, does not make him a rogue." True, I answer, yet if he was not a rogue, he would not have it on. In like manner, superfluous ornaments, some say, do not make them proud. Be it so: but if they were not proud, they would not have them on. It will not be contended, that they make us cooler in the summer, or warmer in the winter; that they make us wiser, better, more wealthy, or useful. But are we to allow of improvements, no changes of fashion in dress? Certainly, we are.—Any change for economy, comfort, convenience, or plainness, is admissible. But is it not a fact, that many of the most expensive fashions do not, and indeed cannot, answer any purpose but to gratify our vanity? Suffer us to call some of them by names, as specimens of the whole: A gold ring on the finger, or hung to the ear; a gold breast-pin or guard-chain; a gold headed staff; an artificial flower on the bonnet; a string of gold beads hung round the neck; a large bunch of some dead person's hair hung on the side of the face; a feathered headdress, so frightful as to remind us of the monster in the revelation with seven heads and ten horns. Were these follies confined wholly to people of the world, "dead in trespasses and in sins," we would feel less zealous in our opposition to them. But how unsuitable, trifling, and sinful it is, for persons to indulge in them, who, as disciples of Christ, should be dead to the world, always bearing about in their bodies the dying of the Lord Jesus; not conformed to the world, but glorying in the cross of Christ: and more especially our Methodist brethren and sisters, who have been better instructed on the subject. They offend with their eyes open, knowing that God forbids the wearing of gold and costly array, as plainly as he forbids any sin."—THOS. A. MORRIS.

To Whom it may Concern.

Brother Henry:—I notice in Art. 37 of the minutes of last Annual Meeting, relating to "the subject of Feet-washing in its single and double mode," a request for "all the ordained Elders of the Brotherhood to meet together as the Apostles and Elders did to consider circumcision." Acts, 15: 6. Now inasmuch as the ordained Elders are especially asked to be there on Whit Monday to dispose of this question as the peace and prosperity of the Fraternity requires, would it not be adviseable for the Elders of every district to take the expressions of the members at home, and then, with that expression repair to the place of meeting. It seems that, if this is not done, it might gender more strife than good. I don't think it good to have the bishopric to have unlimited sway. Furthermore, I notice in the council on circumcision that the Apostles, Elders and brethren were consulted, and unitedly sent their greetings in that case. See Acts, 15: 23. So we would do if by counceling at home first. I would write more but this may suffice for the present. C. G. LINT.

The Lost Sheep.

There were ninety and nine that safely lay
In the shelter of the fold;
And one was out on the hills away,
Far off from the gates of gold;
Away on the mountains wild and bare—
Away from the tender Shepherd's care.

"Lord, thou hast here the ninety and nine—
Are they not enough for thee?"
But the Shepherd made answer, "This of mine
Has wandered away from me:
And, although the roads be rough and steep,
I go to the desert to find my sheep."

But none of the ransomed ever knew
How deep the waters crossed;
Nor how dark the night that the Lord passed through,
Ere he found the sheep that was lost.
Out in the desert he heard its cry,
Sick, and helpless, and ready to die.

"Lord, whence are those blood-drops all the way
That mark on the mountain's track?"
"They were shed for one who had gone astray Ere the Shepherd could bring him back."
"Lord whence are thy hands so rent and torn?"
"They were pierced to-night by many a thorn."

And all through the mountains, tempest-riven,
And up from the rocky steep,
There rose a cry to the gates of heaven,
"Rejoice, I have found my sheep!"
And the angels echoed around the throne,
"Rejoice, for the Lord brings back his own."

Infant Baptism — Unnecessary and Unscriptural.

Baptism is an appointment of Jesus Christ, which he instituted, not for himself, but for the moral and spiritual benefit and salvation of man. It is therefore a matter of no little importance that we know who are lawful and proper subjects for baptism; and as infant baptism is practiced by not a few who profess to follow Christ in all his appointments, it becomes the sincere seeker after truth to examine the subject Believing as we do, that it is unnecessary and unscriptural, we shall try and give our reasons for believing so.

First, We claim that infant baptism is unnecessary, from the language of our Savior where he says, "Suffer little children to come unto me * * * for of such is the kingdom of God." This language evidently means that infants belong to the kingdom of God, and are where God wants them—where Jesus placed them, not by baptizing them, but by virtue of his shed blood, and suffering on the cross, and are as dear and as near to our Savior as any Christian in this world who uses all the means of grace. Indeed Christ could not have placed little children nearer heaven than He did, to leave them in this world at all; and that without being baptized. "He took them up in his arms and put his hands on them and blessed them," (not baptized them.) Baptism was not necessary for them or Christ would have said so. If then, infants belong to the family of God, or kingdom of God, and are no sinners; and if they die in infancy, are saved, where is the advantage or necessity of baptizing them? It does not add to their enjoyment or happiness in this world, neither secure to them any higher enjoyment or brighter glory in heaven. That God would make any difference in heaven, or even on earth, between baptized and unbaptized infants, is hard to suppose. The idea that God would doom infants to everlasting death and destruction because they were not baptized, not many can entertain; from the fact that such an idea does not agree with the spirit and gospel of Christ, which is evidence that it is not necessary; and the fact that it is not necessary, is evidence that it is not scriptural, and not an institution of Christ. Christ instituted nothing that is unnecessary or non-essential.

Infant baptism is unscriptural, because there is no scripture for it. There is no example or instance in Holy Writ of its performance or of its ever having been enjoined. From all the teaching and instituting that Christ did we cannot gather the least intimation of such a command or institution. Christ is therefore not the author of infant baptism. It is unscriptural—outside of the Gospel, and must therefore be an invention of man. It was instituted by such men as the Saviour alludes to, where he says, "But in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrine the commandments of men."

Again, our Savior's parable of the Prodigal Son throws much light on this subject. It is admitted by almost all, that the younger son in this parable represents the sinner, and the father represents God our heavenly Father, and the house represents the family and kingdom of God. Having these facts before us, let us see. The younger son represents the sinner; in his wandering away, the impenitent, and in his returning the penitent sinner. Now it is admitted by all, even by those who practice infant baptism, that baptism is the ordinance in which we are initiated into the church. In baptism we put on Christ. The prodigal before he left his father's house was a son, a legal heir; but by wandering away he forfeited that right—became a stranger. So the sinner while in infancy is a son, legal heir to the kingdom of God. But when he grows up, and becomes capable of knowing good from evil, he chooses evil, wanders away, and by transgression forfeits his right to the kingdom, and becomes a sinner. It is said after the prodigal come to himself he returned to his father, and into the same house from which he had strayed away, in which he had been a member—a son—a legal heir; but he felt unworthy to be called a son, saying, "Make me as one of thy hired servants;" "I have sinned." So the truly penitent sinner, when he comes to himself, makes his return to God, his heavenly Father, and says "Father, I have sinned, I am no longer worthy to be called thy son; make me as one of thy servants. Oh, Father, forgive—be merciful to me a sinner! I confess all; I am now ready to covenant to be a faithful servant in thy house (or vineyard) until death." Such an one is a legal subject for baptism, and never before. By baptism he is initiated into the church militant, in which he has the promise of the remission of sins, and becomes a servant in the house of the Lord; having complied with the prerequisites, faith and repentance, and upon the condition that he be a faithful servant until death, is, in baptism, made an adopted child of the kingdom of God, to which he belonged while in his infancy. "For of such (that is infants) is the kingdom of God." The Savior said not, "will be the kingdom of God."

It may be said by some, that the house spoken of in the parable represents not the family and kingdom of God as we above stated, but that it represents the church militant only. Well were this so it would not be any evidence for infant baptism. That the prodigal in his infancy was a son and a legal member of his father's house no one doubts. If then the house represents the church militant only, the sinner in his infantile state is a lawful and legal member of the church militant.—Why then baptize him to initiate him into the church, if already a legal member. This at once shows the absurdity of infant baptism. But we however claim that all who were under the control and jurisdiction which constituted the father's house in the parable represented more than the church militant only. We claim that every member of the church militant should be a working member, a servant in the house or vineyard of God; whilst infants belong to the kingdom of God, but not to the church militant. And as the prodigal in his wandering away in transgression represents the willful sinner, before he transgressed and wandered away into sin represents him in his infancy, and after his return desires no more than to be a servant, so the sinner, when he comes with faith and repentance, and is baptized, thereby is initiated into the church militant, becomes a servant, and must use all the means instituted for him; and upon the condition that he be a faithful servant until death, shall be an heir. So in our infancy we belong to the kingdom of God; but after we leave our infantile state and go into sin, we can no more belong to the kingdom of God; but by being lawfully initiated by baptism into the church militant, are we visible members of the church, and spiritual subjects of the kingdom of God, where we were in our infancy. Hence the church militant is represented by the servants alluded to in the parable.

Now if our exposition of the parable be correct, we thus find infant baptism unnecessary and unscriptural. Still many more and stronger evidences may be adduced from the Gospel to disprove the validity of infant baptism. The gospel is our only guide; and the gospel requires faith and repentance to precede baptism. Infant baptism must in every sense, be the reverse. The gospel says, "If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest be baptized;" infant baptism says, "though thou believest not, nor can'st believe, thou must be baptized." The gospel says, "Be baptized every one of you * * * for the remission of sins." Infants are not sinners. Much more might be adduced. Dear reader, have you been baptized in infancy? and do you regard it as scriptural? Examine, and be not deceived.

Reply to What Purports to be an Answer to Query in Vol. viii, Page 11.

If Gen, iii. 15, covers said query, I fail to see it; and I doubt whether Brother Gray does. He says, "I have not found those words as they read in the query; but in Gen. iii. 15 I read words similar, where the Lord says, 'And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; It shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel.'"

I doubt not that the brother thinks that the querry is a foolish one, or one in which is a catch. It is presumable from brother Gray's reasoning that he was never taught from the text as worded in the query. I was, and that is what caused it to appear before the public.

Brother Speicher, in Vol. viii, No. v. says: "Turn to Gen. iii., verse 15, and there you have it in full." Yes, full to overflowing. I think the verse referred to is so full that some has sprouted, and is producing side issues. Now if brother Daniel really thinks that in Gen. iii., 15, we find, that "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head," why then should he attempt an explanation of the same. If, then, it is deemed necessary to attempt an explanation of the query from language supposed to be similar, (according to brother Gray,) from these premises I will venture to join issue.

The sentence (as rendered in both English and German versions) is apparently an elliptical one, and were the ellipsis supplied would probably read as follows: "And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and I will put enmity between thy seed and her seed; It shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." What did God say he would put between the serpent and the woman? Enmity, of course. And what is inferred from the language would bruise the serpent's head? I answer, that which God put between them, which is simply the enmity spoken of. Now according to this analysis of the sentence the query remains without answer. All reliable authorities would seem to favor the idea, that, literally understood, the pronoun it refers to enmity for its antecedent. Brother Speicher analyzes as follows: "It shall bruise thy head." The personal pronoun it represents "her seed," or "the seed of the woman." How do you know? Please give us your authority. Inasmuch as there are two different seeds spoken of in the same sentence, and if the pronoun it refers to either, according to the gramatical analysis of language it is not definitely pointed out which; hence can only be determined by the context.

Let this suffice. May I hope to be fully enlightened on this subject. Further information wanted. I remain, as ever, truly in love with the Brotherhood. D. H. LICHTY.

What we Should not Preach.

We should not preach, that Eve deceived Adam; because Paul declares Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression.

We should not preach that the devil was once a holy angel, and that he fell from his lofty estate many thousand years before the creation of man, in consequence of which he became an enemy of God, and hence approached Eve the weaker vessel of God's creation, and deceived her, when the Bible tells us, it was the serpent the more subtile than any beast of the field which the Lord God had made.

We should not preach that God cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance, when he would allow his only Son to be an offering for sin, and still is allowing sinners repentance and remission of sin, in his name, and also allows him to make intercession for the people.

We should not preach, that in the midst of life we are in death; when it is true that every one, young or old, dieth at the end of life.

We should not preach that our bodies which we lay in the grave, will not rise in the resurrection, when Christ tells us that the hour is coming that all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and come forth.

We should not preach that a man may keep all the commandments, and yet not be a christian, when the Bible saith, "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates into the city."

The above contradictions I have often hear repeated by preachers, but never any one of those preachers tells the people where those scriptures are to be found; and if any one knoweth where they are recorded, I want him to have them all published; referring to the chapter, and verse of the Bible where it is to be found, and then I shall preach it also. And in conclusion I will say to those that preach all the above ideas, you and the Bible for it.

A Familiar Note to Austin Hays.

Dearly Beloved in Christ:—For a fortnight my mind has been considerably engaged about you; and the more my thoughts are turned in that direction, the more I feel impelled by an inward impulse of the soul to present you with an epistle, humbly trusting it may be a stimulant in your Christian achievements.

To encourage one another in our heavenward way, should be the grand aim and design of every one that is within the circle of faith. "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfil the law of Christ," is as applicable to us this moment as it was when it was first dropped from the pen of the inspired apostle apostle. It is the nature of love to seek the interest of others to aid and encourage them in the divine life. It is a plant that has its roots in the heart of the Eternal and Infinite, and is ever moistened and refreshed by the dews of heaven.

Love is not only of God a product, but the very essence of his being. "God is love; and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him." Love will never be destroyed; for it is the essence of the Divine mind, and therefore cannot be erased from the image of God in man.

Heaven were not a place of happiness, were not love there.

Love is the golden chain that binds believers in endearing, god-like intimacy. Erase love from a church and you have nothing but hatred, malice, and animosity. When love begins to decay in our hearts, and its green leaves, fragrant blossoms, and luscious fruit fade and die, we must not ascribe the sad decline to God, but to ourselves. "Nay, but, O man, who art thou that repliest against God? shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, why hast thou made me thus?"

"He that loveth me keepeth my commandments;" and the apostle would have us to understand that they are not grievous.

Where is the man who can confront the declarations of God's imperative demands? Who is he that will raise the puny arm of rebellion, by detracting from the sacred and essential qualifications of the many Christian graces, or divine behests, subverting the design for which they were so wisely conferred through the incarnation of God's own Son, that poor, fallen and degenerate man may and can aspire to a higher degree of a godlike aspiration?

When all things will cease to exist, the law of God will remain untarnished, as an everlasting confirmation of the consummation of the hope and joy that was set before us in anticipation of an eternal felicity—a home, sweet home in heaven.

When all the delusive dogmas invented by the cunning ingenuity of man will have sunk into shame and utter oblivion, stamped with irrevocable infamy by the wrath of God, will his word remain as an everlasting covenant.

"Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away," is not a mere speculation, as some infidel would have us to believe; but it will ultimately come true when all the faithful shall be gathered home to heaven. That so few find the way of life is a matter of profound sorrow; and that so many profess to have found it, who are yet engaged in frivolous amusements and profanity of a sin contaminated life, is equally lamentable. "You must be born again," is a phraseology so much misconstrued, and so generally perverted by theologians, that, were a poor, illiterate mortal heart-broken and sin-stricken, there would be numerous false embassadors to lead him into the very gall of bitterness, in place of bringing him to the mercy seat of Christ, where are the wells of salvation.

Anti-Christians are so numerous, that seldom can anything be done, professedly in the name of Christ, without painting or writing some other name over that of the immaculate Son of the Most High. When the mandate comes, "Let your light so shine that others may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven," there are many, yea, very many, who are about as much ashamed to be called Christians as to be so in reality. Many of your age and condition would regard the religion of Jesus Christ as intolerably irksome. The hope that gladdens your soul so much, and bears you up from the most terrifying hour, would be termed by some, as the very essence of insipidity.

The lust of the eye, the pride of life, and the gratification of the flesh, is a trinity in which the sinner finds more joy and real happiness than in all the infinite resources of a Triune God. The sinner is continually confronting God with austerity relative to the means of salvation.

The sinner thinks he is drinking deep from the wells of salvation; little is he thinking that he is imbibing the essence of demons which dims their mental perceptions, and prevents him from seeing the beauty of holiness. If the sinner could see, by an eye of faith, the sapphire walls and golden pavements of the New Jerusalem, on which are treading millions of blood-washed souls with palms of victory in their hands and crowns of glory on their heads, praising the infinitely Holy and basking forever in the sunshine of immortal glory; if the sinner could tear aside the intervening vail, and look into hades and see the damned wailing, it would create wonder and astonishment enough to bring the atheist to the feet of Jesus and anoint a Savior's feet with tears of penitence.

When the voice of God comes in tones like this, "Son, daughter, give me thine heart," the call, at all times should be met with a response like this, "Here, Lord, am I, poor sinner, help thou mine unbelief," or like Peter on the boisterous ocean, "Save me or I perish." Well do I remember the difficulties that seemed to intercept your pathway, but at last the bright and morning star dawned upon your heart and you found Jesus to the joy and satisfaction of your immortal soul. Was he precious? How glad you were to receive the message, "Thy sins be forgiven!" You felt the hallowed impulse of a loving Savior, in the chambers of your heart, did you not? Angels seemed to hover around you, when you rose from the baptismal grave, and the soul-cheering tidings went home to heaven, "The lost is found and the dead is alive."

Providence has, it seems, cast your lot with those with whom you have but little possession in this world; but do not despair on this account. To "contend earnestly for the faith," is, to make a great stride heavenward. A home in heaven is worth more than millions of worlds. When the Dispenser of all good comes and gives his rich gifts into our hands, there are few that will say, "Stay thy hand, it is enough;" but when the mandate comes, "Sell all thou hast," then there is a disposition to demur. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness," and the rest "shall be added unto you." Who was poorer than Christ? In his humility he exclaimed, "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man has not where to lay his head." Yet in his state of poverty and humiliation he secured a name above all others, and the highest state of possible exaltation in glory.

You are yet young in the cause of Christ—a mere babe; only a month and a-half ago you were inducted into the household of faith. You need encouragement; therefore repair oft to the mercy seat of Christ. Make the Bible your chief text-book. Study well its import. Make it your chief meditation Masticate well the word of God. The longer you chew it the sweeter it becomes. It never can be exhausted; therefore apply yourself to it. Neglect not to sit at the feet of Jesus, either in study, fasting, or prayer. These are three principal means in hastening our assimilation to God. The word of God will never get old or monotonous. The Bible contains an account of man's creation, and is a vivid panorama of the great and happy family in heaven. "Study to show yourself approved of God, a workmanship that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." Let the word, the precious word of truth, be your criterion to go by. "Neglect not the gift that is within thee." "Humble yourself under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time." Oft enter your closet, shut the door, and pray to your Father in secret, and your Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly. If your peace flows like a river go at once to God's altar to offer prayer, "Pray without ceasing." Prayer is the Christians life; as a man cannot live without breath, so cannot the Christian without prayer. Whatever betide in life, go to the mercy seat of Christ. Lovely Savior! precious heaven, to which he brings us.

When you fall short of doing your duty, do not despair; but go to Jesus, bring your censor full of tears and supplications. Though Satan impeach, and conscience accuse, remember God is greater than they. Christ is our advocate. "Who can lay anything to the charge of God's elect?" it is God that justifieth. Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea, rather that is risen again, who is ever at the right hand of God, making intercession for us."

I will conclude. Should we see each other's faces no more, may we come through life more than conquerors, become victorious over the grave, death and hell, and ultimately strike the hands of final redemption in the kingdom of God. So fare-you-well in life

Your young brother,

The Care of the Flock.

Bishops, as shepherds, should be very kind to their helpless charge. As overseers of the flock, they should use their utmost endeavors to baffle the raging storms of the perilous times, and to give them healthy food. It is their duty to watch the flock very strictly; for "wolves in sheep's clothing" often get among them. These cunning, disguised, rapacious monsters, are often very hard to distinguish from the sheep. Their clothing is just like that of the sheep; but underneath there is no similarity. The bodies of the sheep are ready for the master's use; they consist of meekness, love, peace, joy, etc. But wolves are cruel as death, and as hungry as the grave. Their throats burn for blood. Their frames look bony and grim. They fasten on the innocent, pressing them down and piercing them to the heart. They drag them out and down to their horrid dens, where they howl over them among the mixed, foul shades and frightful ghosts of hell. But Jesus, the good shepherd and bishop of souls, has lost none of all that know his voice and follow him. He keeps his flock hidden between the mountains, down in the pleasant valley of humility: down far below the reach or effects of furious tempests or ravenous beasts. He leads them out to pastures by the pure waters of the river of life. In these peaceful valleys the innocent flock dwells and feeds in safety. Every good shepherd will sacrifice all his comforts, even his life, for his flock; but hirelings do not care for their flocks, only to use them to gratify their own selfish, wicked desires. What desires? Why all such that do not originate from impressions made upon the mind by the word of the Lord.

Charity.

"Meek and lowly, pure and holy,
Chief among the blessed three."

Not only is this the chief of christian virtues, but assumes as many forms as there are human woes and sufferings to be relieved. I was just thinking of the many charitable institutions, both in this country and Europe, with their tens of thousands of wretched beings reclaimed from misery, infamy and perhaps eternal woe, by the many good "Samaritans," that still seem to bless this earth and I rejoiced to know that there are such angel spirits in human forms among the children of men, meekly doing the work of their great Master. Then I asked myself, "Where have the Brethren their charitable institution?" I paused but echo alone answered, "where?" Though many of us place so much stress on an implicit obedience to the Savior's command, "go and do likewise," yet there is not a single institution in the church for those who "fell among thieves" that robbed them not only of thier means, but also of their virtue & character. What countless thousands of Lazeri lie at our doors crying for aid, but not an inn have we yet selected where they receive our fostering care. I fear too many of us are satisfied when we have paid the tithes of the mint and cummin, while justice, mercy and the weightier matters of the law go unheeded. May it not happen that on the day of judgment to our astonishment we will be set at the left hand, while many whom we now regard as "outsiders" may hear the saying, "I was hungry & ye fed me" &c. It must be admitted that as individuals, the members of our church are not behind any church now in existence, but as long as we go into battle single handed we waste half our force. How much better were it if the whole of the time at our Annual Meeting were spent in devising plans to spread the gospel and lift up the down-trodden, instead of attending to petty "queries" that answer no good purpose? Is there no Girard, Howard, or George Muller among us? Are there not thousands of Brethen & Sisters who would like to aid in supporting some charitable institution? What say you.?

Universalism not of God. No. 6.

It is evident that all flourishing, civil societies are moved along by a well regulated discipline; and all the movements and turnings of human occasions, are moved to and fro as upon the axle of discipline. Close observers, who have read with judgment of nations and communities, of cities and camps, of peace and war on sea and land, agree at once that all depend upon discipline, and that the final destiny of all is determined by the manner in which discipline is observed. So it is with heaven's highly authorized discipline; our future destiny depends alone upon how we handle, and comply with it.

No, Universalist, the beneficent Savior never left his work so carelessly done. No, he never left this work to the inventions or discretion of men; he never left the government of his church militant to be varnished over and patched up with the many devices and capricious fancies of men. He came down himself to hand us the discipline; and not only published the principles of its institutions, but gave us an example. "If I, then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet; for I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you.

How can intelligent men believe that God has left his frail and feeble, though not less beloved, church here below, to the perpetual stumble and conjecture of man in this dark wilderness of sin, without leaving a map, chart, or discipline by which it should be governed? Yes, friendly universalists, he came to hand us a law to be obeyed, and became the atoning sacrifice for sin, that by his stripes we may be healed through obedience.

The apostle Peter said, "Elect according to the fore-knowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit unto obedience." And farther said, "Which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you."

Who is it reserved for? The apostle tells us in the 5th verse, "Who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time." We are taught in the Holy Scriptures, that the power of God is the gospel of Christ, hence it is that due obedience to that gospel is the power which saves beyond the tomb. And the apostle farther says, in the second chapter, "But unto them which be disobedient, the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner." So we deem it unnecessary to reiterate any farther; but will refer you to the solemnities of the judgment; for we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ.

The Bible gives no promise of probation beyond this life. To fallen angels it gives no hope. Their state would excite as much compassion as that of fallen men. From the person whom we are taught was in hell, Christ shut out all hope. In the night of death no work can be done. The giving up of the mediatorial kingdom by the Son of God, leaves his enemies beneath his feet, crushed by his might, with no hope of escape. Death closes our destiny and it is eternal. To death and to judgment all are tending. In the dark, damp grave all must lie. Deep is the river of death, but all must pass over it. No countenance so bright, no frame so vigorous as to escape the grim monster's icy hand. The strongest pulsations will cease, and the most elastic step will falter, when death approaches with his terrific grasp. Solemn it is to think of the judgment that follows death; to look forward to that hour in which all shall stand before the Judge of the quick and dead; yea, stand in the presence of him to whom all things are open, and one who cannot err, and from whom no one can escape. I am awed by the solemn considerations of this mometous subject. I feel solemn while I write upon the subject, and am assured that for me there is no escape, no safety but at the foot of the cross, where, in accents of humble faith and hope I can say,

"Rock of Ages, shelter me,
Let me hide myself in thee."

Neither is there safety in any other refuge. O, ye dying sons of men! will you refuse the Rock, and seek shelter some where else in the day of tempest and storm? There is no other name given under heaven, and among men where by we can be saved. Will you deride this theme? Will you mock at approaching danger? Will you be deceived by the siren song of peace, when the Eternal God pleads with you not to die—when this whole life is given to prepare to meet him in peace? Oh! will you allow the enemy of souls to lead you astray, through the delusive pursuasions of universalism? Delay not that preparation without which you cannot stand in the judgment. And when you and I, with an assembled universe, shall stand before the tribunal bar of God, may our names be found recorded in the Lamb's Book of life. And when the full chorus shall go up from the redeemed of the earth, may our voices be mingled, and blended together in that blood-washed throng, in antheme of praise to the Lamb of God, the Redeemer of the world, and the Judge of all men. Oh, what a solemn thought! It is not alone the pirate or culprit that is to be tried for his depredations; it is not alone a band of pirates to be tried and sentenced to death; neither is it an army or batallion of men arranged before an earthly tribunal; neither is it alone the kingdoms of the whole world of the nineteenth century; but it is all kindreds, tongues, and nations that have inhabited, and will inhabit, this mundane system, who shall stand before God, there to be judged according to their works. And then shall it be as may be found in the 25th of Matthew, 45th verse, "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal.

Let us come to the conclusion of the whole matter, "Fear God, and keep his commadments, for this is the whole duty of man."

Where can the Preacher be Paid for his Labor.

Many of our ministers want to be paid for their preaching; and I suppose it is right that they should be. And I believe there are not many today that are not being paid for their labor. If they are not obtaining annually a sum of gold or silver, they are treasuring up something that is far better, a reward in heaven. But I sometimes think our ministers labor to a great disadvantage. They labor too much where they are not needed. If they did not the command, "Teach all nations," would not be so much neglected. We frequently hear the Macedonian call, "Come over and help us;" but few respond. Yet there are many churches that can lend ministerial aid without missing it. Then why are the outskirts of our churches so much neglected? Is it because brethren have been so fortunate as to settle themselves down in life in such a comfortable manner that they fear to change their positions lest they never again get a suitable place to spend the remainder of their lives? Or is it because they do not want to leave their social circle which they long have enjoyed with a number of kind brethren. Either of the above reasons is likely to be too true; and there may be others equally invalid But are such excuses in harmony with the will of God? Was not the Son of God a preacher of righteousness? and do not his precepts and examples teach us to abandon the inclinations of our wills and submit ourselves to the wills of God? And, I think, if we are willing to be governed by the good Spirit of the Lord, that congregation which has no speaker will soon have one. It matters but little what our circumstances are in this life, if we do all in our power to please the Lord, he will prepare a suitable mansion for us in glory. If we have but food and raiment, that is all we need or can get in this world. Why then, delay to supply those calls from foreign churches? Away at Oregon are a few brethren as "sheep without a Shepherd." But the compassion of the Lord is upon them; and if some willing preacher will sacrifice a few of life's comforts, and exercise his talents there, he will be well rewarded for his labor. Any preacher in possession of charity for the sinner, certainly would do well to emigrate to some of those small churches. He will be amply paid for his labor. Complying with the requirements of God is the way the christian obtains his enjoyment, and it is a way, too, that the preacher will enjoy the fruits of his labors. Imagine with what joy a zealous embassador of Christ leaves his comfortable abode, and trusting his flock to those who by his encouragement and instruction he has assisted to take the burdens from off his mind and perform the labor that was so carefully allotted to him, to teach another nation or in another country the doctrine of the Bible, whereby he has already led many a lost one from the snares of death to the fountain of life, again to expound the plan of salvation whereby all men can be saved. But they are few who are privileged to perform such an amount of labor; and any one guided by the Spirit of God should not wait for the aged to perform the labor which really belongs to the more dextrous or able speakers. Many of our old ministers, if they were never so willing, could do but little in such circumstances. Their battles are well nigh fought. They will soon have to leave the shores of mortality to realize a life in a never ending eternity, where they shall rest from their labors; and all that remains now for them to do is, to encourage those who labor in God's noble cause to press forward in their calling, that the power of the gospel may have its desired effect; that those who are ignorant of the plan of salvation may have it explained to them, and those who are thirsting after the bread of life may also have a few of its crumbs administered unto them.

Adhering to or complying with the requirements of God, is the way the christian obtains his enjoyment.—Why then withhold the divine word of God from them, when God is able and willing to reward his servants for their labor? The advancement of the church is what we all should desire. And where is there more room for progress than where the true gospel has never been preached? Where can the preacher be better paid for his labor than in some of our little, neglected churches? By making the weak in the Lord strong, is the way to overthrow the strong-holds of Satan; and by following the example of Jesus, the servant of God is required to renounce his own inclinations, and submit himself to the will of God; and this is the only way that his servant will enjoy the fruits of his labors. Christ teaches us self-denial by example and precept. When he was on his mission to our world he did not always remain amongst his beloved disciples but left their society whenever duty demanded it. He was governed by the will of the Father entirely. It would have been very convenient for him to have remained mostly with his disciples, and his company would have been very acceptable; but he would rather spend whole a night in some secluded spot, if it was necessary. After a hard days' toil, instead of taking up his abode with his followers, he, with tired limbs, ascended a rugged mountain, and there he "continued all night in prayer;" and when the dawn of morning dispelled the dark curtains of that lonely night from off all nature, he approached his humble followers, and from them he selected his disciples, whom he placed as servants in his "Father's business." And recollect, dear reader, that he placed them in such a position that they would be of most service to God, and where they would be best paid or rewarded for their labor; not in such a position as would best suit their inclinations. And now, if you want to be well rewarded for your labor, you who can be spared to preach the gospel where it is so much needed, respond to those calls, and the good that you will be able to do will pay you richly for your labor. By the assistance of God, you cannot fail to see your efforts crowned with success. Are you without the means to supply those demands? The church, perhaps, will give you her assistance when needed. If we all knew how necessary it is to be instructed by God's teachers, we would be more willing to have those calls supplied. Christ's gospel should be withheld from none that want to hear it, when it can be preached unto them. When he was here in the world, multitudes thronged him, who, he said, were as sheep without a shepherd. And he was moved with compassion upon them, and did not withhold his doctrine, but "began to teach them many things." He saw that they were willing to hear, so he taught them. Such is the love that our Savior has for those that would be instructed by him. His will is, that all should come to a knowledge of the truth and be saved. How necessary then, that we be engaged in doing the will of our Master and have the gospel preached whenever and wherever it can be.

From Salem College.

Dear Brethren and sisters; I have often been pressed with a desire to contribute a few lines to our paper, for your benefit, but always considered myself as standing in an unfavorable position with many of my dear brethren and sisters; because I have been connected with this institution. But thanks be to God, I need not be ashamed of the cause in favor of which I have been using my scanty influence.

Though I have sacrificed superior advantages in respect to education on my part, merely to patronage and help to build up an institution amongst the brethren, yet I shall not regret it in the least, if we may be so blessed as to accomplish such a noble end in our fraternity.

I have been a student at this school almost from its beginning; and have noticed its many changes. Sometimes my hopes for its success were almost wholy extinct. It has suffered many disasters. It has withstood powerful oppositions, yet it stands ready to kindle into a flame of rapid success by the ready and immediate aid of our brethren and sisters everywhere. May the good spirit awaken our brethren, friends of education, and prompt them to its aid.

I have been extremely delighted with the prospects of attending our institution of late. I feel happy that the brethren are taking a firmer hold of matters so important. I feel as though the darkness of its night has passed, and the dawn was appearing with all its promises of prosperity and success. May God open the hearts of my brethren and sisters to do all in their power for the cause of education; for it is the Lord's own cause. Who shall then fear to take hold of it and help it along? It is not a source of pride as many suppose, or at least seem to manifest by their conduct toward it. No; true education cannot foster pride; but ignorance the mother of all vices, is also the mother of pride. Some of the brethren say it is nothing but a nucleus about which pride entwines herself.—May God grant His aid in repelling all such evil from it. The object is to have it conducted in as plain and simple a manner as possible, so that the brethren need not fear that their children will be taught to run into arristocratic habits. But the way to accomplish this soonest and most effectually will be by the Brethren taking an active and vigilant part. And I hope they will do what they can in every respect; by lending their aid and services to the school. Remember it is open to the criticism of all; surely then if the Brethren take hold in the matter, and use their influence as ardently here as in many other places, there shall be no danger of its becoming a den of aristocracy.

Now brethren I hope your hearts may be opened to liberal contributions. And who will be one among you to say that you will not help a cause like this; but rather protest against reason and better knowledge. I hope there are few such, when they solemnly reflect. Who will then be first to lend their aid. Who will be the first contributor to our library, as we very badly need one, or be a contributor in any way you may think best.

We would be very thankful to any of the brethren or friends who would favor us with such donations.

Your in the bonds of christian charity,

SAMUEL S. KELLER.

Brethren Editors:—We would inform you that, in this branch, (Plum Creek, Armstrong county, Pa.,) we have been encouraged somewhat since our last report to you. The Lord, through his tender mercy and compassion, has permitted us to enjoy a reasonable portion of health and strength, bodily, for which we try to be thankful to the Giver. The faith of the Bible in the brotherhood is, we trust being strengthened, and has also been a little extended here in our midst. By the favor of God, our beloved brother, J. Calvert of Milford, Ind., came to us on the 2d of February and remained until the noon of the 12th, meeting twice each day. He labored to "preach the word" to us at each interview, which the good Lord, accompanied by his spirit to the hearts of many of the congregation. And while we fear that some seed has fallen "by the wayside," "upon stony places," some among thorns," yet we also feel that some has fallen "into good ground, and brought forth good fruit."

On the Lord's day, the 11th, nine found a watery grave in which to bury the old man, and rose again, we hope, "to walk in newness of life." These were all young, yet have been in "this vale of tears" long enough to feel that without returning to God in Christ, there was for them no salvation. Others seemed as they, but did not yet accept the offers of salvation on the easy terms of the gospel.

Easy terms we say, though some of the spectators at the place of baptism, standing on about 18 inches of ice, thought that it was hard to thus follow Christ. We pity them, they do not feel to follow Jesus so closely. Such are unwilling to be covered with water now. Oh! I wonder how it will be with them when the Lamb comes again, not to atone for sin, but to take vengance on them that know not God and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

May The Anointed One see his own image in all who have recently begun to serve & follow him, as well as in us who are more advanced in his service. The time seems to be at hand, when many "will not endure sound doctrine," therefore we desire that The Lord of the harvest may aid our loving brother's labors here and elsewhere, that much and lasting good may result to the good cause and to the souls and bodies of men. God be thanked for his zeal and courage to labor among us, and may other co-laborers also be encouraged to "go and preach the gospel to every creature."

In this connection I desire to say that the church here has been edified, and encouraged. We feel it was good to be together to serve The Lord. At parting many natural eyes became dim, but we trust "the eyes of our understanding" will in consequence be the more "enlightened."

We feel thankful, not only to brethen and sisters who convened with us, but also to our heavenly Father, "who hath begotten us to a lively hope."

May joy and peace in the Holy Ghost accompany us all.

Charity List.

I noticed that your charity list is in the background some, and feel like giving a little ($1.50) to pay some poor brother or sister's paper—the money that I formerly spent for tobacco. Hope it may cheer some fellow-pilgrim; for it has often encouraged and comforted us. I think it should find a place in every Christian family. I will yet say to my brethren who with me have been in bondage, that it is better to be free; and the Savior is willing and able to help us to be free, if we are willing and ask his help.

A. Brother.

We admire the tone of this item, and hope to have more such expressions from our brethren and sisters.

Brother Henry:—I have the COMPANION this morning, before me on my stand, where I have been looking over its pages. A query came under my notice in the present number, page 107, by brother H. B. Lehman. The query relates to a line in hymn, No. 225 of our Hymn Book. I do not know who was the author of the lines, neither do I care, but I believe they are truthful lines. But you ask scripture for the line, "For ev'ry vain and idle thought." I think we have enough of scripture to satisfy us on this point. We can find the word vain some twenty times, in the Bible, if my memory serve n e right, vanity about thirty times. The poet's lines do not say, "give an account, 'for ev'ry vain and idle thought,'" as you say in your query. First I will cite you to Matt. 6: 7, "Use not vain repetition." Psalm, 119: 113, I hate vain thoughts, "Also Jer. 4: 14, "How long shall vain thoughts lodge in thee?" The prophet says, "Wash thy heart from wickedness, that thou mayest be saved." Rom. 1: 21, "Because that, when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful; but became vain; in their imagination, and their foolish heart was darkened." 1 Cor. 3: 20, The Lord knoweth the thought of the wise, that they are vain. See also Col. 2: 8, I have given only a few instances of the word vain, of the many that could be given.

Next we will examine the words think and thought. I think we can find the words thought, thoughts, and think, between seventy and eighty times in the Bible, if I mistake not; first I will cite you to Prov. 24: 8, 9, "He that deviseth to do evil shall be called a mischievous person; the thought of foolishness, is sin." Eccl. 10: 20, "Curse not king in thy thought." Psalm 94: 11, The Lord knoweth the thoughts of man that they are vanity. But we shall not curse in thoughts or in words; thoughts will generally be before words. But the proverb says, (2: 5,) "The thoughts of the righteous are right;" then, (15; 26,) "The thoughts of the wicked are an abomination to the Lord. Now if the thoughts of the unjust are an abomination in the sight of God, why not if the followers of Christ will have evil thoughts; which ought not to be among professors of Christ? Let us hear the prophet Isaiah, (55: 6, 7,) "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts." Jer. 4: 14, "Wash thy heart from wickedness, that thou mayest be saved. How long shall thy vain thoughts lodge within thee?" Now we will come to the law of Christ, Matt. 15: 19, "For out of the heart proceed evil thought, murders, adulteries, fornication, thefts, false witness, blasphemies." Mark 7: 21—23, "Out of the heart of men proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornication, murders, thefts, covetousness, wickedness, deceit, lasciviousness, an evil eye, blasphemy, pride, foolishness; all these evil things come from within, and defile the man." Rom. 2: 15, "Which show the work of the law written in their hearts; their conscience also bearing witness, and their thoughts; the meanwhile, occuring or else excusing one another." 1 Cor. 3: 20. And again, the Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wise, that they are vain. Thought is the act of thinking. Let us hear Paul again, Rom. 12: 3, "For I say, through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly then he ought to think, but to think soberly." This is plain; where it is said thou shalt not kill; not steal, not bear false witness, so he says, not to think highly. So I believe we understand this point. See 1 Cor. 8: 1, 2; Gal. 6: 3, "For if a man think himself to be somthing when he is nothing, he decieveth himself." Phil. 4: 3, Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest; whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

I have written in love, as an answer to your query; and if I am in error, I wish to be enlighted; but let us try and do all things in love, is my prayer. JOSIAH BEEGHLY.

Dear Brother in the Lord:—I had a letter from elder John Zug, dated February 19, 1872, stating that he was in ill health, and that he was on the decline daily; and feeling a desire to see him once more, I left home on 24th, went to Myerstown, walked a little distance to brother Weaver's who made a way for me. Got to brother Zug's before sunset. Found him in bed; but he was still able to get up. Had a nice time with him. But he is frail; a very disordered stomach, a deep-seated cold, and age, I think is his sickness. He is up and down, still able to walk out; but not able to leave home. On Lord's day I was at meeting with the brethren in the old Tulpehocken meeting-house, and in the afternoon at Richland. On Monday morn John Zug jr., took me to Long's meeting-house in the Spring creek church, when they had started a meeting on Saturday evening before. Brethren J. Hartzler, S. Getzle, from old Berks, and John Gibble of Lancaster county, were present. On Thursday morning brother Hartzel brought me to Spring Creek meeting-house. Was with them at one meeting. They had another in the evening, but I left about the close of the forenoon meeting, and came home. But many of the brethen I used to see in these churches are no more there. In love your brother. Scott Valley.

Is there such a place as Scott Valley? There is; and this Valley is also in a high state of cultivation: grain, vegetables and fruit, of all kinds are raised in this Valley, to supply the hundreds of mining camps that are in the foothills and mountains that surround it. Scott Mountain is situated at the head of the Valley. Its height is ten thousand feet above the level of the sea. The low mountains on the east are called Greka Mountain. The tall mountains on the west are called the Balmon Mountains. You that are not acquainted with the Valley, do not think strange when I tell you that men are raising grain and thrashing from two thousand to twenty thousand bushels on one farm. Land in this Valley is worth from ten to thirty dollars per acre in gold coin.—Farms can be bought at their prices at present. I could go on and talk about the climate and numerous other things, but I do not wish to take the space in your paper. Brother John Sharrath is stopping with us this winter. Yours Truly,

H. C. CORY.

For the COMPANION.

Reply to Brother A. H. Cassel on Plagiarism.

In COMPAION number 8, current volume, appeared an article written by brother Cassel, under the heading Plagiary. In which he charges me, with other brethren, with literary, theft, meanness, and fraud. Now I am sorry that brother Cassel pursued the course he did. Is this the way a brother must do when he feels himself wronged by another? I think not. If brother C. had sent me a few lines stating his grievances, I certainly would have tried to make it all right. But for satisfaction of brother C. and all my dear brethren and sisters who read the COMPANION, and even those who may hear about this matter, I will try to explain.

I had for some years thought to write an article stating who my ancestors were, and what I know about them; and had intended to do this about the time I did, so that my family and relatives could get and preserve it if they wished to do so. And when in Berks county last Fall, in company with brother D. P. Sayler I was all night with my cousin, and brother Klien. In speaking about our friends and ancestors, brother Klien said he had a paper he got from Cassel, which gave a statement of our great grandfather. I said I would like to have a copy of it, as I intended to write something; and it was given to me the next morning. In November I wrote the article, which was published in the sample number of the Pilgrim, dated Nov. 28, 1871. All that I took from the paper which I obtained from brother Klein, had reference to my grand-grandfather, elder George Klein; stating where and when he was born, when he emigrated to this country, where he settled, when and by whom he was baptized, and when he moved to Northkill on the Tulpehocken, to take charge of said church, when and by whom he was ordained. This is about the substance of what I gave, and this is all that brother Cassel can have any claim to, and not even all this, for I heard my mother talk about George Klien more than forty years ago She was a grand-daughter of his. And where did brother Cassel get what I gave reference to elder George Klien? He (Cassel) did not live when Klien lived. He got it from some body else, just as brother D. B. Klien and myself did, I presume. So with some of those articles in the Almanacs, where he gives articles, biographical sketches, and names of brethren, &c. Some of these lived more than a hundred years ago, and we know that brother Cassel is too young to have all this from personal acquaintance, or his own observation. Then he must have got his knowledge from others, just like I obtained a part of mine about my great-grandfather; for whilst I am writing I have Almanacs of '71 and '72 before me, and can not see much credit given to any one, but generally signed Abraham H. Cassel. And yet he charges me and others with plagiarism, or literary theft, &c. "Thou, therefore, which teachest another, teachest thou not thyself; thou that preachest a man should not steal, dost thou steal?" I would not have replied, not being hurt very badly, but quite a number of my dear brethren know, that I gave brother Sayler company last Fall to Eastern Pennsylvania, and some who know that we were in the Library, might wonder after reading brother Cassel's article. "Did brother Miller steal or take some papers when he was there?" No, no, brother Miller did not get the worth of a pin when there. Brother Cassel not being at home, his son and daughter took us into the Library; but we went away no wiser than we came. So I disclaim of being guilty of the charge of plagiarism. Neither do I think that my brother and cousin D. B. Klien is guilty; as I understand that brother Cassel had given him the article some ten or twelve years ago, and my impression is, that Klien, at the same time, gave Cassel some rare old books and pamphlets, "without treasure." Let us not be desirous of vain glory, provoking or envying one another; but speak the truth in love.

Dear Borther Holsinger:—If not encumbering too much, your columns with unimportant matter, please inform brother J. S. McFadden and all other brethren going westward that they will find splendid land still subject to premeption and homestead entry in Jewell county, Kansas. In fact all that country lying up the Salmon River, and between that and the Republican River is about all that we could ask as far as natural advantages are concerned. I do not wish to speak to the disparagement of any other portion of the far western country, but I think it perfectly safe to say that it is considered by a majority of those who have traveled throughout that section, to be the finest part of the State. We were directed there by a man who had traveled pretty much all over Nebraska and pronounced it superior to anything he found.

Good rich land, rather more timber than falls to the general average of the west. Good water found bubbling out in springs, or in wells at a reasonable depth. Stone coal is said to be abundant in Cloud county. Magnesian limestone is found in great abundance along White Rock River, and perhaps many other places—soft enough to be sawn into any shape when first taken out but hardened by exposure so as to be excellent for building, or other ordinary purposes. The climate is mild enough to raise almost all kinds of fruit, and fall wheat, will do well. It is just the latitude for osage orange hedge, and the country will soon be beautifully checkered off with live fences Railroads are pushing their way up the Salmon—up the Republican, and will soon traverse the country in all directions and beside all this, brethren if you will look at a map, you will find that this country is right in the center of our great republic.

Let the brethren who have already settled there, become a nucleus around which many more of us may gather, and then though, this broad land may be defective in many of its members, it may still be said that it is should in the care; round religiously, morally and socially.

Brother Henry:—We are glad to say to you, that the ark of the Lord still moving onward in the salomony arm of the church. We received several into the chruch by baptism through the course of the last summer. We commenced a series of meetings on the 9th inst., and closed on the 20th. The hearts of many were made glad, to see their children and friends come to Christ and his church. Forty-five were added by baptism during the course of our meetings.

Brother D. Younce did most of the preaching SAMUEL MURRAY.

Dear Brother Holsinger:—It affords me great pleasure to sit down to write these few lines to you, though a stranger; but wherever the word of the Lord is, there is liberty. These things have pressed upon my mind for a long time; and I feel it my duty to write a little. I have been taking the COMPANION, and its good reading affords me great comfort indeed. Now I shall begin to talk about my soul's salvation, what Jesus has done. I love to sit alone to meditate, to draw in my wandering mind, to feel that my Redeemer lives. These things often arise in my mind, do I live as near to God as I ought; and do I love him as he has loved me? But when I look around and think of my vain, earthly body, think what good can come out of it, I often think if I had begun younger in this glorious work, I would have a great treasure in heaven to-day; but since I have now entered into the ark, may I be found ever looking for Jesus, who will soon come to give every Christian his reward, and if I rest not from my labor with those who rest in the tomb,—because the scripture saith they shall not all sleep,—when they shall rise incorruptible, in the glory of God, may I with the quick, be caught up in the air with all the holy saints, to sit at God's right hand. I hope, dear brother, you will not think I am making too free, for I cannot help expressing myself, because the Saviour said, "Whosoever shall ashamed of me and of my words, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed when he shall come in his own glory and in his Father's and of the holy angels." I have often felt after hearing a good sermon, or at prayer-meeting, I ought to tell what Jesus has been doing for me. It seems, sometimes I could pour out my whole soul to God my Savior. I have friends and neighbors who love not God, nor obey the gospel. I am praying the Lord to unstop their deaf ears and open their blind eyes, that they might enjoy the glorious pleasure I do now. I never shall forget the day the Spirit told me to confess Jesus, that I was new; everything around me was new. Oh that I could tell the heighth, the breadth and depth of Jesus love; May I see poor sinners returning to God my Savior, who died, the just for the unjust, to bring them to God. Dear Saviour, hear my prayer, I leave this letter in care of the Lord. May the Spirit of the Lord be your support, and the full armor of faith be on you.

Brother Holsinger:—Will you or some other brother give an explanation on the following query: Inasmuch as Christ said, "My kingdom is not of this world," would it be consistent, according to the teachings of Christ and his apostles, for a subject of Christ's kingdom to hold a worldly office? J. H. WIRT.

Who are the Elders that James speaks of in his epistle, fifth chapter? Does he mean the ones who are highest in office, whether Deacon or Minister in the first or second degree? Or, does he mean the one who has been elected to the office of Bishop?

An answer is solicited.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the vicinity of Fairfield, Green county, Ohio, February 26th, DAVID C. BRANNUM; aged 31 years 5 months and 26 days. A wife and two children are left to mourn his untimely loss. Funeral services by the writer from 1 Cor. 15: 22. B. F. Davist.

In the Monticello congregation, White county, Ind., Dec., 10th 1871, JOHNNIE, youngest son of brother Adam and sister Hannah, YOUNG, aged 5 years less 15 days. Disease, brain fever. Funeral occasion improved by brother Joseph Amick and the writer, from Peter 1; 24 25.

Same congregation, in Carroll county, Ind., on the 11th of Dec., 1871, friend HENRY SHUCK, aged 41 years and some days. Disease typhoid fever. Occasion improved from Matt. 24: 44, by the writer.

Same place, December 24, 1871, our beloved sister ELIZABETH BROWN, wife of brother Andrew Brown, and sister of brother Young, aged 50 years 4 months and 24 days. Disease consumption. In her we have lost one of our most devoted and earnest sisters. Though not rich in this world's goods, she was rich in faith and good works, which we feel assured follow her while she is resting from her labors. She was formerly a member of the Dry Valley congregation, Mifflin county Pa. Funeral occasion improved by the writer, assisted by brother Joseph Amick, to a large concourse of people, from John 5: 25—29.

Same church, Feb. 15th; our much esteemed brother and elder ADAM YOUNG, aged 53 years 1 month and 21 days. Disease lung fever, followed by typhoid pneumonia. In him the church has lost one of their most faithful and efficient laborers; ever willing to do his part whether in labor or counsel. Truly the church is mourning, but not as those who have no hope. In the early years of the life of our brother he was identified with the Methodist denomination; but after a more thorough examination of the gospel he asked admittance among the Brethren where after a few years he was chosen as speaker in the (now) Dry Valley church, Mifflin county Pa. There he labored faithfully till the spring of 1865, when he, with his family, emigrated to White county, Ind. Here he entered a new field in which he proved himself faithful, so much so that in August 1869 he, with the writer, was ordained to the full ministry; in which capacity they together labored with full confidence in each other, and feeling toward each other as did David and Jonathan. And the writer while penning this notice feels as did David when Jonathan was fallen. The writer and brother Joseph Amick being absent on a mission of love to Jasper county, his funeral was not attended to till on Sunday the 25th of the present month, when a large assembly came together and with address by the writer and brother Joseph Amick, from Rev. 14: 13, 13. John S. Snowberger.

Three sisters in one grave, daughter of brother John and sister Margaret Wolf, of Lower Canawaga, York county Pa.; three daughters yet living to witness the sad scene. Death did his work through the agency of Scarlet Fever. All died February 17th 1873. MARY, aged 7 years 11 months; MARGARET, aged 5 years 4 months and 28 days, and SARAH ANN, aged 9 months.

Funeral address by brother Joseph W. Bucher assisted by others, from Matt 19: 14. The surviving parents and daughters have the sympathy and condolence of the writer and likewise an apology for not meeting with them at the funeral in consequence of death in the neighborhood.

Also on the 27th of February ISAAC HULL WOLF, of consumption, cousin of the said surviving parents. Deceased's residence, Rockberry, Cumberland county Pa.

Religious exercises by the brethren from 103 Psalm, 15: 16. Friends were not notified so widely in consequence of prevailing sickness among those distant.

Adam Beelman

In the Pine Creek congregation, St. Joseph county, Ind., October 10th 1871. JONATHAN LONG, aged 36 years 6 months and 10 days. He was resigned to the will of the Lord. He leaves a young widow; being married only a little over a year.

Elizabeth Long.

In Louisa county, Va., February 2, ESTHER WAGNER; age 83 years 5 months and 11 days. She has been a worthy member of the church about sixty-four years. She was the mother of eleven children; ten still remain. She was a widow twenty-seven years. Funeral services by the undersigned from Isaiah 3: 10, 11.

Stephen Yoder.

In the Maple Grove Congregation, Ashland county, Ohio, January, 1st, 1872, Sister HARRIET, wife of brother Jesse JACOBS, aged 45 years, 7 months and 11 days.

Our mother was born and raised in York county, Pa. In 1856 she emigrated with her family from Franklin county, Pa, to Ohio, where she lived to the day of her death. She was the mother of twelve children; four having gone before her to the spirit world. She leaves a sorrow-stricken husband and eight children to mourn her departure. But while we mourn the loss of a kind and affectionate mother, we are confident that our loss is her eternal gain. She was a consistent member of the church for upwards of 25 years, and died in the triumph of a living faith; and we believe that she is happy now with her Savior, safely landed on the blissful shores of Paradise.

Funeral services by the brethren from the words "All flesh is as grass, &c."

"HOW TO GO WEST."

Forty years ago, Illinois was as far West as most people wished to go, and journeys were made in the legendary "Prairie Schooner," but in these days of Progress and Improvement, the word West has come to mean Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, California, and the Territories, and the Traveler reaches almost any point therein by a splendid Line of Railroad.

This Line of Railroad is the Burlington Route, which starts from Chicago over the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R., from Indianapolis, over the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western Short Line, and from Logansport, over the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw R. R., and running through BURLINGTON, reaches Omaha, Lincoln, Nebraska City, St. Joseph, Atchison, Leavenworth and Kansas City, connecting with the Union Pacific, Kansas Pacific and other Railroads running from those cities.

Always go "By way of Burlington" and you will be sure to be right.

The Burlington Route has admirably answered the question, "How to go West?" by the publication of a truthful and interesting document, filled with facts in regard to Time, Connections, Accommodations, rates of Fare and other interesting items and illustrated by a large map, truthfully showing the whole West, which they distribute free of charge. Copies, and additional information can be obtained by addressing, General Passenger Agent, B. & M. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

THE

Christian Family Companion.

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

VOLUME VIII. DALE CITY, PA., TUESDAY, MAR. 19, 1872. NUMBER 12.

Never Give Up!

Never give up, brother, never give up!
God has a blessing for those who work hard.
Why should you murmur, and grumble, and fret,
And envy the pleasure from which you're debarred?
Work like a man,
Do the best that you can;
This is the wisest and happiest plan!

Never give up, brother, never give up,
Though the future looks lowering, and gloomy, and drear,
Though the sun shine not now, yet it may very soon.
So keep up a brave heart and tread down your fear.
Soon may come light,
And all will be bright,
Only struggle and strive and do what is right!

Never give up, brother, never give up,
Though your burden be heavy and dark be your way;
The bow in the clouds only comes with the rain,
And when night is deepest, then bursts forth the day.
Soon troubles will cease,
And your sorrows decrease,
Only trust in the Lord, and then all will be peace!

Darkness and Light.

Father, my heart is sad, is sore;
Ah, bid me come to Thee, and sin no more,—
Let me see light—where all was dark before,
And give me peace.
Say to this over-burdened heart of mine,
That Thou wilt make its heavy sorrows Thine.
Oh, bid me every anxious care resign—
From weeping cease.

Father, a thousand ills beset the way,
As on I grope to everlasting day;
And yet—and yet—I still find strength to pray,
And Thou wilt hear.
Then lay thy blessed hand upon my head,—
Let angels keep their watch where'er I tread,
O! guide and guard till the dark night hath fled,
And bright and clear.

The Sun of righteousness upon my soul
Shall shine, my wounded life make whole—
And from my weary heart the load shall roll
At Thy command.
And Thou wilt lead me gently, safely on,
Until the pains and cares of earth are done!
Close by Thy side my earthly course I'd run,—
So take my hand! Advance

Pray and Labor.

By M. SHELLEIGH.

To pray and not to work, is mocking God
Who holds a blessing for the thrifty hand,
To work and not pray, all understand
Dishonors Him who sends all good aboard:
Not to unite the two, is a deep fraud
Upon our souls, whose nature doth demand
New grace from heav'n, to quicken and expand—
New life in duty, such as angels laud:
With praying heart, we stength from heaven bring;
With working hand, we act the heavenly part:
In both, we strive in childlike trust to cling
To the high throne whence all success doth start—
Whence light and life, and help and hope, do spring,
To those of working hand and praying heart.

Answer to a Query.

In volume eight, page 770, of the C. F. C., The following passages are recorded and an explanation demanded.

Acts

"And they that were with me saw indeed the light, and were afraid; but they heard not the voice of him that spake to me." 22: 9.

"And the men which journeyed with him stood speechless, hearing a voice but seeing no man" 9: 7.

The only seeming discrepancy between Luke and Paul is this: The former said that the men which journeyed with Paul at the time of his conversion, "stood speechless, hearing a voice, but seeing no man, (no speaker), while the latter said, "They that were with him heard (or understood) not the voice of him who spake to him."—Emphatic Diaglott. If the above rendering is correct, there is but little or no difference in the two passages. It is no contradiction to say we hear the voice of a speaker and yet not understand the words spoken by him. The following passage will serve as an example to illustrate the point at issue. John 12. 28, 29, "Then came there a voice from heaven, saying, I have both glorfied it, and will glorfied it again. The people therefore that stood by, and heard it, said it thundered: others said An angle spake to him." The people that witnessed the above supernatural occurrance heard the voice of God, but were so far from understanding the above words addressed to the Son, that some of them thought it thundered, &c. Just so with the men that accompanied Saul when on his way to Damascus: they simply heard a voice, or sound, but saw no speaker nor understood the words spoken to Saul in the Hebrew tongue, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks."

Time.

BY J. H. WORST.

It has been sagely remarked, that "time bears us on like the current of a mighty river." Behind the moldering walls of Babylon or exhumed Ninevah, the most striking evidences of a remote antiquity diffuse themselves through the crude materialism of that semi-architectural era. Upon the wide columns and dilapidated terrace of Romish cathedrals and Grecian citadels, or Egyptian pyramids, the moss-covered furrows remain, alone, to mark the skill of anterior ages, followed by the imprints of time. Turkish refinement and Syriac intelligence, that once shed a glaring lustre o'er barbarous institutions and semi-enlightened grandeur, have been dimmed by later developments of mind, and finally obscured by the effulgence of the present age of literature and science. The oratory of Demosthenes and the eloquent appeals of Tully no longer animate the hearts of thousands with feverish excitement, but slumber beneath the canopy of milder christian sentiments. Oriental pomp and glory, that once fascinated the eyes of the whole world, now quietly slumber beneath the castled walls that once stood as an impassable barrier to hostile foes but are now leveled to the earth by the destroying angel of time. Through the dim pages of history, we behold nothing but the rise and decade of mighty nations, and the utter ruin and desolation of all the puny efforts that man has put forth to establish his name immortal. While the Supreme Ruler of the universe has declared that heaven and earth shall pass away, but his word shall not pass away; it seems strange, indeed, to see man, in his vanity of heart, extending his unhallowed influence to the remotest corners of the earth, without one hope in that which is imperishable. Were Christianity duly appreciated and complied with, then would the effects of time be merely external, and the volumes of incense that would roll uninterruptedly from the altar of every heart, would mount higher and higher, until a universal brotherhood would span society with her gentle arms, and peace and harmony reign supreme.

Steel-faced Hammers.

When the blacksmith wields the hammer, which is made of the same material as that upon which he is working, would not his labor be vain if the face of his hammer had not been properly tempered and prepared, although it should fall with great force upon that which is being wrought? The Christian is of the same nature, with the men of the world; therefore, in order that he may work with success upon them, he must be tempered, it may be through the fires of great trials, but he must be tempered by the Holy Ghost, and made of that heavenly temper and power that he may work upon stony hearts to break them, and fashion rough material to the praise of the glory of Divine grace.

One of the saddest things about human nature is, that a man may guide others in the path of life without walking in it himself; that he may be a pilot, and yet a castaway.

Well Directed Benevolence.

Every week or two we read of the princely gifts of some rich man to an institution of learning, art or charity. And this is well. All honor to such benefactors. Their munificence deserves the highest commendation, and the more it is recognized and extolled the stronger will the public sentiment in favor of charity and generosity become. But we hope that our generous men will remember that there is no institution so grand and useful as a truly noble man, and that a few hundred dollars given to the struggling talent and aspiring genius will often yield a richer return than as many thousands locked up in the safe investment of a college or hospital. Brick and mortar beneficence is a splendid thing, but the kindness, sympathy and encouragement put directly into the heart and life of some young man or woman struggling under a mountain of difficulties, by the gift and friendship of a wise patron, is worth more than all the marble in the world. One of the very best uses to which generous people can put their generosity is just this of cheering and helping worthy men and women to realize their highest aspiration.

Thoughts Sinful.

In current volume, page 107, the query is asked: "Where is the scripture that we must give an account 'for every vain and idle thought.' An answer is requested."

The mind of our progenitors got wrong by adhering to the suggestions of the serpent; hence their progeny inherited the same proneness to evil. We will refer to some passages in the Old and New Testaments to prove this fact. Prov. 23: 9, "The thought of foolishness is sin." Psalm 94: 11, "The Lord knoweth the thoughts of man that they are vanity." Matt. 12: 25, "And Jesus knew their thoughts." Luke 11: 17, "But he knowing their thoughts," Acts 8:22, "Repent therefore of this thy wickedness, and pray God, if perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee." Job 42: 2, "That no thought can be withholden from thee."

"Jesus knew their thoughts," their evil thoughts; evil, because the power by which he cast out devils they attributed to Beelzebub the prince of devils. Were their thoughts sinful? Certainly; also vain, to suppose that the devil would oppose himself was vanity. And sin cannot enter heaven.

In Acts 8: 22, Simon the Sorcerer, was commanded to repent of the thought of his heart; which proves what Job said, that our thoughts cannot be withholden from God. Jesus knew the thoughts of man before they were audibly expressed; and he is still the same yesterday, to-day and forever. Man in his natural or unregenerated state cannot please God; he does not possess the mind of Christ, whose meat and drink was to do the will of him that sent him; hence the mind must be renovated, become sound like the prodigal son's when he came to himself. He had been morally insane. 2 Timothy, 1:7. "For God hath not given us the spirit of fear, but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind. Now if we occupy the position of foreigners, we are alienated from God; are not willing to come under judgment, or put on Christ. If we put on Christ, make the word of God the rule and faith of practice, willing to do his will which Jesus brought from heaven, we then judge ourselves already in this life; 1 Cor., 11: 31. "For if we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged." 1 John 1: 9, "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." He is our "advocate with the Father." On the other hand, if we are not willing to be judged here by that word which was made flesh, what will be the consequences? Hear what the Master saith, John 12: 48, "He that rejecteth me and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him; the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day," In Eph. 6, we are commanded to put on the whole armor of God; above all to take the sword of the spirit, which is the word of God, to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. Being thus equipped the weapons of our warfare (2 Cor. 10:5) not being "carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds * * * and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ;" Heb. 4: 12, "The word of God is quick and powerful * * * and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart." Not only thoughts, but intents of the heart. 1 Peter 4:17, "For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God, and if it first begin at us, &c." What house? Heb. 3: 6, gives the answer, "But Christ as a son over his own house, whose house are we, &c." But we must hold fast the confidence and rejoicing of the hope. 1 John 3: 3, "And every man that hath this hope in Him, purifieth himself even as He (Christ) is pure." The gospel brings us under judgment, because our thoughts have to be brought "into captivity to the obedience of Christ." The doctrine that we must give an account "for every vain and idle thought," floats on the surface of the Bible, and is in perfect harmony with the tenor of the gospel; and if not made a new creature in Christ in this life, and the vain thoughts brought into captivity, they will stand against us at the great day of final account. But the Christian cannot prevent thoughts to arise in his mind, no more than he can prevent the birds of the air to fly over his head; but he can prevent the birds from building nests on his head. The same power he possesses, by the assisting grace of God, to bring into captivity the thouguts to the obedience of Christ.

The Lord's Prayer.

In the present volume, page 52, I find a response, by Brother Whitmer, to my request concerning the Lord's prayer. Now, dear brother, I am glad that you attempted to give an answer; but I must say that I do not approve of your way of dicovering things. I can take the same method and discover that Christ was speaking of his kingdom, or of the kingdom of grace. I would just refer you to the most of places where either Christ or the apostles spake of the kingdom of the Lord, or of God, and see if they had not an allusion to the kingdom of grace. Where we have not positive evidence, we must take circumstances into consideration. In closing your essay you say, "His kingdom is continuously coming, and being extended, by men repenting," &c. Now this is a new idea to me. How can a thing be coming and be extended at the same time? A thing undoubtedly must first be before it can be extended. So you see that Christ's kingdom has come; and men's repenting &c., is only adding subjects to it. For this let us pray God, through Christ, that men and women every where may come into this kingdom, and bring forth fruits of repentance.

Yours in love,

H. SPICHER.

The Christian Comforter.

It is a blessed thing to cheer one sorrowing heart, to soothe one pain, to dry one tear; but thrice blessed is he whose lot it is to comfort and be "a succorer of many." Who would not rather, like Mary, have loved the weary feet of Jesus than to have offered wine in a golden chalice to the proud Herod on his throne? Who would not rather have sheltered his homeless head in that humble cot of Bethany than have entertained an earthly prince? Who would not crave the place of those meek women who pressed with tearful eyes and throbbing hearts around the cross, in preference to them who nailed him there? Next to placing the cup of cold water to his parching lips, is the honor of giving it to those of his children who, like him, are bearing the burdens of others.

For the Companion.

Public Writing.

Writing for the public in the brotherhood, is becoming quite an object, and like all other useful arts, requires some instruction and a great deal of practice and perseverance. To suggest a few rules for the benefit of those who desire to become useful and successful authors, is the object of this communication. Our purpose is, not to instruct the learned, but the unlearned. Many of those who are familiar with English Grammar, and the rules of composition, generally have recourse to works which give the desired information; while others, who are not acquainted with Grammar, derive but little information from these learned authors. A few thoughts to both will not be amiss, and may save the latter much unnecessary labor. Many writers spend years in learning what they might have been taught in a few hours.

It is very difficult to become a correct and successful writer, without a good knowledge of English Grammar and the rules of Composition. However, in preparing matter for a periodical published by the Brethren, this difficulty may be fully met by our editors, who correct all errors before the manuscript reaches the hands of the printer.

It is not advisable that the unlearned members refuse to write, simply because they are not familiar with the correct construction of the language. There are thousands in the Brotherhood, who have noble ideas that would give pleasure to their fellows, if they only knew how to properly express them. Do not refuse to write because your knowledge of composition is limited; but prepare your best thoughts, dress them in the best and plainest language at command, and send them to your editor; if they are uncorrect, he will surely rectify all errors, if the article contains enough of useful matter to half compensate for the trouble. A majority of our brotherhood would sooner see the truth in plain, ungrammatical English, than behold error robed in the finest flowers of popular language.

Never write until you have something to write about; and be sure that that something will be of some benefit to the reader.

Never prepare an article for publication, about that which you do not clearly understand. The object of all public writing should be to instruct, and one is sure to fail in laboring to teach that which he knows nothing about; and in addition to this, never send an article to the press unless you see something about it that is calculated to benefit the reader.

The first requisite, upon the part of an author, is, to have a purpose, or a distinct object in view.

Next, it is absolutely necessary that he have a clear and a comprehensive understanding of his subject; and should never prepare his matter for the press, until he has availed himself of all the help and testimony at command.

To save expenses, for one who writes a great deal, a large slate is necessary, (scraps of waste paper will do, but a slate is better,) so that when anything is incorrectly written it can be easily rubbed out.

When thus prepared, arrange your matter somewhat after the following order.

1. Procure an appropriate name for your subject. 2. Write on a small strip of paper all you intend to write about, being careful to number each item. 3. Carefully examine each item, and see if there are any that have no business in your article. 4. This being completed examine them again, and arrange them as they should appear in your article, numbering them 1, 2, 3, &c.

You are now ready for regular writing. Commence with item No. 1, of the last numbering, and write upon your slate the best thoughts you can produce upon the subject; and in expressing an idea, always use the fewest, simplest, and most appropriate words at command. This work carefully review, examining the spelling of each word. Perhaps you have used some words that every body is not familiar with. Try it again, perhaps you can express the same ideas just as well with less words. See how short you can make it; the shorter you make it, the stronger it will be.

Read it over, and over, and over, correcting all errors, and altering it, till you cannot make another particle of improvement in it. Now, then, you have a paragraph that has some sense and beauty about it, and the reader will take pleasure perusing such collections.

Transfer it from your slate to good white paper, writing on but one side. Use good black ink, and try just how plain you can write. This being completed, you are now ready for your second item, and so on till you have finished your article.

Now, then, carefully examine the whole article, correcting every error. Never be afraid of spending too much time preparing matter for the press. Often the more time appropriately spent, the greater the amount of good accomplished.

I am acquainted with a writer, who has already spent three months preparing a single article, of but moderate length. A preparation like the above, contains thought and matter enough to keep one employed a week, at least. Never be afraid of getting your article too short. People never get tired of reading short compositions. And above all things, stop when you get done.

The Christian Church.

What is a Christian church? It is an assembly of disciples of Christ, associated in the name of Jesus Christ, and governed by his teaching exclusively, without the mixture of man's wisdom. They are taught by Christ, and by him alone. They, as the great representatives of Christ, perpetuate his doctrine unto the end of the world. They preach Christ and him crucified, as the hope of salvation; and when sinners are converted, they baptize "them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost;" hence you discover that the baptism of the church requires three actions, and that by immersion. If I take a candidate into the water and say, "I baptize thee in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," he is only immersed in the name of the Holy Ghost. Father and Son are rejected by this mode of baptism; because the candidate has been baptized only in the single name.

The church of Christ always baptizes by immersion. Any other mode is not baptism in any sense; and cannot be construed as such in any language whatever. Then sprinkling is not baptism, and those who maintain it are not the church of Christ. The church of Christ is governed by Christ's example; he was baptized in the water; consequently no other mode is baptism. All who have been sprinkled in their infancy, and trust in it, are living under strong delusion: they have been made to believe a lie.

John Wesley placed great confidence in baptism. Hear him upon the subject: "Baptism is not only an initiatory rite into the church, but it is the means by which we receive the great inward change by the Holy Spirit." How Mr. Wesley works out his faith in regard to infants I am at a loss to know, as a little infant cannot exercise faith nor repentance, and cannot experience this change of heart. Perhaps his adherents can give us some light upon the subject. The true church of Christ knows nothing of infant baptism. It was never taught, neither was it practiced by Christ or his disciples. So then it is the invention of man and consequently does not belong to the church of Christ.

The church of Christ follows him in all his teaching: "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." Those who do not what Christ commanded them are not his friends—not his church, nor any part of it.

The church of Christ teach the doctrine of non-resistance, as did their Master. Now take a view of the different sects. They are called churches; they are churches. But what is meant by the term church. The term has no reference whatever to christianity. The Greek word, which in the English version is translated church, is ekklesia, and means an assembly of persons. The purpose for which they convened, stamped on the assembly its true character: if to consult on trade, it was commercial; if to make laws, it was legislative. There is not a particle of Christianity attached to the term church; it may be an ekklesia of murder. But Christ has an ekklesia, which meets by his authority, and is governed by his teaching, and his alone. They claim him as their Lord and Master: they do not claim Luther, or Calvin, or Wesley, as expositors. The conflicting opinions of those clashing systems is a proof that they never emanated from Christ; hence they are not the church of Christ and no part of it. God save a deluded world.

PROFANITY never did any man the least good. No man is richer, or happier, or wiser for it. It commends no one to society; it is disgusting to the refined, and abominable to the good.

FEW qualifications are either more desirable or more rare, than the qualification to be old.

My Visit to the Brethren near Zanesville Muskingum County, Ohio.

February 23rd, I left home for engagements made at the Goshen meeting-house. I arrived at brother Manley Roberts' 24th, in the evening, in company with brother Samuel Miller from Coshocton, Ohio, went to the meeting-house. Elder Arnold met me there, and remained until Monday. Elder E. Horne, Jr., also came to the meeting on Wednesday evening, remained till next day. The meeting commenced on Saturday evening 24th, continued until Thursday night. Our meeting was well attended the greater part of the time, and good attention; as much so as any series of meetings I have attended this winter, and this is the fourth one.

On Tuesday night, during the meeting, Brother Prince's daughter Caroline, and brother E. Horne's daughter Amanda 13 years old, gave their hearts to God. Brother Horne, while exhorting the congregation said, "The very spot where my dear companion lay cold in death before this stand while the funeral discourse was preached, is the very spot where my dear young daughter is convicted to God through Jesus Christ. Glory to God!" said he. It appears brother Horne's cup of sorrow had been full and run over at the time his best friend on earth lay in the silent embraces of death. And no wonder! But now, at the same place where his heart overflowed with sorrow, the same heart, at this meeting was filled with joy; yes, full and run over, on account of his dear little daughter giving her heart to Jesus.

Next day Alonzo L. Vickers came out on the Lord's side; and the same night, his wife, Sarah M. came out also and desired membership Brother Vickers and wife had been members of the Methodist Episcopal church. Next day (Thursday,) it being very cold, some thought sister Sarah could not stand the cold water, her child being only five weeks old. Her mother thought it impossible, (she being a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. They, sometimes, to hear them talk, are all faith; but when it comes to immersion they can't believe. How strange this is!) But we went to the water and baptized them. Same evening sister Sarah and her husband were at meeting all right. Our meeting then closed, leaving quite an interest for good among the people. The church was much revived at Goshen. May the Lord water with the dews of heaven. This is the eastern part of the Jonathan's Creek Church, where Elder John Roberts lived. His wife, Catharine, is still living. She is about 74 years old, in reasonable health, having a bright prospect of a blessed immortality beyond this world. How sweet it is to converse with a child of God, and heir of heaven, homeward bound for a crown of glory. Elder Elijah Horne, Sr., is the minister in this part of the Church a very excellent brother. He lives near the Station Dellcarbo, C. & M. V. R. R. The brethren here are very zealous, all alive to Christ; have their social meetings. The Lord help them to continue faithful till death; a crown of life they shall have. Dear brethren and sisters, how sublime the spectacle of a human being approaching the throne of grace to pour his woes and wants, not into an angel's ears, but into the listening ear of God himself! It must be a source of wonder to the cherubic hosts, as from their dazzling stations they behold the Lord giving audience to a poor, wounded child of earth, listening to the story of his wrongs, and stooping down from his infinite height to pour salvation into the afflicted spirit. Where is sublimity, if not here?

Arrived home on the 2d inst., found all well: thank God.

Warning to Tipplers.

It is necessary to make a few remarks on this subject; for we see every day how many have to perish from the abundant use of strong drink.

In a short period of time past, I have noticed several accidents that were caused by strong drink only; and in particular one that occured in my neighborhood, of which I was an eye-witness. I shall here give a brief account of the accident:

A man in my neighborhood pretty well advanced in age, and father of a family of thirteen children, ten of which are surviving, was at a sale on the 13th day of February last. He was quite a sober man, while entering the yard. A short time after, I talked with him and he was yet quite sensible, as far as I could percevie; but in a very short time afterwards, probably thirty minutes, he was lying in a state of drunkenness, until almost everybody was gone. He was sent off homeward, but as he had to cross a stream of water which was much swollen, and bore along floating masses of ice, he was drowned. His horse was at home the next day, but the father of the family was not. This rather excited alarm, and a number of persons soon gathered and hunted for him. He was however not found until the 11th day after he was lost.

My dear readers, how I wish I could impress on your minds what remarkable and lamentable scene it was, all the time he was searched for! Hundreds of people were assembled; some in search of the lost man, others merely as spectators. Indeed it was a pitiful scene, to witness what exertions were made for the sake of the lost man.

But the burial hour was the most remarkable. It is supposed that almost one thousand persons were gathered together. The scene was interesting but solemn indeed. The wife and children that are left behind, mourn the loss of the husband and father. Should it happen that any of us should be caught in the same snare, we could have no blessing except what the preacher speaketh, which lasts only until to the appeal.

Oh, what a warning should it be to those that have seen the results of the unlucky man! May they not be tempted to follow in the path this unfortunate man went. Therefore I would advise all those that are tempted to such trials, to refer to the lost man.

The True Religious Spirit.—As the sunlight tints the flower and colors the rock—as it alternately sparkles in the dew-drops and shines in the broad ocean—so the true religious spirit should be present in the humblest bargain, the lowliest word of kindness, as much as in the great songs of Hebrew bards and the profound teachings of St. Paul, those ancient headlands of Christian thought.

"Until He Come."

"As often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come."

By Christ redeemed, in Christ restored,
We keep the memory adored,
And show the death of our dear Lord,
Until he come.

His Body, broken in our stead,
Is here in this Memorial Bread;
And so our feeble love is fed,
Until he come.

His fearful drops of agony,
His life-blood shed for us we see;
The wine shall tell the mystery,
Until he come.

And thus the dark betrayal-night,
With the last Advent we unite—
The shame, the glory—by this rite,
Until he come.

Until the trump of God be heard,
Until the ancient graves be stirred,
And with the great, commanding word,
The Lord shall come.

O blessed hope! with this elate,
Let not our hearts be desolate,
But strong in faith, in patience wait
Until he come.

Five years ago I was the only brother living in this section of country; having about twenty miles to the Meeting-house, or main body of the brethren. I often became discouraged, as we did not get to meeting often; but finally brethren commenced to move in one after another, and now we number twenty-seven members.

My object in writing is this: inasmuch as the season of year is near at hand that emigration westward will commence, we would earnestly request brethren moving west to come and see our country; and especially ministering brethren, as we are rather weak in the ministerial department, having only one speaker, and he young in the ministry.

Now brethren, you that sit, a half dozen or more, behind the table, some of you come where your help is much needed, as there is a large field of labor here. As for the country, I think we have as fine prairie country as can be found; a good, productive soil, well adapted to all kinds of grain; well watered; in short, I think we have all the advantages generally found in a prairie country. Land can be purchased at reasonable prices, convenient to market, &c.

We live three miles South of the Northern Pacific Rail-road, four and a half miles South-East of State Centre. Ministering brethren traveling west or east, are earnestly requested to stop with us and give us a few meetings. Brother D. Deardorff, from Ills., was with us in the month of January, and gave us five meetings, stirred up our pure minds by way of remembrance.

In conclusion, let us all earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the Saints; for I think the time has come that men will not endure sound doctrine.

Affections, like spring flowers break through the frozen ground at last; and the heart which seeks but for another heart to make it happy will never seek in vain.

It is a great blunder in the pursuit of happiness not to know that we have got it; that is, not to be content with a reasonable and possible measure of it.

Flattery is an ensnaring quality, and leaves a very danguroas impression. It swells a man's imagination entertains his vanity, and drives him to doting upon his own person.

Benefit your friends that they may love you still more dearly; benefit your enemies that they may become your friends.

It is evidence of great hardness to be more concerned about our sufferings than our sins.

Happiness is a perfume that one cannot shed over another without a few drops falling on one's self.

Look upward and onward. We, learn to climb by keeping our eyes, not on the valleys that lie behind, but on the mountains that rise before us.

Deep is the joy of social silence when we speak not with the loved but feel their presence.

Happy Woman.—What spectacle more pleaseing does the earth afford than a happy woman contented in her sphere, ready at all times to benefit her little world by her exertions, and transforming the briars and thorns of life into roses of Paradise by the magic of her touch? There are those who are thus happy because they cannot help it—no misfortunes can damp their sweet smiles, and they diffuse a cheerful glow around them, as they pursue the even tenor of their way. What their condition is makes no difference. They may be rich or poor, high or low, admired or forsaken by the fickle world; but the sparkling fountain of happiness bubles up in their hearts, and makes them radiantly beautiful.

Thankfulness.—If one should give me a dish of sand and tell me there were particles of iron in it, I might look for them with my eyes and search for them with my clumsy fingers, and be unable to detect them; but let me take a magnet and sweep through it, and it would draw to itself the most inevitable particles by mere power of attraction. The unthankful heart, like a finger in the sand, discovers no mercies; but let the thankful heart sweep through the day, and as the magnet finds the iron, so it will find, in every hour, some heavenly blessings, only the iron in heaven's sand is gold.

Liberality does not consist in good words, but in good works.

Beware of the man or woman with a fixed smile. Trust the most hideous scowler before the being who goes about with an angelic grin carefully exhibited to all eyes, under any and every circumstance. It is not natural to smile perpetually, and no one ever assumes a mask without being conscious of a necessity for concealment. There are young women, and and a few old men, who break out into a smile whenever they speak. These are not the people I mean. The smile I warn you is a motionless, hypocritical, fixed expression.

Paying of debts is one of the best means in the world to deliver you from a thousand temptations to sin and vanity. Pay your debts, and you will not have wherewith to purchase a costly toy or a pernicious pleasure. In one word, pay your debts, and you will of necessity abstain from many indulgences which would certainly end in the utter destruction both of soul and body.

Sensual pleasures are like soap bubbles, sparkling, evanescent. The pleasures of intellect are calm, beautiful, sublime, ever enduring, and climbing upward to the borders of the unseen world.

Plagiary.

Dear Brethren:—You are doubtless aware of many of the difficulties that contributors to the columns of your worthy paper must encounter. Some of them are charged (sometimes justly and sometimes falsely) with plagiarism—literary theft, i. e. using other men's thoughts and language and palming them off as their own property. I have not the scholarship to define the line between original and borrowed ideas; will leave that matter with men of learning—Webster, Worcester, for instance; at least for those who think that man is of himself originator of anything. I judge, that in order to be entirely free from the servility of imitation, not only in writing, but in almost everything we do, we must occupy a position which amounts to nothing—an impossibility. However, for the sake of peace and convenience I will admit that a line has been fixed by man, which they say divides the literary territory in regard to the ownership of it. This line does not divide surfaces nor solids; it is found only by comparing the possessions claimed by two or more individuals. If they are alike in certain respects, there is no line of division, and both are said to belong to one person; and they should always be allotted to the one who originated (stole or produced) them at the beginning. As real estate—lands, houses, and other property—is possessed by individuals, who contend that they are the sole proprietors of it, but are deceived, because these things belong to everybody, and really to nobody but God—except the unfruitful works of darkness which Satan may justly claim—so literature is also possessed, or claimed, by those who think there is more worth in it than in other things. They sometimes think they have discovered and secured for their own an idea which is entirely new, when there is in reality nothing new under the sun; verily "it hath been already of old time which was before us." And if it is worthy, God is the originator and owner of it He has only leased it to his creature man. So the "world and the fullness thereof" is God's, and as he has placed it before man for his special benefit, if he puts forth his hand to obey the laws concerning it, so he has placed knowledge before man for his good, if he uses it according to directions. I believe that the faithful christian will select from the world, and what is done in it, that which he needs to accomplish the purpose of his being, namely, the salvation of his soul, and thus, not only his own but the souls of many that hear him. His communications will not be corrupt, but they will be the consequence of impressions made upon him directly by the word of God. He will acknowledge that in his flesh (or in anybody else's flesh) dwelleth no good thing; but that every thing which is worthy is by the permission of God, selected and received from him. The servant of Christ will always have a zealous and a jealous concern for the kingdom of Christ; therefore he will lay hold upon every thing that belongs to Chirist to bring it into and to keep it in his kingdom—in his church. It is the business of the brethren of the Lord Jesus to see to his interest, and thus to their own. If there is any good thing without the pales of the church—if anything has been stolen that now lies hidden among thieves, it is time for those who are aware of it to bring it back to the owner and confess their folly; for every secret thing will shortly be made known at any rate.

Satan, the author of theft and every other evil, is very artful, cunning, and in a great degree successful in carrying out his plans. He does not leave the creature entirely destitute in this life, (in which condition every unconverted persons really is.) No; because when we see the truth we fly to Christ, and not to the devil; therefore he leaves those who are religiously inclined to enjoy all the good gifts of God, except the one thing needful, and even this he allows them to enjoy at times, when such a course is his last opportunity. Thus he operates, stealing from individuals and societies, who are perhaps in a great measure, in some respects, inclined to serve God, keeping them in a condition which is destitute only of the most important items necessary to save the soul. Satan is the great arch-enemy of souls—the destructive power, and the author of confusion. He selects from the church, or from societies, or religious sects, that part of the truth which is most conducive to his interest in those quarters, and mixes it with error in other districts, where there would otherwise be danger of loss to him.

But God is the author of peace, the Savior of all that trust in Him and obey Him. He will protect, guide, and direct every way-faring soul that is sincere in its desire to come to Him and be saved; "In every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted with him." He has sent his Son to die for the special benefit of all such that will come to his knowledge and be saved. He has sent his angels to those who called upon his name and continued in well-doing, to guide them still farther in the ways of truth; and even now he will send his Holy Spirit to comfort and lead all who draw nigh unto him with a true heart. Happiness.

That the mind of man was formed for engagement, we have no right to doubt. It naturally seeks some object which will insure the greatest amount of happiness. It naturally shuns misery pain and distress, in its various forms. All of the human family are in search of happiness, some in one way and some in another. The miser seeks happiness in adding to his already well filled coffers. His greatest pleasure is to count his perhaps ill-gotten treasures, and longs earnestly for more. The lover of Fashion continues the round of pleasure and gaiety, ever seeking happiness in that way, though it leaves a sting behind. The lover of learning seeks happiness in storing the mind with useful knowledge, but he may be called away before he reaches the goal he is in search of.

True and lasting happiness is not to be found in the pursuit of earthly pleasures, wealth, or fame; though they may glitter for a moment, as crystals upon the shining snow, or bubbles floating high in the air. To be truly happy, the mind must be raised above things of earth, and be placed upon some object worthy of admiration. Our Creator alone can be worthy of all love and adoration, the great centre of all our affections. In cultivating the true born principle of love to God and good works to our brothers, true and lasting happiness is obtained.

To improve and cultivate our minds, both morally and physically, is necessary to true, lasting, and perfect happiness. But the human family have lost that pure and unsullied happiness they once enjoyed in the garden, by tasting of the forbidden fruit while there. So none are perfectly happy; so marred by sin in this world of sorrow and temptation.

The wise men of a certain age, once sought a country where perfect beings dwelt, who were always perfectly happy—a country where the climate was so delightful, the atmosphere so pure, that its inhabitants would never be sick— a climate adapted to a race both perfect and beautiful, such a race as were once placed in the garden of Eden. These sought for such a country, where its inhabitants would be free from sorrow sin, and, of course, would enjoy perfect happiness; but they sought in vain, for no such spot could be found on this earth. But, dear friends we can point you to a fair and happy country, where the inhabitants are always truly happy. But the way to this country is sometimes rough, and attended with some difficulties. High heaving billows of adversity sometimes roll over our path, and it seems that our frail bark must sink in the waves of despair; but when the storm blows over, and the sweet and precious promises shine forth in the glorious sunshine of gospel truth, we take fresh courage, and start anew for Cannaan's happy land, where all who reach that delightful country, do enjoy pure and lasting happiness. Jesus the Son of God has laid the way. He came to this earth, and led a life of sorrow and benevolence and sacrificed his life, and secured an entrance into the celestial mansions, where all are truly happy. Those who in this world follow Jesus, and "Do his Father's will" shall finally enter in through the pearly gates, into the celestial city, to walk those golden streets, with crowns upon their heads set with many stars—golden harps in their hands, touched with ethereal fingers, accompanied by their perfect voices, praising and adoring their Creator, throughout the endless ages of eternity. Is this not sufficient to compensate us for all we are called on to suffer in this life, while sojourning in this world of sorrow? May we all reach this beautiful city, and range the fields of the new earth, and forever be perfectly happy.

Lawful Interest.

In one of the numbers of the present volume of Christian Family Companion, brother Noah B. Blough asks a question to be answered by the brethren, on the above subject. Having misplaced the number which contained the query, I of course will not be able to repeat here verbatim; but the substance, as far as remembered, is something like this: "Is it right for a brother to take more than lawful interest from poor brethren?" Were this query stated whether wrong to take more than lawful interest, then I would wish the brethren might be silent; but as it stands, it ought to be discussed; for we want light on every subject which presents itself to us. To be silent would show that the brethren are afraid to say or express their views on it. And have they no reason to be afraid? I think they have.

Here is a poor brother, who has, on more than one occasion, borrowed money from his wealthy brethren, and paid more than lawful interest. Of course he feels certain if he condemns this custom he will give them an excuse to refuse money altogether in the future. Simple as this may read, it nevertheless is true; therefore he is silent.

Again, here is the rich brother, who has taken all the interest he could get on money put out. Of course he will not condemn himself.

But do we our duty by keeping silent? No, brethren, let us have light on this subject; if wrong, let us abandon it altogether; if right give us good ground for it, so as to convince all, that all may do as brethren should do, to do all alike. We profess to be the followers of Jesus, claim to be governed only by his law and teaching; after all this we differ on such a point. But to the question, "Is it right for a brother to take more than lawful interest from poor brethren?"

I answer: It is not, from the fact that the word of God, which should be our guide in all things, says the contrary. When tax collectors gathered around the Lord for instruction, the answer was, "Take not more than is lawful." No doubt if our wealthy brethren, would ask the Lord how much interest they should take, the answer would be, "Not more than is lawful."

Secondly, it is wrong because the custom did not originate within the church, but was first introduced by worldly-minded men. Some of the brethren, who would like to love God and Mammon at the same time, saw that their treasure would increase a little faster by taking more than what was lawful, and so this custom spread, until to-day we see very little difference between brethren and outsiders. And what is worse, we sometimes see brethren who are very strict in other points, but in this they will not be governed by the Gospel, or by the decisions of the brethren assembled in Annual Council. More than this, we see that these brethren are under the impression, sometimes, that Bankers and Brokers can not be Christians. And why not? Just because these Bankers do in public what these brethren do in private. As I said in the outstart, if the question would be asked whether wrong in all cases to take more than lawful interest, I would not say anything; for we know, that whenever we go to the bank to transact business, we must come up to their rules. We make ourselves acquainted with those rules before we go to these places; but whenever we approach a brother, we look to him to do, not more than what is right, and of course we must admit what is not lawful is not right. We would suggest to those brethren who take more than lawful interest, to petition to the law-making powers of the land to change the law so as to suit their own taste; if not this, let them by all means get the next Annual Council to repeal all former decisions given on this subject, and let the decision be, "Let those who have money to lend out on interest get as much interest as they possibly can."

Brethren, give us your views on the subject. We know money is very powerful; but let it not get strong enough to make a slave of us. Do not give it the power to bind us hand and tongue, so as to be unable to give the fast increasing Satan's plan at least a fair consideration. You that are wealthy, stop for a few moments and remember that soon the messenger of death will come and make all rich and poor alike. And whose will it be which you have heaped up? Again I say, let us do only that which is in conformity with the law, both human and divine.

Obedience in Children.

It is unspeakable what a blessing it is to a child, what a saving of unhappiness and wickedness in after life, to be early taught absolute obedience; there must be no hesitating or asking why, but what a mother says must at once be done. The young twig bends easily, but remember that, in after years, it grows hard, and you will break it before you can bend it. A little steadiness at first will save you many years' of sorrow. While you insist upon obedience, however, you must take care that you do not provoke a child, and tempt it to disobedience, by unreasonable and foolish commands. "Provoke not your children to wrath," and when it is necessary to punish them, see that it never be done violently and in passion, but as a duty.

Danger of Riches.

We lay it down as a maxim of eternal truth, that no rich man can be safe or saved, who is not also a benevolent man. If this be not the case, why did Jesus say to his disciples, "Verily I say unto you, that a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven"? And again he said, "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God." Well might his disciples in amazement ask, "Who then can be saved"? Riches are dangerous. It is difficult for a rich man to be saved; but it is possible: it is impossible with men, but possible with God. Men may preach to, admonish, and pray for, the rich, but they will not hear, nor amend their ways. With the Laodiceans of old they say, "We are rich, and increased in goods and have need of nothing." But when God undertakes their case; when he visits them with disease, and pestilence, and fire, they may possibly see their real condition—that they are "wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked." It is possible. Thank God for the possibility.

Even in this life the rich are frequently unhappy, wretched, miserable. These attend opulent, selfish, luxurient, fashionable life everywhere. This is abundantly testified by the sighs that continuously ascend from the couches of the wealthy.

Tell us not that others suffer too. Do not tell us that the poor, the needy, the destitute, and the forlorn are also miserable. The cases are not parallel, and we cannot endure it. The poor have a lot that is hard to bear. Suffering, houseless, friendless mortals! They eat the bread of penury; they drink the cup of want; their children are clothed in rags and wander about unshod—shivering with cold and fainting with hunger. We do not wonder at the sighs of the poor. No marvel that they should groan.

But why should the rich, who are surrounded by all the temporal good that heart could desire, we ask, why should they be unhappy? Good reason why. They have grown selfish in their affluence; they have severed the bond that ought to unite wealth with pity and mercy, and power with usefulness. They have learned to hug their treasures, to worship at the shrine of mammon, instead of sympathizing with their suffering fellow mortals, and imitating God, the possessor and dispenser of blessings.

But why are riches dangerous? Because, in the language inspiration, "They that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is the root of all evil: which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows." 1 Tim. 6: 9, 10 "Labor not to be rich: cease from thine own wisdom. Wilt thou set thine eyes upon that which is not? for riches certainly make to themselves wings; they fly away as an eagle toward heaven." Prov. 23: 4, 5. "Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are motheaten. Your gold and silver is cankered, and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasures together for the last days. Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth; and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth. Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth; ye have nourished your hearts as in a day of slaughter." James 5: 1—5.

What, then, shall the rich do? "Thus saith the Lord, Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, neither let the mighty man glory in his might; let not the rich man glory in his riches; but let him that glorieth glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth me, that I am the Lord which exercise loving-kindness, judgment, and righteousness, in the earth; for in these things I delight, saith the Lord." Jer. 9: 23, 24.

We "charge them that are rich in this world; that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy. That they do good; that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate; laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life." 1 Tim. 6: 17, 19. "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich." 2 Cor. 8: 9. Here is the philanthropy of Jesus; here is an example of self-denial indeed. Here, too, we behold the mind of Christ—the spirit of Christ. We are admonished to deny ourselves—to have the mind of Christ; and we are solemnly assured, that, if we have not the mind of Christ, we are none of his. No man, with a mind open to instruction and a heart desiring to know the truth, can read the fore-going scriptures, without seeing that God's anathema rests upon the love of money—his curse upon those who trust in riches. Examine yourselves, therefore, and let not your eyes be given to sleep, until you know that you are free from the vile idolatry.

This is no Dun. Read It.

We do not publish duns. They are useless. Nobody takes them to himself. Everybody thinks they are intended for everybody but himself.

But we do wish there were some way by which we could collect about two thousand dollars that is due us in amounts of one to fifty dollars, scattered over twenty different states. The first day of April is coming when everybody will want his dues, and we will have to pay. No pleadings of hard times, scarcity of money, or slow paying patrons will avail us anything. "We have drawn on you for $ ———, at sight. Please honor." And it must be honored, even if it does cost us twelve per cent. Wonder if it is really necessary that we should wait so long on our patrons. Wonder if it would not be easier for each one of them to raise a dollar and a half for subscription to the Companion, or seventy-five cents for a Hymn Book, or ten cents for an Almanac, than it is for us to borrow fifteen hundred dollars and pay usury. One of these must be done. Our delinquent customers will decide which. Let them do it soon.

Papers Wanted.

We are short of No. 48 of last year (Vol. 7) for our files. In endeavoring to give the remaining numbers of last year to new subscribers, we run ourselves so short that we are now suffering a severe loss. Will not some of those who may have that No. in good order, and yet not have the full volume, let us have several copies of said number. We cannot have the volume bound until we secure them. not originate from impressions made upon the mind by the word of the Lord.

Back Numbers.

Two Hundred Subcribers Wanted!

Expecting a large increase to our subscription list we prepared for it by printing a number of copies more than were actually needed, in order to be able to furnish back numbers. Now there are about two hundred still remaining on our hands; and we must soon cut down the issue to our actual list. Before doing so we make this appeal to our friends. Will not one out of every twenty of our friends send us a new subscriber who will take the back numbers of the present volume? Please make the effort friends. (tf.)

Apprentices Wanted.

We wish to secure several apprentices to the printing business. They may be either male or female, of the ages of 16 to 18. Members of the church preferred, and none but those friendly to the church need apply. (tf.)

Salisbury Independent.

We have received the first number of a paper published at Salisbury, this county, entitled the Salisbury Independent, published by Subrie & Smith. It presents a neat and tasty appearance, mechanically, and offers assurance of success. They also announce their ability to do job printing. Salisbury is giving other evidences of enterprise, and with the completion of the branch Railroad, will no doubt greatly enlarge its borders.

Charity—A New Feature in Demands For.

The following note will suggest the necessity of providing some new plan for supplying the applications for copies of our paper, free or at reduced rates:

Brother Henry:—I have read the Companion for one and a half years, and should like to take it this year also; but am not able to pay the full amount for it, because I have bought a farm, and have to make up a large payment this fall. Inclosed is fifty cents; it is all I can give. I don't use tobacco or any thing intoxicating.

From a young brother in the Lord.

We should be pleased to accomodate our young brother with the Companion for a full year, but really he does not exactly come up to our standard of a proper case for public or private charity. We are glad to learn that he uses neither tobacco nor strong drink. Neither do we; still we are obliged to work along and help ourself. Nevertheless if our brother has a large payment to make on his farm, he undoubtedly has a large, good, farm, and when he will have all his payments made, he will be quite a wealthy farmer, and being a Christian brother his promise to pay even is valuable. We will therefore send him the paper, and wait until he has his farm paid for, if he will then pay us the full subscription price. If he cannot do that, we will send him fifty cents' worth of papers, and await farther orders.

But if any of our well-to-do readers think this brother should have help, and are willing to contribute to his spiritual support, we will cheerfully credit it to his name.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Brother Holsinger:—I will, by the request of an Elder in this congregation, correct some names and addresses of ministers in this part of God's vineyard. You have Benjamin Bowman, Dayton, Va., who certainly ought to be off the list. He never was a speaker in our church; he was at one time a faithful Deacon; but the enemy of souls overcame him, and he joined the Thurminites; stayed with them a few years, and he now belongs to the abominable society called Mormans. I hope you will remember this in your next Almanac. Frederick Kline is not known near Bridgewater, Va. John A. Miller, Bridgewater, Va., is not on the list. Martin Miller, Spring Creek, Va., instead of Ottobine, Va. George Wine, Sr., Bridgewater, Va., instead of Ottobine, Va. Jacob Thomas, Spring Creek, Va., instead of Ottobine, Va.

I have made these corrections out of love, hoping that all your correspondents will do the same. Then you will get all things right.

Inspirations.

BY F. M. SNYDER.

Mr. Webster has defined the word "Inspiration," as we think, correctly. But his definitionbeing rather lengthy, we will not give it here; but will give the signification of this word, as defined by another of our modern lexicographers. Inspiration, "Influence direct from God." What a world of meaning in these words! How suggestive of thought! This brief, this little pithy definition agrees with all that Webster has said, can say on inspiration, as viewed in the light of scripture. "Influence direct from God." What is of more real worth to the soul? It being inspired—informed and directed by the Holy Spirit, is indeed receiving holy influences from the great Being who created it, and is so willing to save it. Oh,the immensity of sovereign grace! God created man in his own image; breathed into him the breath of life, and he became a living soul. But that soul did not rely upon God's positive word; it fell from grace; lost the sweet influence of the Holy Spirit; forfeited its right to the tree of life; and thus brought the wrath of God Almighty upon the once happy and guiltless pair.

Hence they were driven from the happy position in which God had placed them; given over to the influence of the spirit which they suffered to entice and deceive them. But it was a matter of no little importance for God to leave humanity thus depraved. The great red dragon whose fiendish tail is represented as having wiped out of existence a part of the stars of the firmament, which perhaps represents that number, that vast number of ungodly men and women which he is dragging down the vortex of ruin, had become their tyrant and king.

And must this fiend and opposer of all good, who would draw the most intelligent part of God's crea tion down into the dark regions of dispair, be left as the guide of the only beings that God created in his own divine image?

No, indeed. The promise that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head, has carried light and joy throughout a world of woe. The blessed news from angel lips, "Unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord," has filled the most sorrowful heart with a new and living hope. Since that voice has proclaimed the glad tidings of salvation, men and women, inspired with holy zeal and activity, have set themselves to work in the vineyard of the Lord, thus advancing the noble cause of Christ, until the most sin-stricken have been made to feel the mighty power of Christ to save.

But admitting, as we do that this great work of reformation is being accomplished through inspiration of God, have we not reasons to fear that many who to-day are laboring for the welfare of souls, claim but few of the advantages of inspiration.

Perhaps, in a measure, they have received the Holy Ghost; but are they full of it? Do they perpetually feed their souls upon the bread of heaven, and drink, ever and anon, from the waters of eternal life? Do they always look directly to heaven for that endearing consolation which will cause them to pursue with undaunted courage their most excellent vocations?

Most of all, do they look to God for that sacred influence, which, when once obtained, will make their faith an active living faith; make them feel as though all they attempt to do will be done to the honor and glory of him who has promised to "work in us," and who, evidently, is willing to speak through us with the same emphasis he spake through holy men of old? If not, something of great importance is neglected: inspiration too little craved, and not enough sought for. All who claim to have have had their souls purified in obeying the truth, should see that they are in possession of the Holy Spirit; and then work with zeal in the church of Christ, in their several vocations, and thus improve their talents to wise and noble purposes, whether they be few or many. Ministers, teachers, fathers and mothers of Israel, all should be busily engaged in the cause for which Christ died.

Especially do ministers of the gospel need inspiration. They should be full of the Holy Ghost, and directed wholly by it. Then they can have the promise, in this advanced age, which God, anciently gave to Moses: "Now, therefore, go, and I will be with thy mouth, and teach thee what thou shalt say:" Ex. 4: 12.

But, says one, who perhaps has frequently addressed his fellow-beings from the inspired volume, "the days of inspiration are past. Inspired men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." Now they can but speak as talent and ability will direct them. Much mistaken indeed, such an idea manifests a want of faith. God is the same to-day, yesterday, and forever. He is just as willing to speak through you to-day as through others in ages past. And it matters little whether you have mastered all the languages, sciences, &c., or whether you are a scholar at all, if you are full of the Holy Ghost, actuated by the living faith, you need not fear that your efforts will fail to build up christians in the most holy faith, and convert sinners from the error of their ways, and cause them to rejoice in happy anticipation of eternal life. Oh, that the day may speedily come, when every minister of the gospel will look seriously at his noble vocation, and see whether they are ever receiving that direct influence from on high, which will crown their labors with continued success!

While listening to the cold and indifferent remarks of some who attempt to preach, and seeing the little effect it seems to produce on those who so much need the heavenly manna, I have been made to wish that Jesus could be again seen, with his pierced side and blood-stained hands, standing before those who are nearing the awful precipice of hell, and heard to speak to them as tenderly and with the same solemn tones of warning in which he spake to sinners of old. Brethren in the ministry, ye who are chosen to preach Christ and him crucified, can you not, will you not work more zealouslyfor the salvation of the soul? You need not study so hard as to pain every faculty of the intellect, that you may be most efficient in your field of labor. God wants zealous, warm-hearted preachers, full of the Holy Ghost, and when such are sent forth by Him he will "work through them," causing them to preach mightily the power of Christ to save. If you have not been as useful in performing the labor the Lord has assigned you, as you feel you should be, give not up in dispair. Mourn no longer over the little seeming good you have accomplished. Let your talents be poor as they may, your circumstances unfavorable as they are, labor with still more zeal. Make the sinner feel that you love him so well that you would carry him in your arms right to Jesus, while he is yet so willing to pardon, if you had the power to do so. Listen to God always, though it does require much self-denial. Shut out all influence but that which comes direct from God. Then depend upon it, God will help you. True, "we are not sufficient of ourselves, * * * but our sufficiency is of God," 2 Cor. 3: 5. Therefore be not discouraged, God will stand by you. His almighty power which holds the vast waters in the hollow of His hands, the tempestuous winds in his fists, will strengthen you sufficiently while laboring for him. Hence duty should not be considered a task. Too great is the reward to work with the least degree of disinterestedness. No one who has named the name of God in faith, should labor for God otherwise than with eager cheerfulness. Sabbath-school teachers, parents and all others who claim an interest in the church, as well as ministers of the gospel, should see that they are ever receiving a fresh supply of that divine grace, which, when obtained, will cause their influence to fall, as brilliant rays of living light, upon the dark path of those who too often are left to grope their way in sin, until it has finished its work, and brought final death.

If parents be not inspired, zealous to good works, ready to distribute to the wants of the poor, in fact, ready to engage in every known duty assigned them, their children, while growing to manhood and womanhood will, in all probability, fail to comprehend that purity and authenticity of their religion, which should distinguish them from unconverted, and of course, uninspired parents.

It is not that ever reproving voice, that scolding tongue, and that unceasing warning of sin, too often in accents of pain-inflicting, rather than a voice full of mercy and sympathetic concern, that will do the most good in bringing up children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. the mother, who is endowed with power from on high, and who is daily seeking the physical, mental, and spiritual culture of her own own dear little ones, and who is made the happiest only when an opportunity is afforded to alleviate the wants, soothe the sorrows, and calm the fears of suffering humanity, need have no fears that her efforts will be bestowed in vain. Upon the heart of such an one, God will write his precepts, fill it with his great love, so that the brilliant rays of heaven-born light will fall as the rays of the morning sun, upon those tender plants entrusted in her care, causing them to grow up Christian men and women, as so many ministering angels of God, sent forth to bear glad tidings of joy to a lost world. Ah, yes, the instruction given them by her will never be forgotten. Memory will carry them from time to eternity. God will record them in the Book of Life. Angels will sing them to heaven's redeemed Oh! could we but weigh upon the intelligent mind the importance of procuring that divine aid, that direct influence from God, which will fit men and women for that position in life, which will make their labors most efficient in the school of Christ, we feel assured that the kingdom of God would be increased with double rapidity.

Especially do we want more inspired teachers. The vast amount of good they may accomplish, will not be fully appreciated until the teacher's mission is ended on earth.

The Sunday School is becoming quite an auxiliary in the church of Christ. Children are there taught the way of Salvation; a knowledge of themselves, and of their Creator. But to teach them a knowledge of themselves—the passions they must subdue, as well as the traits they must cultivate—a knowledge of God and his attributes, teachers must be taught by God, influenced and directed wholly by him; then those whom they instruct will acquiesce a faith that will prompt them to lay aside every sin, and run with patience the Christian race.

It is, therefore highly important my Christian reader, whether you are a minister of the gospel, a teacher in the sanctuary, or a parent entrusted with the care of your own offspring, that you are influenced direct from heaven, informed and directed by the Holy Spirit, and ready to accomplish the so much needed work of reformation.

When once all the busy workers in the Lord's vineyard, labor with that ardent zeal which should characterize every Christian heart, confidently trusting God, that he will work directly through them, then and not until then will the faithful few be able to eradicate sin from the world to that extent which they are to-day so eagerly laboring for.

De Graff, Ohio.

Brother Henry:—I take much pleasure in reading the COMPANION, and especially that which tells about the welfare of the different churches and the advancement of the cause of Christ, I thought I would communicate a few thoughts concerning this branch of God's moral vineyard, namely, the Pleasant Grove congregation, Douglas county, Kansas.

I rejoice to say that the members of this congregation have been in peace, love, and union with one another ever since we have been a church, with very little exception. At the present there is nothing, and for some time back there has not been anything, to mar the feelings of any one that I know of. We number about fifty-five members in all; and from time to time our little number is increased by such as leave the ranks of the enemy and join in with us in trying to fight the good fight of faith, and securing an inheritance among all them that are sanctified, which causes much rejoicing in the church as well as among the angels of God in heaven. What is more rejoicing, knowing the terror of the Lord, than to see those going on in sin, causing his displeasure to rest upon them in consequence thereof, return and throwing themselves in that position where the favor of God will rest upon them, and where they will receive that peace and joy which the world cannot give nor take away? May the good Lord ever move upon the hearts of the unconverted, causing them, by his goodness and mercy, to return from the error of their ways, and take an interest in their souls salvation, thus fitting themselves for the many events of comnig life; for better prepared are we, if we have made our peace with God, knowing that we may be called from the stage of action at any time. Now I hope the good Lord will bless us as a church, and all other churches, and help us so to live and act that we may meet the approbation of him with whom we have to do; helping us to lay aside everything that is contrary to his heavenly and divine will, taking his word, and his word alone, for the man of our counsel, being guided by all its commandments and teachings. For unless we do live up to the requirements of the word of God in all things, the world will say of us that we are not living up to our profession; and this will retard, instead of advance the cause which we are so earnestly trying to build up. Now, dear brethren and sisters, one and all, let us try to the utmost of our ability to live up to the requirements of the word of our Lord and Master; for by so doing we will set a good example to all those with whom we associate, and thus advance the cause of Christ and his kingdom, and be instrumental, in the hands of God, in spreading the glad tidings of great joy to many a benighted soul.

May the Lord bless us all and help us to do our duty toward him and one another, is the payer of your unworthy brother.

Heaven is a place of rest from sin;
But all who hope to enter there,
Must here that holy cause begin,
Which shall their souls for rest prepare.

GEORGE SHANK.

Lawrence, Kan.

Dear Brother Holsinger:—Through a sense of duty to my fellow-beings and to the brethren and friends among whom I lately sojourned, I will try and write a few lines to the readers of the Companion. I will say, first, that my son and daughter have been attending Salem College during the fall and winter. On the 20th of February I received a telegram from my son that his sister was very sick, and that he wished me to come immediately. I accordingly made preparation, left home in the morning of the 20th and arrived at Bourbon at 8 o'clock a. m., on the 21st. Without much trouble I found the residence of brother K. Heckman, where my daughter lay sick. I met brother Heckman returning from his breakfast to the store, whom I recognized by his appearance and habiliment. He returned with me. My son being in the sick chamber with his sister, hearing my voice in an adjoining room, came out and fell around my neck, and we both wept. Tears of joy mingled with sorrow, flowed freely. I was then led to the bed chamber of my dear daughter, and to my joy I found her much better; so much so, that she was enabled to receive her old father with outstretched arms, to embrace him. I was then introduced to sister Heckman and family, and some who came there to visit my daughter. During that day many of the female students of Salem College visited her, as well as Prof. Allen. It seemed that my presence had a soothing effect on my daughter; for she recovered from her illness very fast; so much so, that she was able to be up and do a little work before I left Bourbon. In the evening of the first day, I had the exquisite joy in meeting our dear brother F. P. Loehr, from Michigan, who had been there about a week. He kindly invited me to accompany him to the College next morning, which I accepted. I was made happy, on witnessing the morning exercise, which was by reading a chapter from God's word, and singing a hymn out of the Brethren's Hymn Book, and a very appropriate prayer offered to the throne of grace, by brother Gans, who is teacher in the College. I was much affected and pleased, the way the school is conducted. I could say a great deal that would or should forever put to silence the opponents of the Brethren's School at Bourbon, but space forbids. At recess or noon when we were ready to depart, I found that friend Arnold, with whom I was acquainted in youth, was waiting for me with horse and buggy to take me to his residence, where I was introduced to his excellent and happy family, with whom I partook of an excellent dinner; and in the afternoon was happily entertained by his two daughters, with music, whose sweet voices I will not soon forget. Saturday night, the 24th, I had the joy of listening to a sermon delivered by brother Joseph Leedy, from near Plymouth, who preached the word with power and in its purity. I was with the Brethren and citizens of Bourbon from Wednesday morning until Monday evening; and during my stay I did not hear one vulgar or profane word uttered. I would say to the Brethren everywhere, fear not to send your children to Salem College; for since I put my foot on American soil, I never found better and purer society than at Bourbon. To the brethren and sisters and citizens of Bourbon I would say, that I am thankful for the many favors I received. May kind providence, in his infinite goodness reward you abundantly; and if we never meet on earth again, may we all so live, that we may meet in the bright realms of bliss, to part no more. I left Bourbon on Monday evening, my daughter having recovered so as to accompany me to the depot, at 6 20, and arrived home on Wednesday about noon. Found all well.

In much love, I remain your unworthy brother and fellow-pilgrim to a better world.

DANIEL TRUMP.

"HOW TO GO WEST."

Forty years ago, Illinois was as far West as most people wished to go, and journeys were made in the legendary "Prairie Schooner," but in these days of Progress and Improvement, the word West has come to mean Iowa. Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, California, and the Territories, and the Traveler reaches almost any point therein by a splendid Line of Railroad.

This Line of Railroad is the Burlington Route, which starts from Chicago over the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R., from Indianapolis, over the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western Short Line, and from Logansaort, over the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw R. R., and running through BURLINGTON, reaches Omaha. Lincolen, Nebraska City, St. Joseph, Atchison, Leavenworth and Kansas City, connecting with the Union Pacific, Kansas Pacific and other Railroads running from those cities.

Always go "By way of Burlington" and you will be sure to be right.

The Burlington Route has admirably answered the question, "How to go West?" by the publication of a truthful and interesting document, filled with facts in regard to Time, Connections, Accommodations, rates of Fare, and otner interesting items and illustrated by a large map, truthfully showing the whole West, which they distribute free of charge. Copies, and additional information can be obtained by addressing, General Passenger Agent. B. & M. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

THE

Christian Family Companion.

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

The way, The truth, And the Life.

THE WAY.

With longing heart I turned my footsteps toward
A land where endless joy and rest abound.
Dimly mine eyes discerned its distant hills
With everlasting strength and beauty crowned.
But wide between my feet and its bright shore
The billows of a restless sea did roll.
To crush my heart and terrify my soul.
"How shall I reach the Lord?" I cried, mid all
The sore temptations which around me lay.
With sweet distinctness to my spirit came
In answer; and I found in Christ the way.

THE TRUTH.

Conducted by strange guides my restless soul
Was often led through regions vast and new,
Where stately palaces upraised their heads.
And finest landscapes opened to the view.
Joyful it lingered, hoping that its long
And tear-sought rest was found at last;
But soon its anxious gaze, all those Enchanting landscapes were dissolved, and fast
Were all the gorgeous palaces transformed
To whitened sepulchers, where foul decay
Was hidden. "Where shall I turn from the false hopes
Which seek to lead my soul astray?"
This prayed my heart, and lo! I found the truth
In Christ, in whom I found the way.

THE LIFE.

Looking abroad, I saw that every where Youth turned age, and beauty lost its bloom
Death and corruption seemed to reign supreme.
And earth itself was like a mighty tomb.
"Oh what is life, and where shall it be found?"
"In me": the answer came, "I am the Life".
And in the still, small voice, I recognized
Once more my Lord. Then ceased the strife.
How great the triune gift by mercy given—
The blessed way which is in Jesus found;
The precious truth, eternal and divine;
The wondrous life, where matchless joys abound.
A glorious trinity, born of Christ's love
And with Jehovah's smile forever crowned.

For the COMPANION.

A Hundred years to come.

By J. Y. EISENBERG.

The above subject has very frequently been under contemplation; hence why we select it for a subject. We hope, by the blessing of God, that we may say such things that may be to his glory and the building up of Zion. The winter is very rapidly passing by; and those of us who have been enjoying good health, can hardly realize that it is so near spring. Yet how many with whom we associated have passed away through the winter. We can call to mind quite a number from the little infant to the aged grandmother.

Oh, how important is time! We most assuredly have no time to waste in worldly enjoyments, which only please but to cause grief.

Dear reader, are you on the Lord's side? Are you laying up treasure in heaven by obeying the Lord Jesus Christ and keeping all his commandments? If not, when do you intend to begin? When you are old and cannot serve Satan any longer? or, at some more convenient season?

Why not just now? Procrastination is the thief of time. The poet says:

"If you tarry till you're better,
You will never come at all."

If you refuse now, where will your poor soul be a hundred years to come? Remember, the days of man are three score and ten, at most, four score years; yet are they labor and sorrow.

Dear Reader, you are at the youngest ten years old, commence to obey him now, just now. You are not certain that you will live until to morrow, though you may live a number of years yet. But why not commence to obey him who upholds the very earth on which we live and move by his power? Can there be any loss in coming to Christ while you are young?

"'Twill save us from a thousand snares,
To mind religion young;
With grace it crowns succeeding years,
And makes our virtue strong."

Again, by putting off repentance another day, you have one day more to repent of, and one day less to repent in. You are in danger of dying in your sins: then where God and Christ are you never can come. But why spend your few years out of Christ? You have no real enjoyment. If you frequent the ball-room you pay dearly for your enjoyment with remorse afterwards. When you hear of the death of your giddy associates, you are made to feel very sad.

Again you may be in the road of others, coming to the Lord. Come to Jesus just now; read his word; commence with a prayerful heart, and read, and your path will be made plain; because the Lord says so: "Take my yoke upon you and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and you shall find rest." "For my yoke is easy and my burden is light."

Dear brethren and friends, a century hence, we all, who are so active in the busy scene of life, will have paid the debt of nature, and have gone to our reward. May it be a crown of life, which is pure and unfading, and that passeth not away, is our earnest prayer. May God grant that some one at least who reads this, may make up his mind to be ready to meet the bridegroom when he cometh. "The Spirit and the Bride say, Come; and let him that heareth say, Come; and whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."

The Lost Power.

Having seen several articles written in reference to miracles, I thought I would write a reply to the same, out of love, as I am well acquainted with brother Grove, the authur of the articles. Has the word of God been confirmed? If it has, how was it confirmed? By signs and miracles. "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him; God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will?" Heb. 2: 3, 4. If this is not sufficient evidence to confirm our faith, if one would rise from the dead we would not believe. We cannot look for a second confirmation of the scriptures by miracles. But in the latter days, we may look for false porphets among the people, "as there shall be false teachers among you;" 2 Pet. 2: 1. And as prophecy has ceased, miracles have also ceased: "Whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away;" 1 Cor. 13: 8. But the miracles that are to be worked in the latter days, shall be worked by the power of the devil, to defeat, if possible, the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

This we design to prove by divine revelation. "And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth; and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon, and exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth and those which dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed. And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven in the sight of men, And deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast; those miracles are worked by the power of the devil, to draw the people of God, from the scriptures that have been confirmed to us, by miracles, through the power of the living God;" Rev. 13: 11—14. God works no miracles to confirm what has been confirmed. By referring to Rev. 16: 13, 14, we read, "And I saw three unclean spirts, like frogs, come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. They are the spirits of the devils, working miracles; which go forth unto the Kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty." And as the devil has power to work miracles in the latter days, if preaching has the power, how would you distinguish which is worked by the power of God or by the devil? When these come to pass they will deceive the whole world, except those who have their name written in the book of life. The Mosaic dispensation was confirmed by miracles worked by God through Moses. The gospel dispensation was confirmed by signs and wonders, by Jesus Christ and his Apostles. We have imposters plenty, who declare that the commands of Jesus Christ, are nonessential to salvation.

HENRY KOONTZ.

The Golden Shore.

There is many a rest in the road of life,
If we would only stop to take it;
And many a tone from the better land,
If the querulous heart would make it!
To the sunny soul that is full of hope,
And whose beautiful trust ne'er faileth,
The grass is green and the flowers are bright,
Though the wintry storm prevaileth.

Better to hope, though the clouds hang low,
And keep the eyes still lifted;
For the sweet blue sky will soon peep through,
When the ominous clouds are rifted!
There was never a night without a day,
Or an evening without a morning;
And the darkest hour, as the proverb goes,
Is the hour before the dawning.

There is many a gem in the path of life,
Which we pass in idle pleasure,
That is richer far than the jeweled crown,
Or the miser's hoarded treasure;
It may be the love of a little child,
Or a mother's prayer to Heaven,
Or only a beggar's grateful thanks,
For a cup of water given.

Better to weave in the web of life
A bright and golden filling,
And to do God's will with a ready heart,
And hands that are swift and willing,
Than to snap the minute, delicate threads
Of our curious life asunder,
And then blame Heaven for the tangled ends,
And sit, and grieve, and wonder. —Sel.

Oh! Where are the Loved Ones!

WRITTEN BY ALBERT M. NOYES.

Oh! where are the loved ones, say whither have flown,
The hearts that once cheered, the eyes that once shone
I see them no more where the hearth-fires glow,
Oh! 'tis there where we miss them; where, where are they now?

Oh! where are the loved ones? ye soft, breathing winds
That come from the land of the purple-clad vines,
Where the flowers bloom brightest, the scenes are most fair,
Say, can you not tell if the loved ones are there?

Oh! where are the loved ones? bright bird, canst thou tell,
In thy soft warbling notes, where the cherished ones dwell?
Did'st thou pass some green isle in a bright summer sea,
And hear a sweet spirit voice calling to me?

Oh! where are the loved ones? thou white-crested wave,
Is there not in the depths of the ocean a cave,
Where the notes of the sea-nymphs in harmony swell,
And the loved ones, are they there, bright wave canst thou tell?

Oh! where are the loved ones? thou radiant star,
Perhaps thou canst tell where the wanderers are?
In thine orbit of light through you heavenly sphere,
Hast thou met with the loved ones who gladdened us here?

Oh! where are the loved ones? perhaps you bright train
Of souls that are ransomed may answer my strain;
For I dream of a world where the loved who have flown
Ever wave their glad wings round a heavenly throne.

Oh! heavenward then will I breathe my fond prayer,
Spirit land! spirit land, say, are they there?
List! list! a soft murmur now falls on my ear,
And it whispers, "The loved ones are here, they are here!"

Luck and Labor.

Which is the better to depend upon, luck or labor? Let us see.

Luck is always waiting for something to turn up.
Labor will turn up something.
Luck lies abed wishing.
Labor jumps up at six o'clock, and earns the money it wants.
Luck whines.
Labor whistles.
Luck relies on chances.
Labor on character.
Luck slides down to indolence.
Labor strides upward to independence.
Which is likely to do the most for you, boys?

For the COMPANION.

Church Government.

Two forms of government are in use in the churches, the Episcopal and the Congregational.

In an Episcopal government the Bishops rule; and in a Congregational government the congregation rules. Are the Brethren Episcopalians, or Congregationalists? I confess that I do not know. Candidates for baptism are taught, that, when they cannot make peace by the assistance of two or three, they are to "tell it to the church." And those who will not hear the church are to be cut off. This sounds Congregational, and corresponds with the Brethrens' discipline, Matt. 18.

But we read not long since that a few Bishops had met in church council in this State and excommunicated a whole church. This sounds Episcopal, and no doubt corresponds with the Episcopal creed.

If the ruling power is invested, sometimes in the Bishops and sometimes in the church, we must not oppose the Episcopal theory, nor the Congregational theory of government. For if this be true, we are either, or both, as it suits.

But we believe the Bible teaches that the power to rule belongs to the church. The experience of the world's history has been, that the "one man power" is detrimental to the best interests of society.

If Bishops were infallible, as Roman Catholics affirm their Pope to be, then their decisions would always be just, wise, and good. But titles never did and never will give wisdom and righteousness unto men. And until an infallible man is found, the church will prosper better by keeping the reins in her own hands.

In local matters the business may be transacted by a democratic government; that is, where the people in a body rule. But in general matters, business ought to be done by the principle of a republic; that is, by representatives chosen by the people.

By local matters, we mean questions that do not interest particularly the whole Brotherhood; but only the district of church in which they originate. For example, the building of a meeting-house: material—brick, or wood? Eight, or eighteen feet story? and more than a hundred other things that are of great interest to each individual church, but do not particularly concern the general church. If the brethren at Dale City desire to build a brick meeting-house it is their own business: the Antioch church will not object. If they wash feet, by the single or double mode matters not to us; when they do what the Master commanded. Who can object? Where there is not positive law concerning a question, let those decide who are affected by the decision; where there is law let that decide.

By general matters we mean such questions as these: Are the Brethren doing all they can to have the Gospel preached to every creature? Education, the Sabbath-school, the publication of books, tracts, &c., &c. In these the whole Brotherhood are interested; and as the whole brotherhood can not meet together, they can all be heard only by sending delegates to a general conference to represent them.

We seek not controversy but light.

For the Companion.

How is This?

Baptism means anything but immersion. It means pouring, it means sprinkling, it means washing, and it means anointing; but never immersion! Poor immersionists, what will you do? How can you escape the judgments of these witnesses? Behold, it does not mean immersion, because that word is not found in the Bible.

I began to examine some of the works in my library on this subject; and here I found that the word "baptize" occurred some sixteen or twenty times in the Old Testament. Ah, thought I, no wonder that the baptists and Tunkers keep out of the Bible. Genesis 28: 18, has the honor of mentioning that word the first. Here is the quotation: "And poured oil upon the top of it." Here is another one: Gen. 31 : 13, "Thou anointedst the pillar," Gen. 35: 14, "and poured a drink-offering thereon, and he poured oil thereon.' Ex. 28:41, "and shall anoint them." Thus I went through with all the quotations and I found the words, pour, pouring, poured; sprinkle, sprinkling, sprinkled; anoint, anointing, anointed, all through the Bible. Then, thought I, is it possible that the Baptist churches and the Brethren were so blind that they did not see this before? I was utterly astonished, and I hardly knew what to do. Surely I was almost ready to give up the battle. Just at this time I remembered that the word BAPTISM is what we are in search of, and this we have not found yet; and, I am sorry to say, it can't be found in the Bible. This they readily admit. But, say they, "The idea is contained in the words pour, sprinkle, and anoint." Then according to this we would read Gen. 28: 18, "And baptized oil upon the top it." The same trouble comes up when the word "sprinkle" is used. Lev. 16: 14, "and baptized it with his finger upon the mercy-seat eastward; and before the mercy-seat shall he baptize of the blood with his finger seven times." In short, the word baptize, &c., is not in the whole of the old Bible, neither does it make good sense to use it in place of the words that people say it is to represent. Wonder why our adepts in Biblical lore do not baptize their church houses. God certainly commanded this if he ever did anything; that is, if pouring, sprinkling, and anointing mean to baptize. In Exo. 33: 26 we have the command to Moses given; and in Lev. 8: 10, we have it executed: "And Moses took the baptizing oil, and baptized the tabernacle and all that was therein, and sanctified them." 11th, "And he baptized thereof upon the altar seven times, and baptized the altar and all his vessels, both the laver and the foot, to sanctify them." I suppose the brother that spoke so earnestly against having bells on meeting-houses, because of their being baptized in some places in the old country, was not aware of the fact that anointing meant baptize. Imagine the immersionists immersing their meeting-houses. We, in conclusion say, that the word baptize is not to be found in all of the old Bible. I shall in my next try to learn something else.

For the COMPANION.

To the Unconverted.

I must say a few words to my brothers and sisters in the flesh, that are yet out of the ark of safety, and traveling the downward road to ruin. They are near and dear to me, and I have shed many tears in behalf of them. My prayer is, that all might come to a throne of grace, and be saved

Why is it that you do not love Jesus, who left the shining courts of heaven, and came down, suffered and died on the cross that we through him might be saved? Do you love the world more than you do Jesus, who has done so much for you? He says, "Whosoever loveth me keepeth my commandments." Now his commandments are not hard. He has promised us a rest, if we love him. Christ says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart, and you shall find rest unto your souls." Matt. 11: 28, 29. This rest is promised only to those who keep the commands of God? Why do you not come to Jesus and live? Do you think you are too great a sinner to come yet? You will never be any better out of Christ. Do you think you will come when you get older? Remember God has said, "My Spirit shall not always strive with man;" besides, we do not know what hour we may be called away to eternity, then all is done. O sinner! as a lover of your soul, I warn you to awake out of your sluggish sleep, and arise from the dead, that Christ may give thee light. I know that some of you are readers of the COMPANION. Can you not find a word in it that would encourage you to follow Jesus? I think the time will not be long, till we have to appear before that great Judge to give an account for the deeds done in the body. Then let us be up and doing while there is time and opportunity, for delays are dangers. Oh, come out on the Lord's side, and be a true follower of Jesus, that meek and lowly Lamb of God, and set a good example for your children, and train them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord; and not in the pride and fashions of this world, which are abomination in the sight of God. Oh, do not do as the poem says—that I used to hear brother Myers sing:

"They often say 'tis their intent,
When they get old, they will repent;
But oh, they set an awful state,
For those who stay, and come too late!"

Oh, that dear old brother! He is gone to that bright world above, where I hope to meet him. I conversed with his daughter, this week, on the subject of religion. I asked her if she would not like to meet her father when she dies. "Oh, yes," she said, "I would like to meet him;" and she bursted into a flood of tears. Then I told her that she must prepare in this life, if she hopes to meet him. She said she would, if the rest of her sisters would. She said, "Mother often talks to them to lay off their pride; but they will not, and I can't go myself."

Now, dear children, whoever you may be, if your mother gives you a good advice, you should thankfully hear her and obey her. Remember you will not always have your kind mother to give you good advice. She will, some day, be taken away from you. "Children, obey your parents in the Lord." How is it with my dear sisters? Do you still wait for some near and dear friend to go with you? Perhaps you are waiting on your husband, who is near. But Christ should be the nearest. You must leave all, if you want to follow Christ. When you come to die, your friends can not save you; but if you obey Christ, he will save you. Oh, then, do not close your eyes in sleep, till you have made your peace with God. How dreadful it would be unprepared to meet the Lord, and to hear the word, "Depart from me, I never knew you." If your sins are crimson red, they can be made white as snow. Fear not; only come to Christ and you shall live.

We must remember that what we read in the twentieth chapter of Revelation was merely what John saw in a vision; it was not the thing itself, but a representation of it. Many people have entirely overrated the condition of the earth during the thousand years spoken of in this chapter. The Apostle Peter in speaking of these things in a great measure reconciles this matter, saying, "Beloved be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day. But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which (that is in this day of a thousand years) the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up." From these words of Peter it appears that the day of the Lord, which shall come so unexpectedly as a thief in the night, will endure a thousand years. It will be as one day in comparison to eternity. It will be a holy Sabbath, a day of rest, a season of rejoicing to the people of God. And during this period of time or eternity, whatever it will be, the elements shall be dissolved, the earth and the works that are therein shall be burned up. And when this darkness, this ethereal firmament, which surrounds the earth, in which the Prince of darkness dwells, shall be dissolved, the stars shall withdraw their shining. It is through the transparency of this perspective atmosphere that the stars are visible, but when this substance shall be dissolved, they can be seen no longer from the earth. This empire in which the "Prince of the powers of the air," has dominion, and operates undoubtedly by means of electricity upon the nervous systems of mankind, tempting and seducing them to evil—this empire must be dissolved, and the regent of these powers must be taken captive, and be put into prison a thousand years, that the marriage of the Lamb may be celebrated undisturbed. Otherwise, is the Prince of darkness was left loose in his dominion, it is possible, when "the Lord shall come with ten thousand of his saints," and the attending multitude of angels, to gather up those saints who yet remain on the earth, they might be molested by the powers of the air, and the harmony of heaven would be disturbed in holding their jubilee. It will be a jubilee to God's people, to them only, and not a jubilee to the world. It is quite a mistaken view that some people have in believing the world would have a jubilee. The jubilees of old, in the Mosaic dispensation were celebrated by the Lord's people only, and not by the world, which things were a type of good things to come. And hence, if the world would not be destroyed, it could not celebrate a jubilee, nor hold a millennium, because the children of this world in their unregenerate condition, have no good to expect, nor hope to rejoice in. And remaining on the earth when the saints are in glory, and the door in the ark of the New Testament is closed, there is nothing remaining for them but "a fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation."

We now come to speak of the resurrection, since we read of only one, and that one is called the first—"this is the first resurrection." "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection." But by calling it the first resurrection, we may infer that there may be any number more than one. Now it seems to me, by a resurrection, we are to understand something more than merely rising out of the grave. It literally means a re-rising or rising again. By this we understand that the subject rising again, had been up at some time before, and that through a fall or some other means, he has been brought low. Christ says (John 11: 25) "I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." And we were all dead in trespasses and sins at one time through our fall in Adam. Now, if the dead in their graves, can believe, then this passage concerns them. But according to the "soul-sleeping" doctrine, which I repudiate, though some of the brethren have embraced it, they cannot believe. But Christ says, again, "He that believeth on me hath everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day." There is abundant scripture to prove that in Christ we are dead to the world, and in Christ we live for the world to come. But from what will he raise us up at the last day? It is not merely from the grave, but from this sin-polluted state of things to glory. And not merely to man's pristine state in Eden, but to a far greater glory; since man was created "a little lower than the angels," but through the Resurrection he will be raised above them. Now if we have Christ dwelling in us, we have the resurrection already. This is the first resurrection. But if a resurrection means merely a rising out of the grave, then the saints remaining on the earth at the coming of Christ, will have no part in it: since they will be changed and will not be put in graves. Besides this, many saints have lived on the earth, whose bodies were never buried. They were consumed in the flames, devoured by wild beasts, and otherwise destroyed. From these considerations we conclude that Christ is the true Resurrection, and to have part in the first, or any succeeding resurrection, is to have part in him.

Now since we read that Christ went in the spirit and preached unto the spirits in prison, my views are, that the gospel is still continued there to those myriads of disembodied souls who knew nothing about a Savior while living on the earth. And that an opportunity will be given them by some kind of dispensation, that they may embrace a second resurrection, that in the end they may all be judged as men having heard the gospel in the flesh. "For, for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they may be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit. 1 Peter 4:6.

As concerning the earth, I had first thought that I would write some about its change, but as it may not be to edification, I will only say that I do not believe as some do, that this earth will be annihilated and a new one created, nor do I believe it will be melted up into a liquid mass again as it was in the "beginning." But I believe the earth is in a progressive state in accordance with the science of geology, and it is good as it is, for the time being, but it is not perfect as it will be after being purged and renovated by fire. I believe it will then be a luminous body, as we find in astronomy there are two kinds of bodies: opaque or dark bodies, and bright or luminous bodies. And this earth is a dark body now, but after its renovation it will be a bright body, and of itself be luminous, and that it then will not need the light of the sun any more. But when this darkness which surrounds the earth now, shall be dissolved, and the earth changed, it will be surrounded with brightness, for then time will be no more, it will be eternal day, "for there shall be no night there." And the whole earth shall be like the garden of Eden was. And when the thousand years are expired, the dead of all ages, Gog and Magog, the ancient ones of the earth will be brought forward out of their prisons on the new earth for the privilege of embracing a second resurrection. But then Satan will be left loose again to try them, to tempt and and to deceive them. These are my views. Here I will leave it.

Assurance.

"For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." 2 Cor., 5:1.

In the above language of the apostle Paul, we are informed that he knew that he had a "house not made with hands, &c." This we can term knowledge. What gave the apostle grounds for knowing it? We might refer the reader to the 9th chapter of Acts, where he was "breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord." This certainly was no evidence to him that he knew it. But we learn in the 6th verse, that there was quite a change in Saul's mind, so that he trembled. Then soon we hear the Lord calling him "a chosen vessel," verse 15th. And in following him a little farther, we see scales were made to fall from his eyes," and he received sight forthwith, and arose and was baptized. This, then, is one evidence that caused Paul to exclaim, that he had, a house eternal in the heavens; and straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God." Farther we see him increase the more in strength, and he confounded the Jews, &c., until they "took counsel to kill him." But Paul being a "chosen vessel," the Lord had a way for his escape. The "disciples took him by night and let him down by the wall in a basket." Then he went to Jerusalem, and was coming in and going out, "and he spake boldly in the name of the Lord Jesus" "But they went about to slay him." But Paul being a zealous worker for the Lord, went about preaching and establishing the gospel, fearless of all the counseling the Jews could do to kill him; so much so, that he at one time said, "I have not shunned to declare the whole counsel of God." Viewing the apostle Paul in all his travail and labor, in stripes often and in prison, and in perils on the sea and in perils by his own countrymen, all of which he endured for the love and zeal he had for Christ and the gospel. No wonder he could say, "We know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." He knew it, because he had followed Christ in the regeneration; he knew it, because he had not shunned to declare the whole counsel of God; he knew it, because he had diligently followed every good work; he knew it because he had fought with beasts at Ephesus, and he also knew it because he had fought a good fight, had kept the faith, &c., &c.

In the same way can we know that we have a "house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." If we follow Jesus in all his appointed ways, and do that "which is our duty to do." But we must be careful that we keep in sight of "the guide to our feet and the lamp to our pathway"—the word of God. Then, brethren and sisters, when we are done with the turmoils of this inconstant life, we can have the blessed hope of going home to where our children, fathers and mothers are gone, "to sing the song of Moses and of the Lamb," in the changeless climes of immortal glory. Farewell.

When you enter places of business, and especially the sanctums of editors, remember the following

IMPORTANT RULES:

1. If your business is their business, you are mutually interested, and the business can be expeditiously attended to.

2. If your business is not their business, you are not mutually interested. But if your business is more important than theirs, introduce it, and attend to it in a corresponding business style. Of course, if your business is important, you have no time to waste, and you will not be likely to trespass on the precious time of others.

3. If your business is less important than theirs, introduce it with a suitable apology, and attend to it at once, so that you can withdraw and allow them with composure to attend to their own more important matters.

4. If you have no business, make it your business not to interfere with others in the pursuit of theirs; and withdraw as soon as you can in a courteous way; and if you can not leave courteously, you cannot remain so, and the sooner you go the better.

5. Remember that, by violating the above rules, you make yourself a bore, a busy-body in other men's matters, or a loafer.

Jews.

"The Jews are now most numerous in the northern part of Africa, between Morocco and Egypt. In the strip of Europe stretching from the Danube to the Baltic, there are about 4,000,000, while in all western Europe there are not 100,000 of them, which shows that the great mass of the Jews keep as near as may be to the Holy Land, ready to enter in and possess it whenever the summons they wait for comes. Although in Palestine they are few and weak. Skeptical as we may be in regard to the Jews returning and possessing their fatherland, the foregoing shows that they are tarrying close by almost en masse, until the way is opened for them to return: and the time is surely coming, and not far off, when God will put hooks into Gog's jaws and lead him out of Palestine: when He will say to Israel, "Come home;" when the Jews will flock to their home from every quarter of the world, and out of every nook and corner of the earth, with all their wealth that they have accumulated for centuries; when they will rebuild their city and build up many unwalled villages; when they will be in a very prosperous condition, possessing a great amount of wealth. The old Turkish Gog, who is not far off, will envy their prosperity, will gather all his band and great army together, and will reascend the mountains of Israel to take a great spoil, and will even succeed in taking the half of the city, and Israel will be in the greatest distress; at which the Lord will roar out of Zion, who will come from heaven with 144,000 Jewish Saints, who follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth; and they will turn the tide of war against Gog, and will destroy all but a sixth part of him; and Israel will be saved from the power of Gog, and also be converted; for they shall see their deliverer who has come out of Zion, and with him 144,000 Jewish saints—12,000 to represent each of the twelve tribes of Israel, who at that time shall be converted. In my opinion each of the twelve tribes will be reinstated in proper order by their 12,000 Jewish brethren who have come with the Lamb. Then will be fulfilled the prophecy that Paul quotes, "For out of Zion shall come a deliverer and turn away ungodliness from Jacob."

Perseverence.

Mere courage, even if it be heroic after the human standard, often evaporates under slow discouragement. But perseverence under discouragement, the steady struggling onwards through hours of weakness, the rising upwards still above all doubt and fear, the eye fixed on the coming light in the midst of darkness and perplexity the hard work continued notwithstanding opposition, distrust, disappointment, failing health; and all this made harder by the bitter consciousness of sin, and by inward temptations which no one can fully understand but the tempted man himself—this holy tenacity of purpose is what we need, in this cloud and conflict, as much as anything in the world; and of this holy tenacity the Apostle Paul is an eminent example.—Dr. Howson.

St. Paul urges each of us to labor to be the maximum Christian; "Be thou," says he, "an example (pattern) of the believers in word, in behavior, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity." But many of us have no higher aim than to be the minimum Christian, to do as little as we can not to miss heaven; to get in there as cheaply and with as little self-denial as possible.

When we collect our poor, to work, feed or clothe them, we need not sift them. Among them will be found, no doubt, many tares—few plants from the right seed, perhaps—but work for them, however small their numbers, is work for God; and its worth, effect, and reward is not measured by the amount done, but by the spirit that does the work.

Total abstinence is virtue's safeguard. There is a reality in the gospel of self-control and self-denial.

"A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves." Moral: He was going the wrong way.

Pious Youth Department.

Words of Cheer.

Thank you, good brother Editor. We are glad to learn that the Pious Youth who visited us for two consecutive years, has not really died, as was rumored. He only concluded to remain at home until he had sufficient call or demand to justify his traveling over hills and through valleys to bring good words to those who hunger and thirst for words of cheer, and comfort and instruction. It is quite true that he had not enough of calls to insure the payment of his expenses, and justify his going all alone on his mission ; but now it brings good cheer to many to know that the Pious Youth will not remain at home altogether as he intended to lately, but, having devised a plan, he will come again, and have, at the same time, a Christian Companion with him. May they go, hand in hand, and truth in truth, to visit thousands of homes, and carry good words for all. They will visit the same home together, and while the Pious Youth will strive to entertain, ennoble, educate, interest and win the attention of his youthful readers, the young folks, and spread piety among them, on the other hand, his Christian Companion, will greet, encourage, comfort, and instruct the older folks who have been struggling on their journey toward heaven, through many discouragements and difficulties. Thus, together they will carry light, love, peace, friendship and good-will to one and all they find in their mission of holy work.

Friends of the Pious Youth, come up to the work, and do your best, little or much, to encourage reformatory and Christian work. There is a great work before you. We believe the "pen is mightier than the sword," and you can do a work for your Savior through this instrumentality.

Young Christians, your Master has called you to work in his vineyard, and now, will you be unfruitful, or "bear much fruit" for the Lord of the vineyard? Your lives must answer. Write as though you see your young friends rushing to the pit of destruction, and gently win them to Jesus, the Way to Heaven. Write as though the Devil, that old Serpent, were tempting your young friends to eat that forbidden fruit which will harden them more and more in sin, and will shortly bring the vengeance of God upon them. "He goeth about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour." O he is devouring our dear young friends! He is enticing them every day to the follies, fashions and sins of the world, and will laugh in triumph when they die in their sins. Be ye examples in faith, doctrine, life, practice, and go to work in sacred earnest. May the Lord help you so to do. "Grace unto you."

For the Children.

As brother Holsinger has expressed a willingness to open a department for the children, I thought, perhaps, I might contribute a few lines for its columns ; for I am acquainted with a good number of children, who read the Companion for their parents. I know some good little girls in the country, who read for father and mother in the long winter evenings ; and I thought it would be very pleasant for such children to find a few lines for them. Now I am not going to use any excellency of speech, but am going to talk very plain, so you can all understand me. Perhaps now you are reading for grand-parents ; and I know old folks would like to have you read slow and loud and also very distinctly. I once had a grand-mother, to whom I used to read, and I always tried to read to please her, for I loved her very much, and she, I think, loved me in return : yes, I know she did. She never was happier, than when I was with her ; for then she knew she would have plenty of reading and singing. But I only sung the songs of Zion, for she loved nothing but what belonged to the Lord Jesus Christ ; and she was one of his patient children. I cannot recollect of ever hearing her murmur. But finally death came and robbed us of her presence ; and while she was, on her death-bed she sent me her last message, telling me that the Lord was with her—close by her side. Even now, how sweet her memory is to me! I love to talk about her and think of her ; and while I am writing, the tears are streaming down my cheeks. Now, if you have a grand-mother, let not a word or look give her pain ; and then when death comes, and you have to see her taken to her last resting place, you can feel as I do, that you have done all you could. My letter is longer than I wished it to be, and I hope you will pardon me if I have wearied you.

A True Hero.

Boys, take warning. A boy about nine years old was bathing one day, when, by some mischance, he got into deep water and began to sink. His elder brother saw him and ran to save him, but lacking strength or skill, he also sank to the bottom of the river. As the two drowning brothers rose to the surface for the last time they saw a third brother, the youngest of the family, running down the bank for the purpose of saving them. Then it was that the dying nine-year-old acted the part of a hero. Struggling, as he was, with death, he gathered all his strength, and cried to the brother on the shore, "Don't come in, or father will lose all his boys at once!"

Noble little fellow! Though dying, he forgot himself, and thought only of his father's grief. He was a genuine hero. His brother obeyed his dying command and was spared to comfort his father when his two dead sons were taken from the river clasped in each other's arms. Boys, you are not called to be heroes in this way, but you are called to consider the feelings of your parents, and to study how to avoid giving them pain.

The best way to do this is to love them dearly. Love will not only keep you from hurting their feelings, but it will be a source of great joy to their hearts. Blessed are those children whose words and deeds make sweet music in their parents' ears.

Christian Family Companion.

DALE CITY, PA., March 26, 1872

Out of the Way Jottings.

We are now at Pittsburg, at the St. James' Hotel, near the Union Depot. It is the evening of the 18th of March. We came here to accompany four students for Salem College, from Dale City. We arrived here about noon. The transfer of baggage having been made, checks and tickets secured, our young charges comfortably seated in the cars and committed to the care of brother John Wise, who expected to accompany them to the school, we attended to some business, and then took a free and easy stroll over the city, seeing what was to be seen. All that we saw and heard it would not be prudent to tell. We will venture to tell part.

The seventeenth day of March is called St. Patrick's Day. It is a "high day" among the Catholics, especially so among the Irish part of them. This year that day came on Sunday; and as the Sunday laws would interfere with the customary celebrities of the day, the demonstrations were deferred until to-day; consequently there was a general outpouring of the Irish population, with a pretty fair proportion of other foreign and native Catholics; also a liberal outpouring of bad whiskey, with many other kinds of strong, stronger, weak and weaker beverages.

It was nothing new to us to see men drunken, and being dragged along by the police; but to-day we saw more, we saw women drunk! One case especially attracted our attention. It was a drunken woman in charge of two policemen, tugging her along to the Lock Up, one of the policemen carrying her child, a little girl two to three years of age. The child had a large lump on its forehead, and its lips were covered with blood. How we did pity it! The young readers of the C. F. C. who have kind mothers, may here drop a tear of sympathy for such poor little sufferers, and a thought of gratitude to God for having a good home.

The woman had red, swollen eyes, and a disturbed countenance, giving every appearance of a habitual drunkard. She was very stubborn, and required much prompting to keep her moving; and as she passed by us we heard her muttering: "I won't be disgraced; no, I won't be disgraced!" She thought it a disgrace to be taken to the police station. We regarded the drunkenness as the greater disgrace. How people do differ!

At another place we saw a drunken woman, and a man supporting her hastily away. Unconsciously we would stop and look after, and sometimes follow up such scenes, as if to see the worst. It was so new to us, and so exciting. And without any effort on our part, the question suggested itself, whether the great "woman's rights movement" of the present age can be producing the dissipation and debauchery among the women. Modern, conservative, female enfranchise advocates tell us one of their objects in giving woman the rights of ballot, is, to elect a prohibitory law. Wonder if the devil has not heard of that movement, and is trying to frustrate it, by making the women as bad as the men. From to-day's experience we are fearful he will do it. Indeed we believe, that, of the women of the United States that could be persuaded to go to the polls, the majority would vote against prohibitory law. For we opine it would be easier to persuade a froward woman to go to the polls than it would be to prevail upon a modest and virtuous one to exercise that privilege. We do not notice these vices to slander our lady readers. We thought, perhaps some of them did not know how badly some of their sisters conduct themselves, and by such an expose might be made to appreciate more highly the privilege of contributing to their reform. We hope it will be a long while before we must witness such sights again; though we fear they will haunt our vision for the night.

On our way homeward we obtained a daily paper from which we learned that over one hundred persons were taken to the Police Station during the day, whose cases were awaiting the disposition of the Mayor.

Many reform measures were presented to our mind. We believe if we had the directing of affairs to do, we would abrogate all such institutions as St. Patrick's Day, Fourth of July, Washington's Birth-day, Christmas, Easter, and all other festivals on which men leave their work, and spend their hard earnings "for that which satisfieth not." The whiskey ring and its friends, evidently reap all the profits.

Papers Wanted.

We are short of No. 1s of last year (Vol. 7) for our files. In endeavoring to give the remaining numbers of last year to new subscribers, we run ourselves so short that we are now suffering a severe loss. Will not some of those who may have that No. in good order, and yet not have the full volume, let us have several copies of said number. We cannot have the volume bound until we secure them. not originate from impressions made upon the mind by the word of the Lord.

Apprentices Wanted.

We wish to secure several apprentices to the printing business. They may be either male or female, of the ages of 16 to 18. Members of the church preferred, and none but those friendly to the church need apply.

(tf.)

Back Numbers.

Two Hundred Subscribers Wanted!

Expecting a large increase to our subscription list we prepared for it by printing a number of copies more than were actually needed, in order to be able to furnish back numbers.

Now there are about two hundred still remaining on our hands; and we must soon cut down the issue to our actual list. Before doing so we make this appeal to our friends. Will not one out of every twenty of our friends send us a new subscriber who will take the back numbers of the present volume? Please make the effort friends. (tf.)

Sunday Schools.

Several brethren have inquired of us for a method of conducting a Brethren's Sunday School. We have not had very much experience in the Sunday School business, and for that reason we have been a little slow in giving advice upon the subject. Have been Superintendent of several schools, but on account of ministerial services we were unable to attend as regularly as we should have done, consequently have not been able to observe the practical workings of our plans as fully as we would like; but such as we have we impart freely.

We would have four officers: a Superintendent, Secretary, Treasurer, and Librarian. Much depends upon the Superintendent. He ought to be a good reader, a ready talker, and singer enough to be the leader. But especially must be a working man, having his whole heart in this work. Then if he cannot himself perform all the duties of the office he will employ others to do it, for he will love his school too well to have bad reading or singing. It is the duty of the Superintendent to order and direct the exercises of the school; to lead in singing, prayer, and reading or direct some one else to those duties.

The Secretary should be a ready writer, able to make an item of interest from every little incident that may occur in the school; to note the attendance, progress, visits, &c.

The treasurer should be on friendly terms with the school, having their confidence for integrity; kind and sociable. If he and the secretary will take an active part in the school, as teachers, or otherwise, they will the more adorn their offices.

The Librarian is an important officer, who is required to perform much labor. He should be clever, but impartial and firm in his decisions. He has the collection and distribution of books. He needs no previous preparation, except a proper understanding of his duties, but will find employment for all his time during the sessions.

1. School should be opened by singing and prayer, making the prayer short, pointed, and simple. Better no prayer than a long, labored one. We would have but one person pray. He may or he may not repeat the Lord's prayer.

2. Then the Superintendent, or some one appointed by him, will read a portion of Scripture; a verse, paragraph, or chapter, and make such comment upon it as he may be prepared to make, occupying from ten to fifteen minutes.

3. The next twenty minutes we would occupy in class exercises, consisting of hearing recitations of passages of Scripture committed to memory; asking and answering questions; and imparting such instructions as the teacher may be able to give.

4. Singing; several minutes.

5. Reading of the Secretary's report. By care and application this exercise can be made anxiously awaited for by the scholars.

6. One or two five or ten minute lectures, specially prepared for the school. Or occasionally essays can be substituted for speeches. Where the material for this exercise can be had, it may be made very interesting; but poor, dry speeches, are only a drag.

7 Singing and prayer; concluding with the Lord's prayer.

Books.

For singing books we use the Christian Harp, a small note book, with patent notes. We furnish them at $3.00 a dozen. The following is a catalogue of books in our Dale City Sunday School, which we can recommend to those who are about to obtain books, and will supply them at publisher's prices, or when the whole library is taken we will make a reduction of fifteen per cent, for cash.

Other books will be added as we shall be able to examine them.

Prayer Book.

Brother D. M. Miller, of Lanark, Ill, says:

"I wish you to correct your comments on the Prayer Book, page 59 of the present volume. "And for all good men." That Book teaches us to pray for our enemies also. Thus Christ prayed on the cross, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do." The same forgiving Spirit Stephen manifested, when stoned by his enemies. And the apostle teaches us, if we have not the Spirit of Christ, we are none of his. Rom. 8 : 9.

We gladly make the correction. It should read, "And for all men," according to Paul's instructions in 1 Tim. 2 : 1. There is, however, nothing in the phraseology, "And for all good men," that conflicts with sound doctrine ; for as it teaches us to pray "for all men," it certainly teaches that we shall pray "for all good men." The law says, "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you ; that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven."

From Brother Wm. H. Quinn.

A late letter from brother Quinn, of Tyrone, Pa., informs us that he has had an afflicting time in his family, for some months past. We sincerely sympathize with them in their sufferings, and pray that they may soon be relieved in the Lord's own way. There has been sickness in his family for about a year. He had expected to visit a number of churches this winter, but could not. The brethren will know from this why he was not with them. Remember them in their afflictions.

Brother Holsinger :—I desire some of the beloved brethren to give their mind through the C. F. C. on the following questions :

1. Is the Holy Spirit changeable? that is, did it teach our humble old brethren one hundred years ago that plain dress, chaste conversation, meekness, and perfect resignation to what God says in his Word was necessary to their eternal welfare, and at the present day teach that fine apparel, worldly actions, debates and controversies are no harm?

2. Having obeyed God's commandments, were they not led into all truth and righteousness by the Holy Spirit?

3. If we depart from the order and simplicity which they observed, saying it is necessary to have an educated ministry (after the fashion of the world) Sunday-Schools, &c, do we not admit that they were wrong, or that the Holy Spirit taught them one thing and now us differently?

I write my dear, kind brethren, for information. I am young and need counsel. I associated very much with the old brethren fifteen years ago; and ever since the Lord God caused me to seek his statutes and commandments. I have prayed him to cause me to walk continually in the humble and lowly ways of those who contend for the old land-marks. To advocate progress as other denominations advocate and practice, seems to me like declaring that our old brethren were exceedingly ignorant of the ways of salvation.

I have written, beloved, in a spirit of love, and hope what I have here expressed may be received in the same manner. I also hope that there may be no controversy over what I have written. Let us love each other with a pure heart fervently and ask God to keep us faithful to our promises.

In love and fellowship,

M. M. ESHELMAN.

Pawnee, Ills.

Dear Companion :—After leaving Dale City, on the 19th ult., I went to Somerset, where I was met by brother C. Musselman, who kindly took me to his hospitable home; and after refreshing our bodies at his table, and resting a little, we were conveyed to Trent's M. H. in the Berlin district to meeting. Here brother S. Hildebrand had been preaching for some days. Remained at this place until the 21st at noon. Then I was taken to Quemahoning congregation; leaving brethren Hildebrand and J. I. Cover to continue the meeting at Trent's. I remained in the Quemahoning branch until the 25th.

On the morning of the 26th I took the train at Somerset enroute for Bourbon Ind., to visit Salem College. Arrived at Bourbon in the morning of the 27th, and to my great satisfaction learned that the Board of Trustees was in session. So I had not only the pleasure of examining the educating process, but also the Managing Department. They elected officers of the Board while I was there. The present corps of officers are: J. B. Shively, President. David Wolf, Vice President. Keylon Heckman, Sec'y. David Heckman, Treasurer.

In reference to Salem College I can say, I had the privilege and pleasure of examining the Official Documents of the institution; and I find it placed upon a permanent basis. The Trustees hold a Warrantee Title for the property. They have also a Corporation. So the institution is upon a permanent legal basis. And, in my judgment, all that is necessary to give it a permanent financial basis, is,- the patronage it merits.

Upon the earnest solicitation of the Trustees, and others. I was induced to accept the appointment of General Agent, to sell scholarships, receive donations, &c., for the institution.

Persons desiring information from me relative to the institution, can address me, for the present, either at Scenery Hill, Pa., or at Bourbon, Ind.

I returned home on the 2nd of March, and found all well. Thank God. Fraternally,

JOHN WISE.

Seeking the Truth.

Dear Brother :—My object is to learn the gospel, and then to put it in practice; and I look to you as being able to instruct me. In Matthew 16 : 18, it appears that Christ had not yet set up his kingdom on the earth; it proves that his church was not yet built, when he made the statement, "Upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." It also proves that Jesus Christ, as confessed by Peter, was to be the foundation. This is sustained by Paul; he says, "other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." It might appear that the foundation was laid in the days of Paul's writing, as is proved by the above declaration, according to Christ's conversation to Peter, Matt. 16. This, together with the preaching on the day of Pentecost, appears to establish the fact to me. Though all men are liable to mistakes. If Christ has a kingdom set upon earth, there is a place where and a time when. I would like to be enlightened on this subject.

U. M. BROWDER.

Corrections.

Brother Holsinger :—In my remarks on the article entitled "Church and State," cut from "The Philadelphia Post," and published in the "COMPANION" of the 5th inst., please make the following corrections :

In the 7th line from the top of page 158, "deign" should be doing.

On the same page, in the first reason given why the Brethren ought to encourage and foster our common school system, there was a line omitted. It should have been as follows :

The common school system is capable of expansion, so as to impart an education sufficient for all the duties of life, both temporal and spiritual.

SILAS THOMAS.

HAMLIN, Brown Co., Kan.
Feb. 22nd, 1872.

Dear Brother Holsinger :—I am constantly receiving letters of inquiry from the brethren concerning the merits of our young ten year old state; and as your valuable paper is found among the brethren every where, I will, with your permission, give a few items through its columns.

I know well that there is a great deal of prejudice against our state, and to answer all would require too much space; and some, I could not fairly answer as I have not been long enough in the state to take such observations as would enable me to answer them by my own knowledge and experience.

There is much fault-finding about drought. Some say Kansas is subject to drought and for that reason I suppose it has changed its name from "Bleeding Kansas" to "Droughty Kansas." I have been here two seasons, and seasons that were dry throughout the west. The spring and summer of 1870 was pretty dry here, yet we had very good crops, winter wheat was excellent. Corn rather poor on an average, being damaged more by chinch-bug than by drought. During the fall 1870 we had very wet weather, almost an incessant raining. Last season we had plenty of rain, and crops of all kinds were excellent. I never have seen better corn grow in any country.

Our soil and climate are well adapted to raising winter wheat. This seems to be a very profitable crop here. The yield generally is about 20 bushels per acre, upon an average, and it scarcely ever brings less than $1.00 per bushel. It is to-day worth $1.40. If the farmer raises twenty bushels per acre it would at the latter price bring him in a handsome income.

Stock raising is also carried on very profitably. The abundance of pasture range, mildness of climate, the plenteous supply of pure living water found all over the prairie,s gives it every advantage to be profitable. You see here no low, stagnant pools of water, all covered with "green screen;" but on the contrary, pure, sparkling, living streams. The prairie is rolling, yet not hilly, and along creek bottoms the land slopes gently, thereby giving sufficient drainage.

The climate is mild yet healthful. We are near the state line between Kansas and Nebraska, which line is the 40th parallel of latitude.

Railroad communications are ample, thereby giving us good and convenient markets for our produce.

We have here,—The St. Joseph & Denver City, R. R., commencing at the former named place and terminating at Ft. Kearney, where it intersects with the Union Pacific R. R. It is, however, as yet not finished to the latter named place, but will be completed early in the coming season. Then we have also the Atchison & Nebraska road commencing at the former places and terminating at Lincoln, the capital of Nebraska. These roads give us ample communications East and West. And there is now a road under contract and completed in part, commencing at Leavenworth, Kansas, running north to the state line, and then up through Nebraska and its probable northern terminus to be Omaha.

Thus, I have attempted to give you a few items concerning our country and neighborhood not with any intention of boasting or trying to make it appear that our country has no faults, or disadvantages, for we all know that every country has its advantages, and disadvantages. Now I would say if any of the brethren or friends wish to emigrate to this country, and wish to get lands cheap, it would not be well to put it off too long. Land is yet within the reach of nearly all. Choice prairie land lying along the line of the Rail Roads' is yet selling at from $8 to $10.00 per acre.

Emigration is pouring in from all quarters, winter weather being no impediment to the rush. Timber is as scarce as in all prairie countries, yet enough to supply the wants of the people. Coal is being found in abundance.

There is also a small church here numbering about forty members. I came to this country in June, 1871, and at that time I knew of no other brethren residing in the county. But have since learned of some residing in the south-eastern portion of the county. I paid them a visit a few days ago, and held a series of meetings, being assisted by brother W. N. N. Sawyer, who is a minister, and resides in that vicinity. The meetings were well attended and a kind feeling manifested, one member being added to the church by baptism. The people here in the far west seem greatly impressed with the doctrine of the brethren. There are many here who have never heard the truth as we believe it. I sincerely trust that some of the ministering brethren will give this a thought. Truly indeed—the harvest is great but the laborers are few. If any are desirous of coming west, we should be very happy to have them give us a call.

JONATHAN LICHTY.

Beloved Brethren and Sisters in the Lord:—We send to you greeting, hoping you are enjoying sweet fellowship with God the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ, and with one-another; and that you are still contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, and that we may be partakers of each other's joy. We will tell you what the Lord has done for his church and the salvation of souls here. Though the weather was cold, the hearts of the brethren and sisters have been made warm by a refreshing season from the presence of the Lord. God always works by means, using his children in the great work of saving sinners. For it has pleased him by the "foolishness of preaching to save them that believe."

We had a communion on the 24th of November, Brothers Robert Miller of Ladago, Ind., Myers of Lamark, Ill., and others were here. The Lord blessed the labors of his children, adding two to the church. The word was preached with power, the church edified, and many made to feel the need of a Savior. And that the good seed sown might bring forth fruit, the church thought good to send for brother Miller again. He came on the 23d of January; but meetings had commenced several days before.—They were now continued, meeting at 10 o'clock a. m., and 6 p. m. for ten days. Brother Miller labored with great zeal in the work. The house is large, and though the weather was cold, the thermometer below zero, yet the house was nearly filled. The attention was very good, the interest deep and solemn. Such powerful appeals were made to the understanding, such heartfelt invitations to the lost ones, that not only the members but many others were made to weep. We think we never before saw so large a congregation so moved. We think it the work of the Lord and not of man, some who had for many years resisted all the calls of mercy came out on the Lord's side. But one thing we will notice: the first that were baptized were not old men or women, nor strong young men, but four young girls, one of them only thirteen years old. These heard the gentle loving call of Jesus. At the first call they answered, in the first part of the meetings. These tender lambs led the way for those that were older and stronger. The river was frozen all over, and a little snow on the ice. The people went on the ice, being fourteen inches thick. A hole was cut; one brother went down and two others handed the applicants down to him and lifted them out again. They endured hardness as good soldiers, without any fear, thus proving to older persons and to the world, that when perfect love which casteth out fear takes possession of the soul, even these lambs will not shrink from the watery grave.

The Lord still added to the number every day, but baptism was not attended to every day. There were fourteen baptized one day, by elder John Metzger. There was great joy among the brethren and sisters, and we think in heaven there was joy among the angels. One old brother said he could not sleep for joy, three of his children being in the number. There were twenty-three added to the church during these meetings, and many others were made to feel their lost condition. May the Lord help them to come before it is too late. We think such meetings are good for the church, even if none were brought in. It increases the love and softens the hearts, so that old troubles are much more easily settled.

We cannot help here saying a few words for our brethren and sisters. They were so earnest in attending, day and night. One old sister told me that, coming home one night from meeting, she thought she must stay at home next day to bake, but with the good qualities of Mary and Martha combined she went to work and by a little extra application, late in the evening and early in the morning, she was enabled to go to meeting and enjoy a feast of good things for the soul. Thus we see the Lord helps them that try to help themselves. Brother Miller went home with many prayers and good wishes from the brethren and sisters. May the Lord spare him to the church and give him grace and strength to do his work below, and be the means, under God, of bringing many lost ones to the fold of Christ.

I will here also give a short notice of a visit to Southwestern Missouri last fall. On the 26th of September I left home; 17th was at a love feast in Sugar Creek congregation near Auburn, Ill., met many loved ones, and had a good meeting.

28th, started to St. Louis, missed connection; had eight hours to look at that great city of the west; great in wealth, in population and improvements, and no doubt great in wickedness; perhaps not less so than Chicago though she has not yet had such a visitation; but let her not be proud but repent or she may likewise perish.

29th, Was met by brother Henry Clay, in Springfield, Mo. Had meeting at night.

30th, Went 15 miles west; meeting at night.

Oct. 1, Meeting same place. 2d, Meeting in Dade county, at brother Showalter's. 3rd, in Cedar county, 3 meetings with the brethren. Oct. 6, started for Vernon county, stopped at brother Samuel Glicks, who was the only minister in this young church; met with Jacob Ulery and Samuel Mohler and others. Felt much at home among the dear brethren. Next day went to communion, the first ever held in this county.

Oct. 9. Started to St. Clair county with brethren Mohler and Thomas. Night overtook us, raining and very dark; got lost in the woods; began to think we would have to stay all night in the woods, and felt a little cast down but not forsaken. Got to brother Ulery's at 10 o'clock at night; were kindly received at a good fire to warm and dry by. How sad the thought and feeling of being lost, oh that more of the lost ones could be found and brought home to the Fathers house. Here we met around the Lord's table with a goodly number of brethren and sisters whom we formerly knew in Indiana.

11th. Started to Johnson county; stopped in the evening in Henry; had an evening meeting.

12th. Got to brother John Harshy's in Johnson county. 14th had a love-feast in the Brethren's new meeting house. This is a newly organized congregation, under care of brethren Harshy and Mohler.

15th Sunday, had meeting; one added to the church by baptism. 16th started with the Knobnoster brethren to their home; had two meetings. The meetings in Missouri, were most of them small, but the attention was good, and we hope the brethren have been sowing some good seed, and that the Lord will bless it, and make it fruitful.

Of the brethren in Southwestern Missouri, I would say, as far as I was among them I found them in earnest, contending for the faith of the gospel. They are of the plain old sort of Brethren, and those brethren in the East who want to move West need have no fear to settle among them, for the churches are started right in the old order of the Old Brethren, and as we understand the gospel to teach.

Oct. 18. Started for home, thinking the brethren in North Missouri would not expect us as the notice in the Companion came out too late. If we live and the Lord will, we will yet visit the churches in North Missouri.

On our way home we stopped at Virden, Ill. This is a large congregation, and in a healthy condition. It was for many years under the care Isham Gibson, but as he left the church the burden devolved upon our much beloved brother and cousin John Crist, who died only a few days before we got there. We visited the bereaved widow and found her in great sorrow. May the Lord bless her and give her grace to bear with patience this greatest of earthly losses. Had two meetings there. The members of this branch are in as good order as any we have seen. May God help those brethren who labor there to hand the church to their successors as they received it, or even better We got home October 21, found all well, thank the Lord. We kindly remember the brethren and sisters that we saw on our journey. Hope we will meet to part no more.

MARRIED.

By the undersigned, at the house of the bride's mother, March 17, brother JOHN VOUGHT and sister MALINDA BRISKEY, both of Elk Lick township, Somerset county, Pa.

Joel Knagy.

On the 10th of March, at the residence of bride's parents by Wm. Sadler, brother DANIEL W. MARTIN, of Wayne county, and sister SUSAN BEEGHLY, of Ashland county, Ohio, daughter of brother John Beeghly.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Antioch congregation, Ind., January 23, sister NANCY FRY, aged 66 years 10 months and 18 days. She had only been a member of the church about two years; having formerly belonged to the Campbellites, but moved among the brethren and learned the way of the Lord more perfectly. She leaves an aged husband with sons and daughters to mourn their loss. Funeral service by the writer, from Rev. 20 : 11-14.

A Leedy.

In the North Manchester congregation, Feb. 29, brother AARON UNGER, aged 50 years 10 months and 7 days. The subject of this notice was a faithful and zealous member of the church for a number of years. He worked hard the day before his death, and retired for the night, enjoying good health. About 5 o'clock a. m. sister Unger, finding that all was not right, spake to him, but received no answer. She sprang up, lit a candle, went to the bed and found him breathing his last. This shock can be better imagined than described, for an affectionate companion, daughters, and little son the most of whom are members of the church. We say again to our sister and children, "weep not as those that have no hope." We trust that your loss is his great gain. Funeral service by elders Jacob Metzger, Israel Harter and the writer, from 1 Cor. 15:22.

A. Leedy.

In the Coventry Church, March 13, our much esteemed and beloved brother, PETER HOLLOWBUSH, after an illness of ten days, aged 66 years 9 months and 21 days. Disease—Pneumonia. Our dear brother was elected to the ministry nearly thirty years ago, in the Coventry Church, of which he remained a faithful minister until his death. The last sermon he spoke to us on the last chapter of the New Testament, which was read in order. The 3d of March, in the afternoon he took sick with chills and fever. He bore his affliction, which at times was severe, with Christian fortitude and resignation. His chief desire and concern seemed in behalf of the Brethren and Church, to which he was devotedly attached; and often, when temporarily relieved, his voice ascended to God in supplication, thanksgiving and prayer. Feeling that the time of his departure was at hand, which was so strongly impressed on his mind that he told his brethren he was almost ready, the cup was almost full, and admonished us to be ready to meet him on the sunny banks of everlasting deliverance; and encouraged his beloved companion to remain steadfast; his children he admonished to delay not, but to honor their Lord and Savior. Our beloved brother was longand favorably known among the Brethren, who will with regret hear of his decease. We shall hear his pleasant voice and earnest appeal no longer. No more will we see the kind smile, and feel the grasping hand and loving salutation, with which he used to greet us. But we sorrow not as those without hope, for we feel assured that our loss is his great and eternal gain. He leaves a wife (a sister) and five children to mourn his loss. Funeral service by brethren Isaac and John R. Price, in the Brethrens' meeting-house on Sunday, March 17, to a large and interesting congregation of friends and relatives.

At Newport, Perry county, Pa., March 14, JOSEPH EBY, M. D., aged 41 years, 4 mo's and 7 days. By attending to professional duty he contracted the dreadful scourge, Small Pox, in its severest form, and fell a victim by it, after contending with it about fifteen days. Owing to the contagion of the disease it was thought best not to have the usual funeral ceremonies. And so he was decently interred by his two attending nurses shortly after his death. He never made a public profession, but earnestly contended for the faith once delivered to the saints. He was the third son of John and Elizabeth Eby, dec'd, and brother to the writer.

"HOW TO GO WEST."

Forty years ago, Illinois was as far West as most people wished to go, and journeys were made in the legendary "Prairie Schooner," but in these days of Progress and Improvement, the word West has come to mean Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Colorada, California, and the Territories, and the Traveler reaches almost any point therein by a splendid Line of Railroad.

This Line of Railroad is the Burlington Route, which starts from Chicago over the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R., from Indianapolis, over the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western Short Line, and from Logansaort, over the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw R. R., and running through BURLINGTON, reaches Omaha, Lincolen, Nebraska City, St. Joseph, Atchison, Leavenworth and Kansas City, connecting with the Union Pacific, Kansas Pacific and other Railroads running from those cities.

Always go "By way of Burlington" and you will be sure to be right.

The Burlington Route has admirably answered the question, "How to go West?" by the publication of a truthful and interesting document, filled with facts in regard to Time, Connections, Accommodations, rates of Fare and other interesting items and illustrated by a large map, truthfully showing the whole West, which they distribute free of charge. Copies, and additional information can be obtained by addressing, General Passenger Agent, B. & M. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

Christian Family Companion.

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political Journals.

Time shall be no More.

The pain, the groan, the wasting, far-fetched sigh,
The pearly drop that wets the infant eye—
His fear innate to tread on being's shore
Surely premonish—"time shall be no more."

The little mound in yon inclosure seen—
The stone that tells a mortal once has been—
The weeping willow gently bending o'er,
Say, "Passing stranger, time shall be no more."

The pang that rends a mother's bleeding heart,
When'er is uttered, "Mother we must part"—
The nameless woes unknown, unfelt before,
Beget the thought that "time shall be no more."

The voice that issues from a parent's tomb,
The children, weeping o'er an orphan's doom,
The present dread that future storms will lower,
Unerring tell that "time shall be no more."

Ye mortals, burdened with the weight of years,
Ye palsied limbs, ye second childhood's fears,
Ye eyes bedimmed, ye heads as winter hoar,
Say is't not true, that "time shall be no more?"

The life that glows to-day in beauty's eye—
To-morrow's sun shall see in ruin lie;
Ill-fated thing, which thousands still adore,
Will it be thus, when "time shall be no more."

I saw a rose, on sunny banks it grew,
Where purl'd a stream, and gentle zephyrs blew;
'Tis wither'd now—its beauty now is o'er—
Ah! will it bloom, when "time shall be no more?"

Ye sparklig orbs, ethereal worlds of light,
Thou "king of day" and modest "queen of night,"
These saith your Maker—boundless in his might—
"To things created time shall be no more."

Roll on thou day, seen with prophetic view,
When heaven and earth shall be created new—
The final tempest come with fearful roar,
And tell in thunders, "time shall be no more."

The night is gone—earth to its centre shakes,
The streams flow backwards, Barhan prostrate breaks;
Convulsions dire seize on the solid world,
Death yields its prey, its bonds in sunder hurl'd—

"A mighty angel" flies through cloudless air—
His hands uprais'd methinks I hear him swear
By him who lives when times short space is o'er,
And ever lives—then, "time shall be no more."

A Branch from the Tree of Life Cast into the Waters of Marah.

TO BROTHER CYRUS J. FOX, OF FALLS CITY, NEBRASKA.

But for sin, all the fountains and streams of earth would flow with living water from the Crystal River "proceeding out of the Throne of God and of the Lamb." It is estrangement from God that has closed every channel from the Upper Resovoir, and has turned the sluices of the Dead Sea upon the thirsting millions of earth. Sin transmutes God's sweet into bitter. Grace turns the devil's bitter into sweet. The downward journey is all Marah, however sugared by the tempter. The upward pilgrimage has occasional bitter wells, with the antitypical Moses standing on the brink to sweeten it for every believing soul. While the Marahs come singly, the Elims come by the dozen. Thanks be unto God that sin brings bitterness; and thanks forevermore that the law makes "sin exceedingly sinful;" and blessing and honor be given to His Name, that the Tree which sweetens all our bitter was "made sin for us"—weighed down and broken by the curse of Almighty God, blasted and withered with the lightnings of Infinite wrath. He who is the Alpha and the Omega, is both the Water of Life and the Tree of Life, our Bitter and our Sweet, our Sin and our Rightousness, our Curse and our Ransom, our Sin-Bearer and Sin-Destroyer, our Judge and our Advocate, condemning and forgiving our sin, causing and healing our woe, creating and quenching our thirst, emptying us from vessel to vessel, and filling us "with all the fullness of God."

Dark indeed is the shadow that has fallen upon you, galling the cross you bear, and sharp and quivering the stripes of your Heavenly Father; but shadow and cross and stripes have in them the love that gave us Jesus, and this knows not only when and how to wound, but also how to heal. When He dries up every earthly "Cherith," He uncovers to our fainting souls His open side, and invites us to draw water out of the well of salvatiion. In Romans 8th,

Paul educes a powerful and encouraging argument from the great central truth, that if God was good and loving enough to give us his best gift in giving His Son, "how shall He not with Him also freely give us all all things." Herein is imbedded a profound and precious truth which is often overlooked. Should a prince give a beggar ten thousand talents to pay all his debts and then adopt him as his son, and receive him into his house, it would be unaccountable if he were to deny him the comforts of life, and such moral training as would fit him to honor and enjoy his new relation. "God so loved the world that he spared not his own son." No one will for a moment doubt the greatness, the depth and intesity of that love. Its height and depth, length and breath, wonder and glory, neither angel nor saint can ever fully scale, explore, or comprehend. But what is intended by the declaration that He "spared not His own Son? Here is the point where our fallen nature is so averse to be made like unto the Elder Brother. "Delivered him up for us all." Now in "this same Jesus," who became our salvation by crucifixtion, God has promised that he will "also freely give us all things." And what do these "all things" comprise? "All things are yours: whether Paul or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours, and ye are Christ's." 1 Cor. 3:21-23. "We know that all things work together for good to them that love God." Rom. 8:28. "Lovest thou me?" is the the great question, which can be decided only by offering the head to thorns as well as laurels, the hands and feet to nails, and the heart to the spear, as well as to the joys of communion with the Holy One, and the repose of His thrilling, soothing, satisfying love. There must be the depressing sense of unworthiness in ourselves, as well as the uplifting sense of dignity in Christ. The Divine Love could find adequate expression only on the Cross. It pleased the Lord to bruise him, to put to grief His only Begotten. When "the love of God is shed abroad in the heart," there comes a cross, a sword and a rod with it, no less than a deep, broad, pure, rapturous tide of divine joy. We must have "fellowship with His sufferings," be "made conformable to his death," be "baptized with his baptism, and drink of His cup," and share His humiliation, if we would develop the character that is to qualify us for the honor, the holiness, the glory and blessedness of his everlasting Kingdom.

"Beloved, think it not strange cocerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened to you." 1 Pet. 4:12. There may seem no star in your darkened heavens, no neutralizing drop in your bitter cup. But Christ himself is in the burning bush, keeping all its branches from being consumed. The most tender twig is vitalized with the life of Jehovah, cnd can neither be destroyed nor wilted by any fire kindled on earth. The spoiler has broken into your fond circle, cleft your heart in twain by the removal of your bosom companion, leaving you to feel as if more than half of yourself had been withered by the fearful stroke. But there is a higher and better self which is elevated and strengthened by this dispensation. God employs the inferior to perfect His own work in the superior. Wounds have been opened which none but the Physician of Infinite Wisdom and Compassion can bind up. The coffin incloses the dearest treasure you had on earth. In the narrow house lies entombed the being that held a place in your heart only second to Jesus. Hundreds of miles separated you when "the Rider of the Pale Horse" rushed in between, and bore your loved one into his silent dominions. You had not the melancholy privilege of bending over her dying form, soothing her with the love of Jesus and the comfort of the Spirit, and smoothing her passage down the dark valley with your tears and prayers. Yours is in truth a "fiery trial," and none but an ever-loving, ever-present, omnipotent Savior can administer the consolation you need. But He can—He will. The shorn lambs are peculiarly precious to "the Good Shepherd." He tempers the wind to their nakedness. He opens the inner recess of his loving, yearning, sympathizing heart, and draws them within the blest pavilion until the tempest be past. The arrow which He sends is dipped in his own blood. It bears the agony of death and the ecstacies of eternal life. The sword with which He pierces the souls of his children, went first through His own heart. The rod with which He smites, first mangled his own back. The wormwood which he puts to our lips, was first emptied into his own. He knows how to succor and comfort, because he knows how to suffer. We can taste no bitter and feel no agony, that has not entered into his experience. When we haild a Savior, God lost a son; and when you lost your wife, Jesus gained a new jewel in his crown. What was death in your family, was birth in the household of glory. When the dreadful of shadow of the relentless foe fell upon your dwelling, the effulgence ineffible of the God-lighted Temple enveloped the ransomed spirit of your beloved. You weep: she exults. You are in little of soul, while she is "rejoicing with joy unspeakable and full of glory." You walk through this vale of tears as a smitten, crushed, bereaved, heart-broken man, while she "stands on the sea of glass," "clothed in white," waving her palm of triumph, sweeping her harp of blissful harmony, and swelling the grand diapason that fills the Holy City with the endless song of Redemption. You have lost much, but your beloved has gained more. No joy could have thrilled her heart through a long life of unbroken bliss in fellowship with her earthly bridegroom, equal to that which has flooded her glorified spirit in the few days she has spent in the presence and on the bosom of her adorable Savior-God. And while she enjoy the unalloyed peace and rapture of the Upper Paradise, beholding the unveiled face of Jesus, hearing his word, and bathing her soul in his love, you can sit at the feet of the Godman in your closet, in the sanctuary, at the family altar, in the field or forest, by the way, wherever you are, thus maintaining, purifying, and perfecting the communion which you so briefly enjoyed together on earth. Heaven is nearer and dearer and brighter to you now, because your beloved is there; earth is darker and drearier, because the sun of your human love has sunk in the night of death. But Jesus is the same—"Faithful and true"—and he points you to Gethsemane and Golgotha, and whispers in loving accents into your ear, "I am the way, the truth and the life: no man cometh unto the Father but by me." He offers you but a drop of his cup as preparative to the measureless, boundless, fathomless joys of his Eternity. He makes your "cloud" dark, so that he may span for you a brighter "bow," under which to conduct you into the holy of Holies. He "empties our vessels, and breaks our bottles," and "causes us to wander," so that we may find our rest and refreshment in him alone. When our nest is too softly feathered, he tears and bares it. When the flowers of earth grow too absorbing, so that we loose the odors of the celestial eden, he blights them. When our lyre drowns the music of the upper sanctuary, he cuts the strings. He has taken what you loved best, so as to empty you of every thought and desire born of earth, that he might be the fullness of your love, the fullness of your peace, the fullness of your joy, the fullness of every grace and element that make this life the vestibule of heaven, and heaven the shoreless, bottomless, waveless, exhaustless ocean of bliss where angels and saints drink their fill forever and ever.

C. H. Balsbaugh.

On the Death of Catharine Terresia Hoffman.

Gentle shepherd, thou hast stilled
Now thy little lamb's long weeping.
Ah! how peaceful, pale, and mild!
In its narrow bed 'tis sleeping;
And no sigh of anguish sore
Heaves that little bosom more.

In this world of care and pain,
Lord, thou wouldst no longer leave it.
To the sunny, heavenly plain,
Dost thou now in joy receive it?
Clothed in robes of spotless white,
Now it dwells with thee in light.

Oh, Lord Jesus, grant that we
Where it lives may soon be living;
And the lovely pasture see,
That its heavenly food is giving;
Then the gain of death will prove,
Thou dost take what most we love.

The prayer winged by faith never fails to reach the throne. Such prayer is the hand which plucks fruit from the tree of life for our food, and leaves for our healing. It honors God, and God honors it. "This is the confidence that we have in him, that, if we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us: and if we know that he hears us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him.

For the COMPANION.

He is Guilty of All.

"For whosoever shall shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all." James 2:10.

This part of God's word, ought to be seriously considered by every Christian professor. It strictly concerns all believers. I would therefore advise those who talk about practicing non-essentials to read the word carefully. Examine the word of God and see what the end was of those who were somewhat careless. I would therefore advise them to go back almost six thousand years, to the beginning of the world. What was the reason that our first parents, Adam and Eve, fell? This we all have read or heard. We all know that it was through violation of the law! How many temptations we are placed in since that great fall!

We often hear it said that they had plenty to eat besides that forbidden fruit. Very true: our Father had richly provided for that; but this forbidden fruit was pleasing to the eye. Like we have to-day. The tempter offering some of his non-essential ideas induced them to eat thereof. This forbidden fruit does taste, to some, very delicious! It requires but little to make them believe that this or that is not essential; or perhaps, this or that one is doing worse things. We have so many different kinds of forbidden fruit in this nineteenth century, that we ought daily to carry a catalogue of them. If we think of non-essentials, let us think of Adam and Eve, by so doing we may perhaps think of the above scripture, and that we might fall back, and the sentence might be; "you are guilty of all."

Let us now go back, according to the accepted chronology, two thousand three hundred and forty-eight years. Here we read of Noah. He preached to the people one hundred and twenty years about that great water, which was to come and destroy the wickedness of the people at that time. His preaching was not heeded. They only laughed at him. They thought he was doing an idle work to build such an ark as commanded by his Master. This is often the case, in our time, in regard to worshipping God as commanded: we are laughed at. Let those who are engaged in mocking, read of the destruction of the people in Noah's time, and perhaps they can learn how dreadful it is to mock the people of God. What became of the people that heard Noah preach what they should do and what their dreadful condition was? They hardened their hearts; they mocked at his preaching. Day after day, year after year passed away. At last the morning came when Noah, as commanded, went into the ark, which he built according to direction, took in such as God had commanded, two by two. When all had been gathered in the ark was closed. Now the heavens were opened; the water came forth until all the living were destroyed. Now was the time when those who laughed could weep. No doubt they thought, "What have we done?" Many a thought went through their hearts: "Why did we not obey the calling of Noah, who was sent to tell us of our sad condition?" This is a spectacle that we should all look at. "As it was in the time of Noah, so shall it be in the coming of the Son of man." We may think of the many callings, the many opportunities which we lay aside, perhaps laugh and mock at them as they did in Noah's time. But all these things will make a sudden change; and then weeping and gnashing of teeth will be the everlasting inheritance. Let us think of these things, and not be guilty of any. Now let us come a little nearer home. We will notice Moses a little. He was a child of God; did many wonderful miracles. The Israelites were to be controlled by his teaching. Let Bible readers read his scripture, and see what plagues and punishments were brought upon King Pharaoh. But his heart was hardened till he was covered with the water of the Red Sea. But the Israelites were frequently dissatisfied; became a murmuring people, and disobedient, which caused considerable trouble. Moses was alarmed and dissatisfied when they murmured for things for which God would not let them suffer, had they been strictly obedient; but on account of their disobedience, out of many thousand only two were permitted to enter the land of Canaan. Moses, one of the prophets, was not allowed to enter that land, because of a small violation. At the time they were destitute of water, Moses was commanded to smite the rock, which he did, and water came forth. The next time he was to speak to the rock; but he did as before, he smote the rock instead of merely speaking. This was the violation, and he was only permitted to see the land of Canaan. Moses went on Mount Pisgah, where the Lord showed him all the land but he was not permitted to enter. I often thought, perhaps we are so engaged, that when we expect to enter in, the reply may be, "Turn, turn from me, ye workers of iniquities, I never knew you." So let us think of the Israelites when we think of some of these so-called non-essentials. That the announcement may not be, "I never knew you," and we be sentenced, all guilty.

"To-day, if you hear my voice, harden not your hearts." This is the present calling. How often are we called? How do we refuse? Many a serious call is made out of pure love, from the one who knows our bad condition. There are many callings, perhaps the most serious of all is the least noticed. Since this year commenced, I attended the funeral of a relative. As I saw the grave, I took the thought, This place is prepared for one who was loved by many—for one with whom I had many a sweet conversation; this is the place where you are to return whence you were taken. The next thought was, Who is next? perhaps I; if so, am I prepared to meet my God in peace? can I say, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith?" I thought, I am an unworthy servant. Such callings are to me the most serious. Death will close up all labors, either in good faith towards God or against him; and the reward will be according to the deeds done. So let every one think seriously.

Sickness is a calling which shows that danger is before us. I have seen many a tear shed on such occasions. And it is serious to think, that perhaps one who was negligent in duties towards his Master has a trial on hand which may end in a sad condition. I often thought, why is it that so many are careless in that which is valuable? They can daily see, that in the midst of life they are in the jaws of death. Many a one has seen the clear sun rise in the morning and ere night was called from time to eternity. So it is not advisable to set a stake at any distance. You know not how many steps you shall be permitted to take. The whole future is a risky business in this line; so let your hearts not be hardened. Take the yoke of Christ; learn of him, live of him, and he will give you that which man cannot take from you. He is merciful, and he will do you good.

We were talking of the past, of the present, now let us look a little about the future. This is the most dreadful of all. The present is sometimes painful, but it will end. The future knows nothing of this. This is forever, no end can be thought of. It is very serious to think that we have to suffer death here in time; and the future will not release us from suffering, if we neglect our soul's salvation. If we could be released when a small insect could remove a mountain by taking a grain of sand a year, we might think it would end, but this is not the case; the time is not given to close, but ever and ever. So let us search the scriptures; learn of the way of life everlasting, where joy, peace, and love are granted unto us; and where a thousand years shall be as one day. Where the tears shall be wiped away from our eyes. I have seen tender-hearted mothers when their children were dissatisfied, trying to satisfy them, if neccessary by carrying them around, and wiping the tears from their little eyes. It is promised to us, that our tears shall be wiped away. Sometimes we weep but while we are in this land of tribulation, we must wipe the tears away ourselves; but in the land of rest, we have the promise that they will be wiped away for us. So let us all live that none of us may be the prey of destruction, where weeping and gnashing of teeth shall be, and no one to encourage us. Let us all aim to enter in at the strait gate, there is plenty of room for all, and none are necessarily excluded. But the command is, to walk with Christ daily; to take his yoke upon us and follow him. He will lead us right, and we shall not think of non-essentials. Let us watch and pray that we may not fall into temptation.

Remarks on 1st Samuel 17.

David was a type of Christ, for Christ is called the son of David. Goliath was a type of the devil, or the adversary of Christ. Goliath's height was six cubits and a span. He was armed with a coat of mail; and the staff of his spear was like a weavers beam. He challenged and defied the armies of Israel, and said unto them, 'Choose you a man for you, and let him come down to me. If he be able to fight with me, and to kill me, then we will be your servants; but if I prevail against him, and kill him, then shall ye be our servants, and serve us." When Saul and all Israel hear those words, they were dismayed, and greatly afraid, this was for want of faith; but David had great faith in the Lord, and was willing, although but a youth, to fight the mighty giant. I imagine I can see the youth going to battle. It makes my tears flow, to think that he was to decide the fate of the nation, he being no match for Goliath. And Saul said unto him, "Thou art but a youth, and he a man of war from his youth." And David said unto Saul, "Thy servant kept his father's sheep, and there came a lion and a bear and took a lamb out of the flock: thy servant slew both the lion and the bear: and this uncircumcised Philistine shall be as one of them, seeing he has defied the armies of the living God." And Saul said unto David, "Go, and the Lord be with you." And Saul armed David with a helmet and a coat of mail. And David said unto Saul, "I can not go with these, for I have not proved them." And David put them off. And he took his staff in his hand, and chose five smooth stones out of the brook; and his sling was in his hand and he drew near to the Philistine. And the the Philistine drew near unto David; and the man that bare the shield went before him. And the Philistine said unto David, "Am I a dog, that thou comest to me with staves?" And he cursed him by his Gods." And he said to David, "I will give thy flesh to the fowls of the air, and the beasts of the field." Then said David, "Thou comest to me with a sword, and a spear, and with a shield; but I come in the name of the Lord of hosts, whom thou hast defied. This day will the Lord deliver thee into my hands; and I will smite thee; and will take thine head from thee; that all the earth may know that there is a God in Israel." And so David smote the Philistine with his sling and a stone; but there was no sword in the hand of David. But he took the sword of the Philistine, and cut off his head therewith and carried it to Jerusalem; but he put his armor in his tent.

Now Jesus, the son of David comes with different means, to overcome the Philistines; not to kill sinners, but the sin that dwells in them; he came not to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved; not to destroy men's lives, but save them. To cast out devils; namely: lust, anger, malice, pride, idolatry, intemperance, covetousness, that he might save the believers from their enemies. When he came to Jerusalem, they spread their garments in the way, that he might ride over them; and they cried, "Hosanna to the son of David." Jesus came not to break the bruised reed, or quench the smoking flax; but to give sight to the blind, and to heal the sick, to give rest to weary, heavy laden sinners. He would have the believers take his yoke upon them, and learn of him meekness and humility, that they might find rest to their souls; that they might be transformed from the world, and become the salt of the earth, so that men might see their good works and glorify God; that they might see Christ the true light. This is Christ's plan to destroy the Philistines, not their persons, or bodies, but the sins of the body; giving good for evil. He was good to all, therefore, he had no war in all his reign, and could build the temple of the Christian hearts. The Lord will to his temple come; so prepare to receive him.

Personal Acquaintance of John the Baptist and Christ.

In John 1: 6, 7, we read, "There was a man sent from God whose name was John. The same came for a witness, to bear witness of the light, that all men through him might believe." In Luke 1st chapter we read the peculiar manner in which it was brought about. After the angel's visit to Zachariah in the temple, we also learn of his visit to Mary, announcing to her the coming of Christ; and he tells her of Elizabeth, who had been visited six months before. Mary makes haste to pay her cousin a visit, and they rejoice together at the thought that the Lord remembered them in their humble station. Mary remains there until Elizabeth's full time came for the birth of this son of Prophecy, and then returned to her own house. In the last verse of said chapter we read, "And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, and was in the desert till the day of his shewing unto Israel.

In the 2nd chapter of Luke we read of the birth of Christ, and the peculiar manner thereof, and the sensation it caused both in heaven and on earth. The songs of the angel's were heard by the shepherd's while watching their flocks by night; and the glory of the Lord shone around them; and the angel said unto them, "This day is born unto you, in the city of David, a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, and good will toward men."

We have given a very brief description of their birth and their holy parentage. The idea at once strikes the mind, that their mission was a holy one. Now the question is, Were they personally acquainted before entering into their prophetic office? We have said, Mary had gone to see her cousin Elizabeth before the birth of John, and then returned to her house. I have also said that John was in the wilderness until his showing unto Israel. Who will dare say he was away from there?

We read that Jesus was with his parents in Jerusalem, at the age of twelve. Who will say that John was there? In the 1st chapter of Mark's Gospel we read, "The voice of one crying in the wilderness," (still in the wilderness,) "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight." He preached repentance and baptism for the remission of sins. The people of Jerusalem and the land of Judea, came and were baptized in the river Jordan, confessing their sins. In his preaching he said, "There cometh one mightier than I." Who told him this? John 1: 30, 32. "This is he of whom I said, After me cometh a man which is preferred before me; for he was before me. And I knew him not: but that he should be made manifest to Israel, therefore am I come baptizing with water. And John brae record, saying, I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him." Now he reiterates, "And I knew him not; but he that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on him, the same is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost. And I saw, and bare record that this is the Son of God." Did he know him before? He says, "I knew him not." When we imagine their frequent journeys between Nazareth and Hebron, we must go somewhere else than to the Gospel to find any testimony to substantiate our assertions. We would always prefer to reason upon gospel grounds; we think it safest under all circumstances.

But why did he say unto Jesus, "I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me? Answer: He who sent him to go before and prepare the way for him to follow, did he not say there was one to follow that was mightier than he? Did he not know he was then among them? He said so. "There is one standing among you, whom you know not." Above he said, "I knew him not," until I saw the sign; but I was aware there was such a personage in the world; therefore, when he came and demanded baptism, he, no doubt, saw something supernatural, and ventured the expression, "I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?" The Savior said, "Suffer it to be so now; for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness. Then he suffered him;" and in the act of baptism the sign was manifested by the descent of the Holy Ghost. He then could with propriety say to his disciples, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."

In haste we throw these remarks together, and think we are justified in asking you to publish this in defence of our position. What we have written is in love, and wish it to be received in the same.

After the Funeral.

No, never any more,
Till my broken dream of life
Is swallowed up in death,
Shall I look upon my wife.
I prayed that she might live,
But my prayers could not save;
For here I am alone,
And she is in the grave.

It seems an age to me,
Since I saw the coffin there,
The lid was off, and lo,
A face within the square!
A pale and pensive face;
Sweet lips without a breath;
How beautiful, if sleep;
How terrible, if death!

I lifted up the child,
In her little mourning gown;
But she turned away her head:
The lid was then screwed down.
The coffin was borne out
In the blinding light of day,
The black hearse then moved on,
And the coacher drove away.

We stood around the grave,
And the solemn prayers were read;
Then the wet and heavy earth,
Was shoveled on the dead.
As it struck the coffin-lid,
With a dull and dreadful sound,
It seemed to strike my heart:—
They led me from the ground.

But all is over now;
And it almost soothes my pain
To think, whatever comes,
She can not die again.
The blow has fallen; I know
The worst that death can give;
The worst of life's to come,
For I must learn to live!

What shall I do to live?
I will play a busy part;
I'll ply my subtle brain,
Forget my stricken heart;
Go again on change—
Buy, and sell, and scheme,
Fit my ships for sea;
Do anything but dream.

I know the day will pass
In the bustle, and the light;
But how can I endure
The coming home at night?

No watching at the pane,
  No meeting at the door.
No lovely, wifely, kiss,
  No Alice any more!

Sad will be the nights
  In my silent room alone;
Before the ruddy grate.
  No chair beside my own!
No little hand in mine,
  No tender words or sigh;
Only this broken life.
  This barren prayer to die.

But I forget my child:
  She shall sit upon my knee.
And I will talk with her,
  For that may comfort me
She has her mother's eyes;
  Poor child, she little knew.
When I kissed her so to-night,
  I kissed her mother too.

Mary. Luke 7.

Sinners, read the account of Mary coming to Jesus in the house of Simon the Pharisee, and take courage. A clearer proof of the willingness of Jesus to look upon sinners with favor can not be found. When she heard that Jesus was there, she went at once; though a proud Pharisee lived there, she did not care for that; though a great crowd may have been around the door, she pressed in, until she came to Jesus—bowed at his feet. Had she presented herself at the feet of Simon, he, no doubt, would have spurned her from him; because she was a sinner, and he thought he was a very righteous man. Simon expected Jesus to put her from him, but not so. Her sins were many. She did not stay away because she felt she was a sinner; but that only gave her courage. Tears of penitence and shame burst from her eyes. The fountains of her deep, pent up, godly sorrow were broken up. See her stoop to wash his feet with those tears of penitence, and to wipe them with her flowing hair: her love so great that she kissed the feet of her blessed Master, and anointed them with ointment. Nothing too mean for her now to stoop to; nothing so costly that she was not willing to give. Now came the cutting rebuke, not to the poor, weeping sinner, but to the proud, self-righteous Pharisee; a rebuke that ought to have made him feel little indeed. Turning from this proud man to the penitent sinner, a voice, the very essence of sweetness and love, speaks the joyful words, "Thy sins are forgiven thee," and, "Thy faith hath saved thee, go in peace." Oh, what sweet words to Mary! Could anything give her more joy? Now she could go home to the city rejoicing in God, and in a Savior's love. She could now resign herself to sleep without the fear of awaking in regions of despair. God now was her friend instead of her enemy. Now was her soul at peace; now were angels rejoicing over a soul saved from darkness.

Reader, do you feel, just now, at this moment, as you imagine Mary felt in that hour of her acceptance with Jesus? Imagine, did I say? Unless you have felt pardoning grace, you can not imagine what she felt. And if you are such as Mary was before she went to Jesus, I would implore you to do as she did. What! stay away because you feel unworthy? That is the time to go. It is Satan that is telling you to wait until you get better. Come though you have to meet the gaze of the proud Pharisees, that think they are so good that they don't want you, a sinner, to come into their company. You may meet a contending crowd, but press through; Jesus is within, and you are a lost, ruined, and condemned soul, unless you pour out your souls wants at the feet of Jesus. Don't be ashamed to wash his feet! "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me." Let no sacrifice appear too costly, though it cost you your proud spirit and gay company; give all, all for Jesus, that Mary's joy may be yours: the joy of knowing Jesus in the pardon of your sins, a joy unspeakable and full of glory.

Judas Iscariot.

"Have not I chosen you twelve and one of you is a devil?" Jude 6: 7.

The question is frequently asked, "Why did the Savior choose such a character as Judas Iscariot, for one of his Apostles?"

The Savior's object in choosing twelve apostles to attend him in his ministry, evidently was, to prepare them as witnesses, to prove after his death, that he was indeed the very Christ; and the fact that Judas was an enemy to the Savior does not disqualify him as a witness for him.

We are all aware that, when a man is falsely accused of some crime, and he can bring up those who are known to be his enemies, to testify that he is innocent, their testimony is credited rather than that of his friends.

And in this that Judas came, after he had betrayed the Savior, and threw down the thirty peices of silver in the temple, and confessed that he had betrayed innocent blood, and went and hanged himself, he gave a very strong testimony, that his convictions were that Christ was the true Messiah; and if there was one among all the Savior's enemies who was qualified to decide whether Christ was what he professed to be, it was Judas Iscariot; consequently the Savior, in choosing Judas for a witness, manifested wisdom, and not ignorance or inconsistency as his enemies seem to argue.

How is This? No. 2.

PROPOSITION:—Immersion is not, and cannot be, baptism; because that word is not found in King Jame's translation.

This is argument conclusive enough for some—for those that would like to have it so. But immersionists are not so easily put off. Permit me to try the word baptism which, means pouring, sprinkling, and anointing, upon the same principle. Neither pouring nor sprinkling is baptism; because that word (baptism) is not to be found in all of the Old Testament. This brings us into a pitiful dilemma. No baptism at all, according to the fore-going proposition.

"Well, if that word is not in the Old Testament, it certainly is in the new." This is even so. Why then seek for a word where every intelligent Bible reader knows it is not to be found? Admitting, as I do, that it is in the New Testament, what of it?

"Why, I wish to show you, sir, that it means pour and sprinkle."

This is just what I want. I only hope you may be more successful than we were in our last. To the law and the testimony.

Acts 2: 14, "I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh."

"There, sir, is the word pour, just as plain as any man or woman could possibly desire it to be; and were it not for the much water, and the word immersion, which you always have on the brain, the above would forever settle the matter."

Just so: there is no one, I presume, will deny that the word pour is in the above passage. But, my dear friend, what does that matter? It is the word baptism that I just now have on my brain, while pour seems to affect yours; but, indeed, we had mutually agreed to trace up the word baptism. Just now I remember that you argue that pour is baptism, and vice versa. Now, then, I shall proceed to read it in that way.

The word pour occurs in the New Testament, in Rev. 16: 1, "Go your ways, and pour (baptize) out the vials of the wrath of God upon the earth" This needs no comment.

The word poured I find eight times. Rev. 14: 10, "The same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured (baptized) out without mixture into the cup of his indignation;" Rev. 16: 2, "And poured (baptized) out his vial upon the earth." Thus you will find in the third, fourth, eighth, tenth, twelfth, and seventeenth verses, that one angel baptized upon the sea, another upon the rivers and fountains, another upon the sun, &c., &c. I think I had just as well finish this family of words.

Next comes the word poureth, John 13: 5, "After that, he poureth (baptizeth) water into a basin." Pouring Luke 10: 34, "And bound up his wounds, pouring (baptizing) in oil and wine."

To all this trouble I have gone just to see what your proposition would do. Do you suppose that we could find a man of any literary attainments whatever, that would not feel ashamed, yea, even disgusted, if a rendering of the word baptize, &c., were accredited to his authorship? And yet we have men that profess to be embassadors in Christ's stead, men that spent a long time in colleges to have the D.D. added to their names, who write and teach just such doctrine; and a poor, Bible reader dare scarcely venture a criticism, for fear of having the Apostolic anathema pronounced upon him. We could not say anything on the word sprinkle, &c., this time; my paper is just full. And more than this, I should not occupy more space in our valuable paper, the C. F. C. If its Editors accept of my article, you will hear from me again.

The Promises.

The Bible is richly abounding with glorious promises of God to the children of men; but one thing worthy our consideration is, that they are given on conditions, and those conditions are "of duties performed." Some rest on, or are given on, the condition if we "watch and pray:" some if we "give;" yea, our duties are many, but the promises are no less. One great promise is, the "Comforter"—the "Holy Ghost;" but like all others, it is given upon condition. To those on the day of Pentecost it was given because they had complied with the conditions given them; and to those who had not complied with them, the language is, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Here we find this promise resting upon the condition of performing our duty. We find here that we are to be baptized "in the name of Jesus Christ;" that is, according to his authority, or command; and his command is "Baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." My object is not to separate faith and repentance from baptism, but to search for the reasons why Paul thought it necessary to baptize those twelve of Acts 19. Christ gave his commission before his ascension, as we have seen, how to baptize, and any other formula used after he gave his was not valid; and this will account for the necessity of rebaptizing those twelve referred to above. Circumcision was the right thing in the right place; so were the ordinances commanded in the law; and so was the baptism of John to prepare the way of the Lord; but as Christ came after John, so he, like Moses and Elias, or if you please, John, gave us a commission; and now we find that neither the law of Moses, nor the baptism of John, will suffice in the stead of the baptism commanded by Christ. Jesus certainly was not baptized in his own name, and those of Acts 19th certainly were not baptized in the name of the Holy Ghost, or else they would have known that there was a Holy Ghost; so we conclude that the baptism of John was not the same in form as the one commanded by Jesus. Paul did not inquire of those twelve "who baptized you?" as he no doubt would have done if brother Holder's "illustration" were correct in No. 8 of Vol. 8 COMPANION, But he asks, "Unto what were ye baptized?" After he knew that they were baptized "unto John's baptism," he knew that it was necessary to re-baptize them in order that they might receive the "Holy Ghost;" because they were not baptized in the "name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," which they must be if they are baptized according to Christ's command, or "in the name of the Lord Jesus. John required of his applicants "fruits meet for repentance;" and if they manifested such fruits, he baptized them, and then referred them to the "one mightier." This is the reason his baptism is called the "baptism of repentance;" but the baptism commanded by Jesus, is no where called so, in that there is more than that required by every applicant It is true in all there was a belief in God required; but the gospel requires a belief in God, and repentance toward him, and also faith toward the Lord Jesus Christ. When Christ commenced his ministry he addressed a people who believed in God; therefore he said "repent and believe the gospel." A belief in God, will never save one, neither will that belief connected with repentance; but faith in God, and repentance toward him, connected with a living faith toward Christ, will.

I will now close with the language of Paul, which contains the substance of the first part of this article, namely, "faith without works is dead."

Traditions.

Query:—What are the traditions spoken of in 2 Thess. 2:15; 3:6?

DAVID SHIVELY.

Answer:—The Jews pretended, that, besides the written laws of Moses, God had given him many more, which he delivered to Aaron and his sons, who handed them down to the elders, and these in turn taught them to the prophets, who from on generation to another conveyed them to posterity. These oral-taught laws were called traditions, and were regarded by the Jews as the soul of the written law. Paul, in the texts cited in the query, did not refer to these traditions. These traditions were the inventions of presumptuous persons; and some of them were trifling, some fanciful, while others were absolutely wicked, making void the written law of the Lord. Our Savior censures the scribes and pharisees for transgressing the commandment of God by their traditions. We are certain, therefore, that Paul had no allusion to these Jewish traditions, when he said to his Thessalonian brethren, "Stand fast, and hold the traditions which ye have been taught, and, withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us."

Under the New Testament dispensation Roman Catholics have many traditions equally whimsical and wicked; and modern protestant creed-mongrels in many things are not a whit better. The word of God does not allow us to regard any such tradition, whether originated and promulgated by men or angels. We are confident that Paul did not enjoin the observance of these traditions; for in his day they did not exist, and he says, "Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed."

If Paul, then, had no reference to the traditions of the ancient Jews, or to those of papists or protestants, what traditions does he mean? He evidently has direct reference to the duties enjoined in and required by the gospel of Christ. Jesus commanded his disciples to teach those who should believe in him through their word to observe what he had commanded them. As he did not deliver his law in a written form, but commanded them to teach it to the nations—to preach it to every creature, the first teaching under the gospel dispensation was oral. It was a number of years till all the books of the New Testament were written. Jesus in his prayer in the night of his betrayal said to his Father, "I have given unto them (the apostles) the words which thou gavest me." To the apostles he said, "Teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commended you; and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." These were the traditions Paul had reference to. They were given to the Son of God by the Almighty Father; the Son delivered them to faithful witnesses, who in turn, committed them to writing and taught such as were able to teach others; 2 Tim. 2:2. These are the traditions which we should regard as sacred.

We have need to watch continually, and to pray; for we are now surrounded by traditions as dangerous as ever those were that were taught by scribes and pharisees. The commandment is, that believers are to be baptized; but tradition says, "The sprinkling or pouring of water upon either infants or believers is just as good, and is safer & more convenient." The word is, "Ye also ought to wash one-another's feet;" but tradition says, "If you are humble, and hospitable, the demand is satisfied."

Thus we see how professing Christians, by their traditions, make void the commandments of God,—the traditions delivered through Christ and inspired apostles, prophets and evangelists,—even as the ancient doctors, scribes, and pharisees did by their traditions.

"Stand fast, and hold the traditions which ye have been taught."

The Feet-Washing Question.

In the minutes of the last Annual Meeting, Article 36, the following preamble and resolution occurs:

Whereas, This Annual Meeting finds to its great regret, that the subject of Feet-washing in its single and double modes, as the difference is called, has produced serious difficulty already among us, and threatens still greater difficulties in the future, questions relating to this subject have come from different localities in the Brotherhood, and it has assumed such a degree of importance, as to commend it to the serious and prayerful attention of the Brotherhood; under these considerations, with much prayerful reflection, the propriety has suggested itself to us of calling the Elders of the Brotherhood together to consider this matter, as the Apostles and Elders did to consider the case of circumcision, Acts 15:6. We have, therefore, concluded to request all the ordained Elders of the Brotherhood to meet in the fear of the Lord, and under a due sence of their responsibility, in solemn assembly, on Whit-Monday, 1872, at the place of our next Annual Meeting to dispose of this subject as the peace and prosperity of the Fraternity may require.

Brother C. G Lint has already called the attention of our readers to this matter, and we had expected to accompany his notice with remarks but were deprived of doing so. A number of our correspodents have been making inquiry as to our understanding of the intention of the resolution, and asking for a definition of it.

We shall not impeach the motives of those who were the movers of said resolution, but we freely confess that we have no confidence in the plan proposed for the disposition of the subject. Neither have we any fears that much injury can be done, even if it is the intention that those elders shall, at that Monday council, dispose of the matter. It will simply be a failure; they cannot do it. But we are not certain that they intend or desire to do so. True, the resolution says: "To dispose of the subject;" but it is presumed that is to be understood, that part of the subject belonging to them. And we would urge upon the Elders to give due consideration to the suggestion of brother Lint: to take the sentiment of their congregations upon that subject before they act for them in matters in which the general Brotherhood is concerned.

It is claimed by some, and such as are interested and ought to know that it is not the intention that the council of Elders is to make a final disposition of the matter; but that they are only to frame an answer for submission to the Annual Council. In other words, to take such action upon the subject as would be done by the standing Committee. This would be right enough, but we cannot see the propriety of so large a committee for so little business, when a committee of three persons would have been altogether as likely to have drawn up an answer that would have given satisfaction. And it will prove a great loss of time, for the same argument that will be necessary to convince the Elders on Monday, will be called for on Tuesday. It looks to us, therefore, as though the method proposed for the disposition of this perplexing subject in the Monday Council were intended for something more than merely to frame and suggest an answer. Perhaps not, but it looks so. "Straws show which way the wind blows."

And now, as the matter is as it is, we would urge a general attendance of the Elders. Then we shall have no fears of the result, let the design be what it may.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Dear Editors:—As I have yet a few hours to stay in the city, I thought I might as well write you a short letter.

I left Forest City on the 8th. The Brethren, generally, are well and doing well. As for meetings, they are pretty well supplied; having preaching every Sunday. As yet they have only one speaker; but he, being zealous, is equal to the emergency. He hopes soon to have help from some one of the brethren. I think there are some there that are able to stand before the people and teach and preach to them, as old soldiers. But none seem anxious that the lot should fall on them. But this generally is not a good excuse.

There have been no additions, lately, to the ranks; but the prospect is bright that many will, the coming year, be gathered into the fold. This is the desire of all; and oh, what a happy time it will be, when the majority of the people take up the cross, and march along, and make the strongholds of Satan tremble by their shouts of "Onward, to the mark!" But there are so many things that draw the natural man away from duty to God; and one, especially, which is the most potent of all things, and that is, "the love of money." This is the standard, or criterion, by which the majority of the people judge. This, in my estimation, is a very poor criterion; for money never did make a good man. But if a man has not moral worth enough in his heart to make himself friends, surely he is a poor creature. But these two phrases are too much recognized: "Money makes the man," "Better be out of the world than the fashion."

A great many brethren put much stress on the subject of dress, against fashion. I would also call attention to this one thing, that there is more pride shown by those that own fine farms, stock, &c., than by those that show it by dress. I justify neither; but all should so walk as not to give offence to any of the members. But be charitable to all.

I would give a slight hint to faultfinders, "People that live in glass houses," &c. "He that is without sin, let him cast the first stone." Think before you charge others of faults. If you are perfect, let us hear from you.

I spent three days in the young and thriving state of Nebraska, among the Brethren. Heard brethren Stump and Forney preach on Sunday. They are so well supplied with speakers, that they can have three meetings at a time. They have, I believe, six speakers. The church is in a very prosperous condition; many of the members being of the young and rising generation. This is something I love to see. I heard a brother once say, "Give me the young and I can take the strongest holds of Satan."

They have a fine country; good soil, but little timber; wind they have to perfection, rather cool, too, but I fancy it is quite a pleasant ingredient in the hot weather. Pleasant homes dot the whole face of the country, groves being set out, and the face of nature being made more beautiful by the sturdy arms of the husbandmen, aided by wives and daughters; for they are not afraid (the ladies) of a little sunshine and wind. If you were to see them you would say, "Away with your pale house flowers and city belles'."

But I must leave Nebraska in its glory, and recross the Missouri river into Holt Co., again, to my home. I think much of Nebraska but more of this part of Missouri. This is one of the finest countries I have as yet been in, take it for health, agriculture, horticulture, and general enjoyment of a good appetite and good digestion. Indigestion you know is the cause of more woe than any thing else; but here work and exercise obviate all these things. I would again say to those coming to seek new homes, look over this county, and if you can't suit yourself here, go back home; for this is a good place. Some might say, "Why don't you stay?" Well, I will tell you, I have a curiosity to see a few other places beyond the Rocky Mountains, and then, perhaps, I may come back. But if I wished to farm, I would remain here. In the place to which I am going, wheat is the staple, but the richest countries are always corn countries.

I bid the Holt Co., brethren and friends adieu. Shall always remember their kindness to me.

St. Joseph, from which I write, is a city of about 25.000 inhabitants, situated on the Missouri river; has seven railroads completed; does a heaving business in shipping and pork packing. They are building a railroad bridge across the Missouri river at this place. Well I can't tell you more than it is a very important city.

I leave this evening on St. L. St. J. & R. R. R. Will write you in a few weeks from Plattsburg, Mo.

J. S. McFADDEN.

Brother Holsinger:—In addition to what brother Stalnaker has said on the subject of baptism, in No. 4, page 55, though we think he has fully and clearly proven by the word of God the true mode, we would further say, that all denominations, so far as we are acquainted, admit our mode of baptism to be valid baptism by their actions, and actions speak louder than words; for they would receive members of the Brethren without rebaptizing them. Here is the inconsistency: they deny our mode to be correct by words; and yet acknowledge it by deeds. We admit that the Father, Son and Holy Spirit are one in essence; but they are three in the Trinity. Likewise there are many other things spoken of in the word, which are one and yet three. The following are some of them: faith, repentance and baptism; spirit, water and blood; sin, death and judgment; death, burial and resurrection; heart, mind and soul; hay, wood and stubble; gold, silver and precious stones, &c. Others might be mentioned but let this suffice.

We also wish to say to brother Landon West, that Christ never taught "doctrines;" as he spoke of in No. 4, page 53. We don't find in the Word where He taught more than the one doctrine. We speak of this in love to brother Landon, so that he may not use this word in the plural in his preaching.

There was a question asked some time ago that never was answered. I desire an answer. "Who are the Amereican Bible Union Society?

C. G. GARMAN.

Brother Holsinger:—Please announce to the delegates and brethern coming to the District Meeting of Middle Pa., that the Meeting will be held, God willing, at the Mohler's meeting house, three miles from Mechanicsburg, and two miles from Shiremanstown. Brethren coming by Railroad on the 29th of April, both East and West, will all stop off at Mechanicsburg; and those coming on the 30th, will all stop off at Shiremanstown. Those coming by private conveyance, will find Mohler's M. H. on the State Road, six miles southwest of Harrisburg.

We desire some of our ministering brethren to come on Saturday the 27th, at least as many as would enable us to hold meetings at some half dozen different points. Who will come? let us hear by letter, befor the middle of April, and when you come, stop off at Mechanicsburg on the Cumberland Valley R. R.

MOSES MILLER.

Brother Holsinger:—Brother John H. Filmore's address is Modale, Harrison Co., Iowa. I also send you the following addresses of ministers, not in the Almanac for 1872.

Christian Harader, Quincy, Iowa. Daniel Harader, Quincy, Iowa. Ami Harader, Quincy Iowa. N. C. Workman, Sciola, Iowa.

I will give you others in a few weeks, whose addresses I do not remember at present.

N. C. WORKMAN.

Brother Henry:—We left Illinois last spring and came to Iowa. There are six members here and no speaker. We would be glad to have a minister stop with us and preach for us. We would be glad if some of the Brethren would inform us, through the C. F. C. of the nearest church to Chariton, Lucas county, Iowa, which is our address. M. E. DALE.

Query.

I would like if you would give an explanation on Matt. 24: 34.

In our days a generation is counted about thirty years; but in this connection it must signify a longer term, even till Jesus makes his second appearing, if I understand it right.

NOAH B. BLOUGH.

Will some one of the readers of the C. F. C. please give a scriptural solution of the following queries, originating out of Matt. 18: 10, "Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones;" &c.

1. Does the above solemn warning apply to the Shepherds, or to the candidates for baptism?

2. If to the former, why is it read to the latter? Why not read it to the Shepherds at the time of their installment?

3. When does the sinner renounce, or disown, the devil? Is this not done in the act of repentance? Is it possible for a sinner to be converted to God without renouncing the devil? If so, why not ask the applicant for immersion, "Hast thou renounced the devil," &c. J. LEEDY.

Human Creeds.

We have ever regarded human creeds as unnecessary, and the more we examine the matter the more are we confirmed in this belief. And it stops not here. There are some things not really necessary, that are neither hurtful nor objectionable, but this unnecessary appendage is injurious—a hindrance to the cause of Christ, and an abomination in the sight of God. Brethren and sisters let us stand fast in this doctrine; let us, as we have ever done, continue to oppose the delusive bond of Human Creeds. The following article is clipped from the American Christian Review; and we think it worthy of careful perusal:

Much has been said about dangerous doctrine. How much has been well directed, we stop not now to inquire; but it is the part of wisdom to consider honestly what is dangerous and what is not, what is safe and what is not. In the matter in hand, the question concerning human creeds, there is a safe course and a dangerous course. Which shall we take, the safe or the dangerous? All intelligent people say: By all means let us choose the safe course and pursue it. Let us see it. Which is it?

Among all the human creeds, what kind is universally regarded as the best, the safest and most reliable? All parties speak out at once: The kind nearest like the Bible. What kind is universally admitted to be the most dangerous? All answer: That kind that differs most widely from the Bible. All friends and advocates of human creeds are agreed in both of these answers. Let us, then, in view of these answers, take a look at the question.

I. The human creed nearest like the Bible is the best, the safest, and most reliable creed. This is the universal admission of the friends of human creeds. If they are correct in this; if the creed nearest like the Bible is the best, safest and most reliable, why is not the Bible itself better, safer and more reliable than any human creed, no matter how near like the Bible? If a church can get along with a human creed very near like the Bible, and make it answer the purpose, why can not it get along with the Bible itself and make it answer the purpose? If a church is safe with a human creed very near like the Bible, why is not a church safe that takes the Bible itself for its creed? If a man loves his creed better than any other human creed because it is nearer like the Bible, why does he not love the Bible itself better than all human creeds? Is it said: "We want something to keep us together?" If a creed very near like the Bible will keep us together, why will not the Bible itself keep us together? Some say: "We can not give up our human creed because it is so near like the Bible." Why, then, give up the Bible itself, as a rule of faith and practice, and take a human creed at all? There must be some deception and fallacy in this matter somewhere. If a man so love a human creed that he cannot give it up because it is so near like the Bible, it is strange, unaccountably strange, that he can not be induced to love the Bible itself, so that he will substitute it as a rule of faith and practice instead of any human creed! Surely, the Bible itself will answer any purpose that any creed very near like the Bible will serve. If a man can love a creed very near like the Bible he can love the Bible itself. If a creed like the Bible will keep a church together, the Bible itself will keep a church together. If a creed like the Bible is safe, the Bible itself is safe. There is no possible ground on which any man can plead for a human creed like the Bible instead of the Bible itself. Beyond all contradiction the Bible itself is as good, and will subserve any purpose as well, as any human creed like the Bible. If a creed like the Bible is safe, the Bible itself is infallibly safe. There can be no possible excuse for using a creed like the Bible.

II. If any argument is offered that is at all conclusive in favor of the adoption of a human creed, it must not be because it is like the Bible, but because it is not like the Bible. Can there, then, be any good argument made in favor of human creeds because they are not like the Bible? If a human creed can accomplish anything for the church, or for man, that the Bible can not, it must be, not because it is like the Bible, but because it is not like it. It must be because there is something in it that is not in the Bible, or something not in it that is in the Bible, or something in it some way differing from the Bible. It must be because there is an improvement on the Bible in some way. With any other view the Bible itself will do as well as the creed. Let us view it in every possible light.

1. Does any man plead for his human creed because it contains more than the Bible? because it contains something not in the Bible? If he does, how does he account for the omission in the Bible? Why did not Infinite Wisdom supply the omitted part? Why did he leave it for human wisdom to discover and supply the deficiency? Then, where did human wisdom discover the omission, and where did uninspired men get their authority to supply the omission which they supposed the wisdom of God had made, by making a human creed? Then, how shall we know that the addition is really supplying a deficiency, and not an addition where there was no deficiency, and an arrogant assumption and a wicked attempt to improve on the wisdom and work of God? No man can reasonably plead for a creed containing more than the Bible, without assuming that the Bible does not contain enough—that it is deficient in the omission of something needful—that a human creed supplies that deficiency—that uninspired men have supplied an omission in the inspired writings—that the wisdom of man has supplied a deficiency in the work directed by the wisdom of God, in adding some things omitted in the word of God, by furnishing a human creed! Who is prepared for this? Certainly, no sane man will argue thus.

2. Does any man plead for human creeds because they contain less than the Bible? or because the Bible contains too much? that something in the Bible can be omitted? If any man argues thus, we should like to know who made the discovery that the Bible contains too much! what human wisdom it was that discovered that the wisdom of God had inserted too much in the Bible! what uninspired men were authorized to leave out the superfluous things in the Bible! to make a book to subserve the purpose of a creed; a test of fellowship, or rule of faith and practice, with less in it than is contained in the Bible! Then, if the Bible contains too much, we should be pleased to know what part of it is redundant? what part of it should be omitted in a human creed? If the Bible contains too much, and a book should be made for a rule of faith and practice, leaving out the unnecessary parts of the Bible we should be pleased to know where the uninspired men are to be found who can determine what part shall be left out, and how much, in making a creed. This will be a delicate subject for uninspired men to consider, and rather a particular work for them to perform. But we need not pursue this train of thought any further, as no one claims to love his creed, because it contains less than the Bible, or insists that the Bible contains too much. In other words, no man claims that in making his creed an improvement has been made on the Bible, in putting less in it than is in the Bible, or objects to the Bible as his rule of faith and practice because it contains too much. We need not, therefore, continue this view further.

3. Does any man plead the merits of his creed on the ground that it is not like the Bible, or that he wants it because it differs from the Bible? Not a man, so far as we have seen. We have not yet heard a man talk who maintained that his creed was not like the Bible, or that his creed differed from the Bible. Still, this is the most plausible ground on which any man can make a plea for a human creed. If the Bible will not do for a rule of faith and practice, it is manifestly certain that no other book like the Bible will do. If we must have some other book than the Bible, it must not be like the Bible; it must differ from it, or be an improvement on it. The Bible itself will do as well as any other book like it. This is most unequivocally certain. But if we must have a book differing from the Bible, how much must it differ from it? Wherein must it differ from it? Then, who shall make this other book that must not be like the Bible, or that must differ from it? It will be a nice point for uninspired men to determine precisely where to differ from the Scriptures, and where to agree with them, so that the creed will do what the Bible can not do!

It is thus as clear as the light of day that no man can with any degree of reason plead for a human creed because it is like the Bible, for, in that case, the Bible would do as well as a creed; nor can any man plead for a creed containing more than the Bible, or then he would assume that the Bible contains too little, and that something must be added to it; nor can any man plead for a human creed because it contains less than the Bible, for then he assumes that the Bible contains too much and that some of it must be left out; nor can any man plead for a human creed because it differs from the Bible, for then he would assume that the Bible was wrong where the creed differs from it, and in the creed the wrong was corrected. There is, therefore, no ground on which men can make a plea for a human creed of faith and practice for the people of God without assuming deficiency in the Bible. Indeed, there is no avoiding two false assumptions: 1. That the Bible is deficient. 2. That uninspired men in making a human creed, have supplied the deficiency! If the Bible is sufficient, why not take it and nothing else? If it is not sufficient, wherein is it at fault? Does it contain too much? too little? or must we have something different from it? If the wisdom of God made a book deficient, can the wisdom of man supply the deficiency? If the wisdom of man can supply the deficiency, which one of the existing human creeds is the one in which the deficiency is supplied? Is it supplied in any one of them? Is it supplied in all of them? Has not the Lord left the creed-makers in one general mass of confusion? Nothing but one general chaos prevails among them! Still they can not be prevailed on to return to the wisdom of God, as set forth on the pages of the divine Scriptures, be taught and guided by the Lord? Paul said of the Jews, "Blindness in part has happened to Israel;" but the blindness that has befallen those smitten with the fallacy that they must have a human creed is worse than that, for it is not in part—it is total.

The excuses for a humanc reed are as poor as the excuse of Aaron for the golden calf. When called to account for it, he said: "The people are set on mischief." See Ex. xxxii. 22. He proceeded: "I cast it (the gold) into the fire, and there came out this calf." See Ex. xxxii. 24. The people turned away from Moses and said: "As for this Moses we know not what has become of him," and requested Aaron to make them gods who should go before them. Moses gave them a lesson; he had the golden calf ground into dust and put it in water, and compelled them to drink it, and had three thousand of the men slain before the eyes of the people. This ought to be a warning to all people who dare assume that the law of God is defective, or in any way deficient, and turn the people away from it to follow any law made by men—uninspired men. The people all over this land should repent and turn away from their human devices, and return to the law of the Lord. We all can see the wickedness of the Romanists following their unwritten traditions; but how much worse is it for them to follow their unwritten traditions than for us to follow written traditions? How much better are the written traditions of Protestants, in their human creeds, than the unwritten traditions of Rome?

Brother Henry:—I now anticipate moving to Iowa soon, Southeast of Waterloo, in Black Hawk Co, near Raymond station. Change my address from Chatham Centre, Medina Co., Ohio, to Raymond, Black Hawk Co., Iowa. Please insert this in the C. F. C. for the benefit of my correspondents in general. If any brethren or friends should pass that way, they are invited to stop with me. Stop off at Raymond station, and go one mile east to my home. The COMPANION comes regularly and has interesting reading matter. May the Lord bless us all in this time of life; and in eternity give us life everlasting.

From your brother in the Lord. Brethren pray for us in our behalf.

House Burned.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—I am sorry to inform you, that the house of our beloved brother Isaac Hoke, was entirely destroyed by fire, on Sunday night of the 11th of February last. The circumstances were about as follows:

The whole family had gone to meeting, and on returning home, about eleven o'clock, the house was all in flames, except the kitchen; so nothing was saved, except a little kitchen furniture. As to the origin of the fire it is still a mystery. Brother Hoke resides three miles south-west of Goshen, Indiana. His loss is about $3.000, and no insurance.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Yellow Creek branch, Bedford county, Pa., Feb. 29, LOUSINA, daughter of David and sister Elizabeth BISHOP, aged ten months and nine days. Funeral occasion improved by the Brethren, from Job, 1:18.

In the Snake Spring Valley branch, March the 5th, MATILDA, daughter of brother David and sister Jane Smith, aged 4 years, 8 months and 3 days. Funeral occasion improved by the Brethren.

January 15. DAVID M. ROHM, aged 18 years 10 months,

February 6, SARAH S. ROHM, aged 6 years, 4 months and 20 days.

February 10, PATIENCE E. ROHM, aged 3 years, 11 months and 29 days.

February 14, CHARLOTTE ROHM, aged 11 years. 5 months and 2 days.

The above four are children of Hiram and sister Charlotte Rohm. The first named, David, became a member of the church at the early age of 15 years, and lived a life as becometh the children of God.

S. A. Moore.

New Enterprise, Pa.

In the Elklick branch, Somerset county, Pa., March 16, friend JOHN GRINE, aged 67 years. The subject of this notice had been suffering many years from paralysis, being almost helpless. On the eve of the 16th at about 10 o'clock, the house in which he and his wife (a sister) and his son-in-law were living was found to be on fire. The neighbors coming to their assistance, finding that he was still in bed, and the flames ready to devour him any minute, rushed in to bring him out, and, to their astonishment, heard him say, "Nay, let me die here," taking hold of the bedstead, from which they could not loose him, and had to leave him a holocaust for the devouring flames. On the 19th, his ashes were conveyed to the Brethren's graveyard at Dale City. Occasion improved by C. G. Lint.

In the same branch, March 23, LYDIA, infant child of brother David Lindaman, aged 1 year and 12 days. Occasion improved by H. R. Holsinger and C. G. Lint. "For of such is the kingdon of heaven," Matt. 19:14, latter clause.

At Chenoa, McLean county, Ill., Feb. 23, SEBASTIAN BEAR, aged 76 years, 3 months and 24 days. The subject of this notice was formerly of Franklin county, Pa., bus a few years ago, his children having moved west, he chose the State of Illinois as his final earthly home. He was an exemplary member of the church for about fifty years. For weeks, months, and even years his afflictions were sore, sometimes almost intolerable, until at length the welcome messenger released him from the fetters of the flesh. I visited him four weeks before his decease, when he expressed his willingness to depart, saying, "I am not afraid to die." Exhorting him to endure patiently, I bade him a last, long farewell. May he rest in peace; and may we take the admonition of the prophet: "Set thine house in order; for thou shalt die, and not live."

Jacob Cromer.

March 14, of lung fever, sister LYDIA IVES, wife of friend Oran Ives, Story county, Iowa, aged 29 years, 9 months 27 days. She leaves a sorrowing husband and two sons, the youngest only 7 weeks old. The occasion was improved by Elder John Murrey of Marshall county, Iowa, and Wm. Thomas of Boon county, Iowa, conducted by Elder David Barkloo of Boon, from Amos, 4:12. On the 15th of March buried in the burying ground at Ontario, by request of the bereft husband.

John Murrey.

March 2, in East Nimishilen congregation near Hartville, Stark county, Ohio, SAMUEL ULRICH, aged 43 years, 4 months and 27 days. He had been away on business, and had nearly reached home, when he fell from his wagon and broke his neck, causing instant death. Funeral discourse by brethren David Young, J. B. Mishler and Henry Brumbaugh.

J. J. Hoover.

In the Bearcreek branch, Christian county, Ill., VERMINIA, Jan. 24, aged 4 years, 4 months and 27 days. Feb. 9, ARGUS, aged 5 years, 10 months and 17 days. Feb. 15, EDITH, aged 2 years, 4 months and 6 days.

The subjects of the above notice were the children of brother Jacob and sister Eve Whitehead. Thus in less than one month were our beloved brother and sister bereft of all their children by a species of croup that seems to baffle the skill of our physicians. Though it seems very hard to thus follow the loved little ones to the grave, yet after all, what better can we do, even under such distressing circumstances than to say with one of old, "It is the Lord, let him do what seemeth him good.

Daniel Varniman.

On the night of the 18th inst., sister JANE COLLINS, aged, as nigh as we could learn, 35 years. Funeral discourse at the house by Mr. Freed of the United Brethren, from Psalm 116:15: "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

J. H. Hockenberry.

February 27, after a lingering illness of three months, CATHARINE, daughter of brother Peter and Elizabeth Hoffman, aged 2 months and 19 days. Funeral discourse by the writer, from the words, "Let not your heart be troubled." John 14:1.

Also, January 8, infant daughter of the same parents. No funeral services, on account of sickness in the family.

J. B. Shoemaker.

In the Conemaugh congregation, Cambria county, Pa., Jan. 8, sister MARY A. HILDEBRAND, wife of brother David Hildebrand, and daughter of brother Joseph Funk, aged 38 years, 7 months and 9 days. Funeral services by the Brethren.

Stephen Hildebrand.

In Hagerstown, Washington county, Md., sister SARAH A. BACHTLE, wife of brother Charles Bachtle, and daughter of brother Samuel Resh, aged 29 years, 3 weeks and 4 days. She leaves two children and an affectionate husband to mourn their loss. Funeral service by brethren A. Cost and J. M. Wolf.

In Beaverdam branch, Frederick county, Md., Feb. 7, sister MARY HERRING, aged 97 years, 10 months and 13 days.

She was the eldest child of Elder Daniel Saylor, and widow of Henry Herring, who died a faithful brother forty-three years ago. She was a member of the church about 83 years, and was truly a "living" member. She was the mother of eight children, seven surviving her. She died without sickness, growing weaker and weaker, until, without the moving of a muscle, she ceased to breathe. In her younger days she suffered from dropsy and cancer, and about thirty-five years ago had lost her sight from cataract, but partly regained it so that she could read large print by the aid of glasses. Funeral sermon by brother D. R. Stiteley.

March 4, in the Georges Creek congregation, Fayette county, Pa., MARIAH, daughter of brother Jeremiah and sister Sarah Fouch, in the tenth year of her age. Funeral service by brother John C. Johnson, from Luke 18:17.

"HOW TO GO WEST."

Forty years ago, Illinois was as far West as most people wished to go, and journeys were made in the legendary "Prairie Schooner," but in these days of Progress and Improvement, the word West has come to mean Iowa. Nebraska, Kansas, Colorada, California, and the Territories, and the Traveler reaches almost any point therein by a splendid Line of Railroad.

This Line of Railroad is the Burlington Route, which starts from Chicago over the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R., from Indianapolis, over the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western Short Line, and from Logansaort, over the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw R. R., and running through BURLINGTON, reaches Omaha. Lincolen, Nebraska City, St. Joseph, Atchison, Leavenworth and Kansas City, connecting with the Union Pacific, Kansas Pacific and other Railroads running from those cities.

Always go "By way of Burlington" and you will be sure to be right.

The Burlington Route has admirably answered the question, "How to go West?" by the publication of a truthful and interesting document, filled with facts in regard to Time, Connections, Accommodations, rates of Fare, and otner interesting items and illustrated by a large map, truthfully showing the whole West, which they distribute free of charge. Copies, and additional information can be obtained by addressiug, General Passenger Agent. B. & M. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

THE
Christian Family Companion.

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

Love your Enemies.

„Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you." Math. 5: 44.

To love our enemies, is an injunction imposed on every true follower of the Lord Jesus Christ. To love our friends, our brethren and sisters, our parents and children, is no great thing; it is not difficult to love those who love us, to be friendly with those that do us good: the heathens do this. Although we are to love our parents, and our friends and brethren, yet this is not the love spoken of in the text. The Savior saith, "If ye love them that love you, what reward have you? do not even the publicans the same?" The greatest sinners, not only publicans, but infidels, murderers and highwaymen, will love, at least in some degree, those that love them—their associates. But to love our enemies is quite another thing: it is in direct opposition to the carnal mind. We are so naturally inclined to render evil for evil, to curse those that curse us, to hate them that hate us, to prosecute others—"Eye for eye, tooth for tooth." But the author of our text, was of quite a different disposition. "Prince of Peace" was one of his names: and as his name was, so did he manifest a life. There was in all his life peace. "A bruised seed shall he not break." Peace and love was his mission. I am inclined to think that love led him, and peace followed him. His teachings were all of this character. The heavenly host say at his incarnation. "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace." Hence the follower of the Prince of Peace, will show forth in his daily walk and department, more or less of the fruits of love. Unless this is the case, we may rest assured that all is not right. The barren figtree was to be cut down, it was only a hindrance to others. There must be fruit. The Master looks for fruit, and such fruit that is meet for the Master's use; and to love our enemies, is, as appears, one of the fruits sought for by the Master.

"Love your enemies." Now dear brethren and sisters, and all you who profess to be the followers of the meek and lowly Lamb of God, let us examine ourselves; let us prayerfully enter into a close, scrutinizing self-examination with our own-selves, and that in the light of the gospel, and see how the matter stands with us. Can and do we love our enemies? Do we render blessing for cursing? Are we doing good to them that hate us? Are we praying for those that persecute us, and who despitefully use us? By this rule we may know, and can know, whether we are "Born of God," or whether we are still in the gall of bitterness. The spirit of love shows no hatred no revenge, no bitterness, but contrariwise: "But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law." Gal. 5:22--23.

Again the Savior saith, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me;" Luke 9: 23. We indeed see a great deal of running to and fro: "Lo, here is Christ, lo, there is Christ;" but is there any self denial—any cross bearing—any following of Christ? Do we not see professers of religion, in all the follies and fashions of the world—in pride, in defrauding one another, in hating and cursing one another, in fightings, in quarrelling, in dancing and carousing? Instead of cross-bearing, we see them take the sword, in order to kill and slay each other; notwithstanding all their long prayers, loud professions, and long faces, this is nevertheless true. "For a pretense, they make long prayers &c." I ask in all sincerity, is this not so? do they not prove this to a demonstration, by their daily deportment? "Love your Enemies." Instead of loving their enemies they kill them, shoot them, destroy them in every possible way and manner, by fire and sword. Instead of blessing, we hear cursing and swearing and all manner of evil speaking. Instead of doing good to them that hate them, they do them all the evil they can, even to the destroying of life any property; persecuting others, in place of suffering persecution themselves. Dear reader, this is the way we see the so-called christian treat his enemies. But is it any wonder? we see him treat his brethren no better. Do we not see the christian, (so called at least), arrayed against christian, brethren of the same faith engaged in slaughtering and butchering each other by thousands, and multiplied thousand? Their ministers, the so-called ministers of Christ, of the Prince of Peace, go with their brethren, to the field of battle, and then and there encourage and urge them on to kill and destroy and butcher as many of their "brethren" on the opposite side as they possibly can, with musket and sword, with artillery and battery, mowing them down by volleys, shooting all kinds of deadly, destructive missiles, grape shot, cannonballs, bomb-shells, greek fire, &c., making widows and orphans without number. After the battle of carnage and slaughter is over, the minister who had encouraged his brethren in this wholesale butchering of each other, now returns with them to the sanctuary, and there, with his hands stained and reeking with the blood of his brethren, to his surviving brethren (Butchers) metes out the communion. O shame! where is thy blush? Is it possible that a professed minister of the gospel of Christ, of the gospel of Peace, can be guilty of such atrocious, outrageous, heaven daring sin! "As! was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the coming of the Son of Man;" they were eating and drinking, marrying, &c.

I ask the reader, whoever you be, is this not outright murdering by the wholesale? Is it not heartsickening to think of these things—that such is the religion of the nineteenth century! And yet these butchers and men-killers are talking of christianizing the world? They send their missionaries and emissaries among the heathens to preach them Christ, the Prince of Peace, with the Bible in one hand and the sword in the other. Wo unto you scribes and pharisees, hypocrites, for ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when he is made, you make him twofold more a child of hell than yourselves." Again, "Ye serpents, ye generations of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell?" I would cite the reader to Math. 23: 13-33. Ponder well; choose the good part, with Mary of old, is the prayer of the writer.

The Little Foxes.

My dear sisters,it is with the greatest love and affection that I drop these few words of both admonition and ecouragement, to myself as well others; for I have my besetments and my temptations and crosses to bear, as well as you all; and I know that we daily have to be upon our watch-tower, watching the little foxes; for let us remember it is they that spoil the vines. We discover that our path is very narrow; and whilst we are traveling along we meet something very enticing, and it seems to almost hang over the way that we can scarcely pass without partaking at least part of it. So we pass on until we come to another temptation, and we yield a little to that; and so, my dear sisters, I fear sometimes that we have not got Satan exactly behind us. I fear that he is by our side, offering us a kind hand to lead us along, and tell us where we may get a nice pattern, perhaps one of a later style, or he may tell us that a few folds, or ruffles, or a fancy collar would be very nice. But here we should watch him and say, "Get thee behind me Satan." God forbid that we should give heed to any of his flatteries; for it is dangerous for us to obey him, in these things. By so doing we may lay a stone in the pathway for some week sister to stumble at, while others may follow our example, and think, if the brethren allow that one, why not me, also. And so we go on, measuring ourselves by ourselves, and by so doing many may fall into the same error. Sometimes we may consult the elder brethren or sisters (which has been done) whether they think this or that suitable for us to wear. But I consider this wrong; we should take the book and consult the Lord about the matter there. He will tell us that he "hates a proud look," and, we may imagine, much worse a proud heart. He will tell us to mind not high things, but condescen d to low things, and that we should not wear gold, nor plait the hair; and we need not read very far until we fell condemned in some way. Then we feel unhappy. So let us try, then, to be content with plain apparel, and this will be pleasing in the sight of God. And let our walk, conduct, and conversation, all harmonie together; for if we through weakness make one misstep, some one will be ready to sneer and scoff at us. But let us take fresh courage, and pray for such, that God will not let his wrath come upon them; but that he may spare them another year, peradventure they may bring forth some fruit to his name's honor and glory. Please receive these few words in love, as I have presented them unto you; and let us pray the Lord to give us grace, that we may be strong to run the race with patience through this world of sin and temptations.

O may I never tire nor faint.
Trying to be a humble saint.
But pressing forward toward the prize,
May my affections pierce the skies.

Duty of Parents to Their Children.

It is often a query, why children have so little regard for the command, "Honor thy father and mother?" Perhaps the fault is with the parents; perhaps the father or mother or both, have neglected to bring them up in the admonition of the Lord. I have often been made sorry, to see a parent fly into a passion at the least misstep of a child, and while in this passion misuse the child; while others will whip for every transgression, and sometimes on mere suspicion that they have commited some error. Others are continually scolding their children; then telling their neighbors what unruly children they have. Such a course is very wrong of parents, and not according to the comands and examples of the scriptures. Paul in his epistle to the saints at Ephesaus 6: 4, says, "And ye, fathers provoke not your children to wrath, but bring them up in the nature and admonition of the Lord." Dear brethren and sisters, let us try to prove to our children, that we love them, by kind words and actions; and when we require any duty of them, let us be sure that we are not requiring too much of them; and be firm as well as kind; so that, when we request them to do anything, we may know that it is done as commanded. Let us never make promises we cannot fulfil or they will be sure to lose confidence in us, as we have told an untruth. And whosoever loveth and maketh a lie is without the City; Rev. 22: 14—15. We should also be careful not to inflict punishment for every crime a child commits in ignorance, or it will learn to lie to keep the parent from inflicting punishment. Better admonish them not to do so any more; but if the rod must be used let the child know what it is for, and that it is for his own good. Let the conversation of the parents be mild, kind and lovely, and the children will in a great measure, partake of the same spirit. Whereever I have noticed godliness, Christian forbearance, in a family, there I have seen a happy family.

Then dear brethren and sisters, we who have children, let us set an example of meekness and humility for our children; that our homes may be pleasant to all; and that we may go to our graves in peace, with the hope of a bright resurrection. I have written in love.

For the Companion.

Love One Another.

Dear brethren and sisters, I will now write a few lines for your consideration. Christ teaches us to love one another. I am afraid some of us come short in this teaching, inasmuch as we do not our duty to the poor. We must be more charitable, and help encourage the poor ministering brethren; for many of them must work hard six days in the week to sustain their families, and on the seventh (or sabbath day) they must go ten or twelve miles to preach. And often times they are called away on a mission, and their families must sustain themselves for a week or two; and they get no pay for their labor, not even their expenses are paid.

Now when we who are rich in this worlds goods consider this matter, may I ask. Is there any among us who would like to take their place? I am constrained to say, No, not one. But remember the scripture tells us the poor have the surest promises. of we loved one another as we ought, we would help the poor in every possible way; so that we might have an assurance of eterning into the joys of heaven. No. 12 of this vol. contains an article which bears the heading, "Danger of Riches." I think no one who is rich in this world's goods, who reads, and reflects upon that article, with care, should refuse to send in his mite, for charitable purposes, lest his assurance of eternal life will be doubtful- Let us then be up, and doing, all we can to help the poor and needy. Your unworthy sister.

Rates of Interest.

The State can no more regulate the price of money than the price of corn. If the supply was always the same, and the demand the same, fixed prices might be made; but this is not the case. One year an abundant harvest is produced; and there being a foreign demand, high prices are obtained. This and other causes make money plenty; and there being but little demand for it, rates of interest will be low. Perhaps the next year the crops fail, and the "necessaries of life" must be bought from a neighboring State or nation. Money becomes scarce, and rates of interest high.

From these facts it is unwise for the State, or the Church, to try to fix a price on a bushel of corn, the rent for an acre of land, or arate of interest on money. Commerce will fix prices regardless of legislative enactments or Church disciplines.

Another trouble about the Church making uniform a rate of interest is, that rates of interest are not the same in all states. Ten per cent, we bleieve is "lawful" interest in Indiana and six per cent, in Ohio. In some States any rate is lawful that the parties agree upon.

To sell an article for more than it is worth, may be sintul, but to loan money for what it is worth, is no sin.

Thoughts on the C. F. Companion.

The "companion" is true
To the Bible and God,
Where it tells us pursue,
And to cleave to his word.

It is good for the youth,
For the weak and strong.
It will guide to the truth,
And will do us no wrong.

It is good for the old,
The afflicted and tried,
It will make us more bold
If in Christ we abide.

Then subscribe for its lines
Pay up what is due;
Never mind the hard times,
But your journey pursue.

To the realms of the blest,
Where the saints dwell in light;
There for ever at rest
You will shine ever bright.

Be Cheerful.

BY J. W. BEER.

Why, oh! why this look of sadness?
Why this heavy, downcast eye?
Cheer your heart with thoughts of gladness,
Pass dejected spirits by.

Give not o'er to needless sorrow,
Chase it quickly all away;
Wait not till the coming morrow,
Bid it flee at once—to-day.

Gloom, like threat'ning clouds, may gather
Tears, like drenching rain, may fall;
Choose the pleasant sunshine rather—
Glorious sunshine, free to all.

Choose the joyous, buoyant spirit,
Choose the happy, cheerful heart;
Live a life of active merit,
Play the lovely pious part.

Cheerful spirits shine forth brightly,
Spreading sweetness all around;
Leading forward, daily, nightly,
To a home where joys abound.

Brother, sister, fellow-mortal,
Onward, upward make your way;
Pressing to the happy portal,
Op'ning to a blissful day.

MIND this—It is better to accomplish perfectly a very small amount, than to half-do ten times as much.

Manners.

While few things are more useful and worthy of cultivation, few things are more improperly used than manners; not because people have not enough of them, but because they fail to make the proper use of the right kind.

It is not very uncommon to see people have two sets of habits: one for home, which of course is not very good; and another for society, which must usually be of the best class. The former is used the most, especially if at home a great deal; the other is kept in store for company, at home or abroad. Their manner of using the latter, clearly indicates that they are not used to them, and would do much better with the other set, on which they have practiced daily; but this they are ashamed of, and keep it close, that their friends may never have an opportunity of seeing it in full. By this way of acting in society, one fails to exhibit what he really is, and is therefore acting the part of deception.

One should act out what he is: in short, when in society act like you do at home, that your friends may see what you are. If one is ashamed to use the same set of manners in society that he keeps at home, he would do well to dispose of them, and cultivate a set that he is not ashamed of. What is well calculated to make society pleasant, is needed at home to make your family happy. Manners that are not fit for society, would yield the owner a large profit of true social felicity, if he would exchange them for a better set.

If persons would take the same trouble to have good habits at home that they wish to exhibit in society, they certainly would have far less family difficulties, and besides this make their little homes an earthly paradise. Home is the proper place to train for society. Here all that makes people and society truly pleasant, may be used at home with all the happy results desirable. In short, keep your good manners at home, and they will follow you wherever you go.

On Feet-Washing.

Dear Brethren:—Being looked upon as a church antiquarian, I have been requested by many brethren to write another article on the subject of Feet-washing, particularly since last Annual Meeting has appointed a committee to investigate it, who, we think, did it in a very loose and unsatisfactory manner. I enjoy a personal acquaintance with many of the most eminent brethren who lived and labored contemporary with the fathers and founders of the church, who were therefore well acquainted with its history and practices, from its commencement, from whose lips I have gathered much valuable information not else known.

But still I deem it unnecessary to spend time to prove that the single was the first mode practiced by the Brethren. Because that is an established fact, proved and testified to by so many living and dead witnesses whose declarations I have on paper, signed by themselves, a few of which I shall insert at the close of this article as an overwhelming evidence for all time. And it is also admitted by every old member in the entire East that knows anything at all about our early history. Therefore I think that needs no farther proof from me. But I will try to give some account of the origin and history of the double or deviated mode as now practiced and contended for by many in our day. To do that so as to be properly understood, I must necessarily begin with Conrad Beissel, Martin Urner, and the Hermits of the Ridge, as they were generally called, which was a defunct sect of the ancient mystics who called themselves "The Women in the Wilderness," in reference to Rev. 12: 1-6, and founded by John Kelpius in 1694. He was a ripe scholar in all the mystical and visionary theology of origin, as also of the more modern effusions of Jacob Behmen, Peter Poiret, and others. This Conrad Beissel was also a very learned man of the same stamp, who came to America on account of his religious enthusiasm. He was unmarried and lived for awhile with my great grandfather, Peter Becker, in Germantown Pa., where although a profound mystic he soon became convinced of the duty and necessity of baptism; but considered himself so eminently holy, and far advanced in the divine life, that he could for a long time see nobody worthy to administer it to him, until the idea struck him, that as Jesus Christ condescended to be baptized by his inferior servant John, so he thought he might also be baptized by one inferior to himself, and accordingly was baptized by Peter Becker, with six others, on the 12th of November, 1724, in the stream called the Pequa in Lancaster county, Pa., which was the nucleus of the old Conestoga church, that was organized the same year, and chose this Conrad Beissel to be their minister; but he was still so imbued with the mystic theology of those hermits, with whom he still held intercourse, that he not only taught different from the Brethren, but soon began to practice different, and introduced so many of their whims, besides some of his own, that the more faithful part of the church could not consent to, consequently they split, and organized a little church for themselves and left him to go on as he pleased. The most prominent of his innovations were, the Vow of Celibacy, the Seventh day Sabbath, and the Double Mode of Feet-washing.

About the same time the church of Coventry in Chester county was organized, likewise with the assistance of Peter Becker, which chose the above mentioned Martin Urner for their minister, who was also an offspring and and convert of those Mystic Hermits. He was baptized by Peter Becker on the 25th of December, 1723; but still retained so much of their mystic theology, that in many points he agreed with Beissel rather than with the general order and sentiments of the Brethren, and consequently introduced some of his changes, to their great dissatisfaction, among which was that of the double mode of feet-washing.

The Brethren expostulated against it, and tried by all friendly means to convince him of the impropriety of that mode, but he being backed up by Beissel, had so many mystical reasons, and sophistical arguments in its favor, that they could not overcome him, and strange as it may seem, the most of his flock sided with him, although contrary to the established practice of the church, and the very plain command of scripture. But notwithstanding, the double mode was introduced and established in that church, and most likely also in that of Conestogo, because they were not only twin sisters (being organized the same year) but also adjoining, and worshipped and labored together a great deal. At least we we know that the double mode was practiced in that church not very long afterward.

This, dear brethren, is the true origin of the double mode of feet-washing, according to the most ancient and most reliable information that can possibly be obtained. And being once introduced in these two churches it soon spread like an epidemic. These churches were the embryo from which the most of the churches in the Union sprang. Being, with very few exceptions, all farmers, as the price of land advanced their straightened circumstances obliged them to leave, to seek for cheaper homes elsewhere. Consequently we find that a large number of them moved to other places—particularly to what was then called the Conecocheague, now partly embraced in the counties of Franklin and Perry and established churches there as early as 1743. Some went to the German colonies that were then setling in Virginia where they likewise established churches at a very early day.

From the Conestoga church many went to Maryland and settled within the limits of the old Pipe Creek, and Beaverdam churches. Prominent among them was Daniel Saylor or Seiler, ancestor of Elder D. P. Saylor. He was baptized in the Conestoga by Michael Pfoutz, on the 29th of March, 1752, and his posterity constituted the leading members of the church there for nearly one hundred years. And as he was the offspring of a double mode church, he very naturally brought that mode along to Maryland, as we suppose the others did to the places whithersoever they went, which accounts for the very early practice of it in those churches that were planted by them. By a careful research I find that nearly all the churches that descended from them adopted the double mode and strenuously adhered to it, while those that descended from the mother church of Germantown, invariably practiced the single mode wherever they established churches, and they did establish a good many in different parts of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, Virginia and in the Carolinas, both North and South. From there they began to pitch their "tents" westward into Tennessee and Kentucky, where they became very numerous, until Brethren from the North and East interfered with their practice. Then they dispersed through the Territories of Indiana and Illinois, until they reached what was then called the Black Hawk Purchase, now Jefferson county, Iowa, establishing the single mode wherever they went.

But notwithstanding this difference they still fellowshipped each other—communed together and were for a long time on friendly terms, by letting each observe it as they thought proper. Until in later years some domineering Elders that would rather be Lords over God's Heritage, than examples to the flock, began to assail the singlemode,and coerced several chnrches against their will to the double mode, and even when so far as to disown some that would not submit, some of the members that would not submit, (of which I could give instances in detail, but charity forbids it at present,) but on account of the great opposition that was exerted against it, the single mode declined very fast, for they forbid to organize any more churches in that way and many that were organized in that way changed, some voluntarily, because they were indifferent, and thought it more convenient—some by persuasion, others by compulsion, and others for the sake of being popular with the general order of the day. So that in many places where the single mode was once extensively practiced it became nearly extinct. But I am happy to say that it is fast reviving again. For many of the churches in the east, as also in the south and west, are beginning to see their error and are now trying to recover the old land marks of their fathers again, after the example of Christ, insomuch that several churches have recently been organized in the single mode, and several have already changed from the double to the single, and quite a number are just on the point of changing, merely holding back to see first what the Annual Meeting will do. And from my knowlege of the churches all over the Union, I predict that it will not be long until it becomes the general order again. And even now I am safe in saying, if it were left to a general vote of all the churches there would be an overwhelming majority in its favor. For I know hundreds and thousands in all parts of the Brotherhood are anxious to follow the example of our Lord. And the plan now adopted has aroused a universal jealousy among the lay members that are in sympathy with the single mode, to such an extent that a speedy issue may be expected. From the proceedings of past years it appears as if the Annual meeting either feared to face the subject publicly, or else did not wish that justice should be done to it; and now to avoid both, the argument is made that all the "ordained elders" only shall meet on the day before to consider this weighty subject in the absence of the laity.

Here let me ask: Do the ordained Elders constitute the church, or, do the members? If the members, why then not consider it in their presence, as the parties concerned? Answer: Because so great a majority of them are in favor of the single mode, that we would be in danger of losing our point, if considered in their presence. But "all the ordained Elders" we do not fear, for they are mostly opposed to it, and for the sake of their popularity they are more apt to agree with us, than the laity. See 1st Kings, 22d chapter.

I might have said much more of the single mode, also of the arguments that were advanced in favor of the double; but as my article is already so long, and all that can possibly be said in its favor has not the weight of a feather in the balance of the sanctuary, when compared with the p lain, thus saith the Lord, "to do as I have done to you," Iwill therefore close by subjoining a few of the the testimonials mentioned at the commencement of this article, verbatim, as I have them over their own signatures—some in their own handwriting, but 1st, I would say for Alexander Mack, that although he did bear with and occasionally communed with brethren of the double mode, he was never reconciled to it, and did never allow it to be performed that way in his church, although it was several times attempted. The deviation was a matter of silent grief with him during life, and on his death bed he charged his successors, among many other things, to faithfulness, and not to submit to this change in the manner of washing feet, &c. This dear brethren is a well known fact from the lips of one that was well acquainted with him.

2d. Elder John Fox, a grand son of Alexander Mack, says, under the date of September 17, 1871:

"I am now 85 years old, and feel that my days are few. I have been a member of the Brethren's church, at Germantown and Philadelphia, for 59 years. My father and mother were both members of the mother church in Germantown. I remember well, when but a boy, of being led by the hand of my father and mother to the Lovefeast and Communion at Germantown. I distinctly recollect seeing the brother being girded with a long towel, and that he did wash the brother's feet, and wiped them with the towel wherewith he was girded. And I also very distinctly recollect seeing brother Peter Keyser wash and wipe my grandfather Alexander Mack's feet, and brother Alexander Mack would wash and wipe brother Keyser's feet. I remember this well, for I was 18 years old when my grandfather died. And that has been the custom down to the present day, in the church at Germantown, and who can doubt but that my grandfather, Alexander Mack, who was the presiding Elder at the time, "received it direct from his father who was the first Elder the German Baptist church had."

"I also recollect a conversation which Bro. John Reighter told me took place between Peter Keyser and himself, a short time before brother Keyser died. It was on the mode of Feet-washing. Brother Keyser said: "I cannot tell why they altered the original way, unless it was for the sake of convenience. But, brother John, it was not always so. Let us hold to the commandment." And so I say, we have the plain word and the example of our blessed Master, and the command that "ye should do as I have done." What need we any more testimony? Let us obey, that we may meet the approbation of our blessed Lord and master Jesus Christ, and that it may be well with us, when we are called from time to eternity. JOHN FOX.

3d. Sister Susan Douglas says: "I am 82 years old, I remember brother Alexander Mack perfectly well. When I was a little girl he visited my father, John Hiseler's house very often; it was his principal stopping place. He lived at Chestnut Hill. He would walk down to meeting, and after meeting would come to our house to dinner, and my brother George would take him home, riding behind him on horse-back.

"I became a member young, and well do I remember his exceeding plainness of dress, He wore a broad-brimmed hat, and dressed very plain. I remember distinctly seeing him at "Lovefeasts," gird himself with a towel, take a basin of water, wash the feet of the Brethren and wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded, which mode has been continued to this day in the old Mother church in Germantown. I do also distinctly remember hearing of a departure from the example of Christ in feet-washing, and the sorrow expressed by the members at Germantown that it should have taken place.

"At a later date, when I had become a member, I heard our dear old brother Peter Keyser say, when speaking to the sisters at Germantown, who had for the sake of dispatch and convenience on one or two occasions, when a great many members from Coventry and elsewhere were together, that one washed and another wiped, he admonished them for it and said "The New Testament is our creed; let us continue to practice strictly in accordance with its teachings." SUSANNA DOUGLASS.

In another paper of an earlier date she says, among other things: "I well remember when I was a child of about 7 or 8 years old, I was sick in bed with something like poison or erysipelas. One Sunday afternoon when old Alexander Mack came into the room and found me in that condition, he asked for a feather and some sweet cream, which he smeared on the inflamed part, and blessed it as he pased over with the feather. I am now 78 years old, anp feel that blessing to this day, and hope to take it home in eternity."

4th. Elder John Price. Of him I have so many papers written at different times, and all so good that I hardly know which to make choice of. They are also of high authority, as he remembers Alexander Mack very distinctly. His father was many years a co-laborer with him, and according to records his grandfather assisted in organizing the first church of the Brethren in America. The following extract is from an excellent article he wrote for the COMPANION, Vol. 5, p. 229.

"I will now say something about the mother church at Germantown. My father, John Price, was a member of that church and a co-laborer with Alexander Mack many years. They both preached at Germantown and Indian Creek. I remember seeing brother A. Mack coming to meeting in his cart with a white cover over it. I also remember seeing him wash the feet of the brethren, and wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded. My father and he were very closely and tenderly connected in the ties of Christian love and fellowship. Their mutual affection may be said to have been as strong as that of David and Jonathan. They both contended earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. Both were fearful that the change in feet-washing, which had then already been effected in certain quarters, might be extended in the Brotherhood. So great was the anxiety of my father that before he died, he gave me a charge never to consent to this change. I promised him I never would, and I shall hold that promise sacred as long as the Lord spares my life: because I have the answer of a good conscience in thus closely adhering to the Divine oracles. Signed, JOHN W. PRICE.

5th. Elder Abram Harley, in a lengthy communication of August 16th, 1868, says: "As for the mode of feet-washing, the early fathers performed it single, that is, he that washed also wiped with the towel he was girded with. This mode was practiced by my grandfather, Rudolph Harley, and by my old Uncle, John Price. They would once in a while relieve each other, so also the sisters. This is the feet-washing mode that was practiced at Indian Creek, from seventy to seventy-five years ago, when I was a boy, and at that time a strict observer of what was going on in religion. ABRAHAM HARLEY.

This is also a testimony of high authority, as he remembers A. Mack and others of the old Fathers, very distinctly, as they were frequent visitors at his father's and grandfather's with whom he lived. His great grandfather also assisted in organizing the first church of the Brethren in America. He was about twenty years old when brother Mack died.

6th. Sister Hagy says, under March 17th, 1868, "I became a member of the church at Indian Creek, when about 16 years of age. Forty-eight years ago I resided awhile at Germantown, where I attended a Lovefeast and Communion, and while feet-washing was going on among the sisters, one of them happened to wash and another wipe. I, a little girl, but a close observer of things, remembered that scripture did not read so—and remarked at the time, that, 'that is not the right way.' Afterwards brother Peter Keyser learned of the circumstance and reproved them sharply for doing so, and said they must not do so again, for it was not according to the word." ELIZABETH HAGY.

I have now given six impartial testimonies from different churches, besides a sketch of history, which I think sufficient to convice every one that has a will to be convinced, and for others it is of no use to write. For, if even an ArchAngel would sound it forth in peals of thunder it would hardly convince those determined not to be convinced. Therefore I shall close by referring to my previous articles in COM., Vol. 4, p 328 and 438. ABRAM H. CASSEL.

Christ the Express Image of God.

Christ is the express image of God; and he, being in the form of God, is equal with God. If he is the express image of God, he is in possession of a body, and his body hath many members, and all the members of his one body being many are one body. His hands and his feet were pierced with rugged nails; his side was pierced with a spear and forthwith came out blood and water; and he bowed his head and gave up the Ghost. Hence we conclude that his body hath many members; "for the body is not one member but many."

But if Christ is equal with God and is the express image of his person, he is also in possession of God's attributes, both as a being and a person.

First, God is eternal: "The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms." If God is eternal, Christ is also eternal; for "the same was in the beginning with God." "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last."

God is omnipresent, and so is Christ: "Whither shall I go from thy spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven thou art there; if I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there; if I take the wings of the morning, and I dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, even there shall thy hand lead me and thy right hand shall hold me." "Can any hide himself in secret places that I shall not see him? saith the Lord. Do I not fill heaven and earth? saith the Lord." "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, * * * to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Hence we see that God and his Son are omnipresent.

Not only are they omnipresent, but also omnipotent: "Behold, I am the Lord, the God of all flesh: is there anything too hard for me? The Lord has made the heaven and the earth by his great power. There is nothing too hard for him." Jesus came and spake to the disciples saying: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." Here we observe that Jesus has all power: he has power to lay down his life and take it again: "I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received from my Father." Hence we see that they are omnipotent having almighty power.

And again we learn that the Father and the Son are omniscient—having an infinite knowledge: "Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world." "For if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things." "Now when Jesus was in Jerusalem at the passover, in the feast-day many believed in his name, when they saw the miracles which he did. But Jesus did not commit himself unto them; because he knew all men, and needed not that any should testify of man; for he knew what was in man." He did not trust himself in the power of men, for he knew how they would act. Hence we learn that God is omniscient, and that Christ possesses the same attribute. They are in possession of the quality of knowing all things at once. They are all-knowing, all-discerning, all-searching, all-seeing—all-beholding.

And farther, we learn that they are unchangeable; for "the counsel of the Lord standeth forever." "His word is forever, settled in heaven, and his faithfulness is unto all generations; he has established the earth, and it abideth." "Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever."

They are without sin: Christ "did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth."

They are also objects of worship: "Worship him that made heaven and earth." "Worship God." The wise men of the east came to worship the young child Jesus. "They that were in the ship came and worshipped him." "And they worshipped him, and returned to Jerusalem with great joy." The Father and the Son are one: "My Father and I are one." "The Father is in me and I in him." They are the objects which Christians worship, and what one possesses the other does also.

Help Yourself.

Fight your own battles. Weed your own row. Ask no favors of any one, and you'll succeed much better than one who is always beseeching some one's influence or patronage. No one will ever help you as you can help yourself, because no one will ever be so heartily interested in your affairs. The first step will not be such a long one, perhaps; but, carving your own way up the mountain, you make each one lead to another, and stand firm in that while you chop still another out. Men who have made fortunes are not those who have had five thousand dollars given them to start with, but boys who have started fair with a well-earned dollar or two. Men who have acquired fame have never been thrust into popularity by puffs begged or paid for; or given in friendly spirit. They have outstretched their own hands, and touched the public heart. Men who win love do their own wooing, and I never knew a man to fall so signally as one who induced his affectionate friends to speak a good word for him. Whether you work for fame, for love, for money, or any thing else, work with your own hands, and heart, and brain. Say, "I will" and someday you will conquer. Never let any have it to say, "I have dragged you up." Too many friends some times hurt a man more than none at all. As for women, this applies as well.

A woman who fights her own way upward always succeeds. Begin by saying, "I am as good as any body, if not a little better." Don't say it loud, but act it. You can teach a school or start a manufactory, or a little shop, or paint or scribble, and live by as well as the best man, if only you know your forte, and do not pitch upon the very thing you have no genius for. Shut up your troubles and embarassment in your own heart.

Ask no one to help because you are a woman—all the same, good men often will out of the kindness of their hearts—and such aid, unasked for, can harm no one; and your first success, achieved by your own hands, will be so sweet that you shall hardly have words in which to speak of it. Ask help of Heaven, and often, you will be heard; but of man ask seldom as you can, I never saw the words, "She helped herself," written on a woman's tombstone by way of eulogy. But I should like to have it truthfully engraved upon mine; at least, I should like to deserve it.

TRUTH.

Truth only needs to be for once spoke out,
And there's such music in her and such rythm
As makes men's memories her joyous slaves,
And clings around the soul as the sky clings
Round the mute earth—forever beautiful. —Lowell.

H R. Holsinger:

DEAR SIR:—I have been thinking of writing to you, but never thought it worth while, as I did not think you would take any account of it. I have been in hopes that the PIOUS YOUTH would continue to live, but I have given up all hopes. I am a little out of sorts about it, but I hope it will come to life yet. If it does not, I will be disappointed. I have regarded the PIOUS YOUTH as one of the best juvenile magazines of the day, in the way of instructing us in the way we should go to be happy in eternity. It is down on tobacco; that is what I like to see. I think it looks so disrespectful for young men to go into church and spit tobacco juice on the floor. If I were a young lady, I would not associate with a young man if he used tobacco. And a great many young men will drink whiskey and that is another great sin. I do not use tobacco or whiskey, and I never intend to commence. I think using tobacco and whiskey, is something that no boy ought to commence. It is easier to commence than to quit. There are not many who commence to drink whiskey, but what they become drunkards, and if they have families, they will come to poverty, and the husband and father will go to a drunkard's grave. Playing cards, is another vice that a great many men indulge in; it runs away with the money and leaves their families penniless. But I don't think there are as many people ruined by playing cards, as there are by the use of whiskey; but there are hundreds too many.

I will close for this time, hoping that the YOUTH will continue to live.

Truly,

Follow Copy.

A short time since, a lad in a printing office received from his master a list of Scripture questions and answers to be set up and printed In the progress of the work, the lad turned aside and asked the foreman if he must "follow copy;" that is, set it up just as it was written. "Certainly," said the foreman. "Why not?" "Because this copy is not like the Bible, and it professes to be the language of that book." "How do you know it is not like the Bible." "Why, I learned some of these proofs at a Sunday-school ten years ago, and I know that two of them are not like the Bible." "'Well, then do not follow copy but set them up as they are in the Bible." The lad got the Bible, and made it "the copy" his guide and pattern.

"Follow copy," children, wherever you find it according to the Bible, but do not stir a step when you find it differs. Through all your life make the Bible your one copy.—Look to your words, your actions, your doctrines, and your practices—see that all are according to the Bible, and you will be right.—Loving Words.

A Little Hero.

A gentleman, while passing through a street in New York, heard a child's voice from a basement crying, "Help! help!" He ran in and found a little five-years old boy holding a bed blanket around his sister, two years younger, who had caught her clothes on fire, and the little hero had succeeded in putting out the flames. The boy, in answer to the question why he wrapped the bed blanket around his sister's burning clothes, said his ma had told him that was the best way to put out fire; and as to why he cried "Help! help!" that he was afraid he could not do it and wanted some one to help him. He was then asked why he did not leave his sister and run into the street and cry for help. He answered with tears in his eyes, "No I never would have left her. She was my sister. Had she burned up, I would have burned too."

The Snow-Prayer.

A little girl went out to play one day in the fresh, new snow, and when she came in she said:

"Mamma, I couldn't help praying when I was at play."

"What did you pray, my dear?"

"I prayed the snow prayer, that I heard once in Sunday-school, 'Wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow.'"

"What a beautiful prayer! And here is a sweet promise to go with it: 'Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow.'"

And what can wash them white—clean from every stain of sin? The Bible answers: "They have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."

Vice.

The poison fangs of serpents, "when not employed, are hidden from sight by a fold or projection of the gum." It is only as the serpent strikes that the fangs are shown! Is not this a fit emblem of vice? The deadliest vice plays around the soul with hidden fangs, and long deludes us into vain imaginations of security. It conceals its venom until disclosed in the infliction of a fatal wound; and we often awake to the conciousness of danger only when the hope of escape has perished forever. There is no safety except in early flight, and distance and abhorrence maintained through life.

The Schoolmaster's Trap.

"During my boyhood," said an old man, "we had a schoolmaster whose way of catching idle boys was rather odd. One day he said to us,—

"'Boys, I must have closer attention to your books. The first one of you that sees another boy idle, I want you to inform me, and I will attend to the case."

"'Ah!' thought I to myself, "there is Joe Simmons, that I don't like. I'll watch him, and if I see him look off his book I'll tell.'

"I did so, and was caught in the trap the schoolmaster had set."

—Wealth is desirable for what it enables to do or enjoy; but, it is not desirable at the cost of honesty and honor and true manhood. It is not desirable when truth and virtue and religion—when honorable usefulness and happiness here, and eternal happiness hereafter—must be sacrificed for it.

Be praised not for your ancestors, but for your virtues.

Letter from New Hampshire.

Below we give an extract of a letter from New Hampshire, dated Feb. 29th. 1872.

"H. R. HOLSINGER :

Respected Friend;

Having become informed that the "German Baptists" make non-resistance a test of fellowship in the receiving of members, we have been interested to learn more of their views, and have recently received, through the generosity of a friend, specimen copies of your valuable paper, the Companion, and think it contains much valuable matter, though we have not yet had time to examine it fully.

Is it indeed a common thing in all your churches to make non-resistance a test of fellowship ? As it regards myself, I have never become identified with any sect. Am over fifty years, and have formerly attended the sort of baptist meetings prevalent here, until within some eight or ten years past. But I have become fully persuaded that it is no longer my duty to give countenance to them. You will see some of the reasons by examining the essays I send you."

T. F. TUKESBURY.

Friend Tukesbury is hereby informed that we do in all the congregations in our Brotherhood make non-resistance a test of fellowship. And this not only in refusing to bear arms, but our members are not allowed to "Muster" or learn war. More still, combativeness is to be held in check, and crucified, and the spirit of retaliation denied, so that we will not even go to law. And these principles have been held sacred among us. Think he will find us fully orthodox upon that question.

Brother Henry :—I see an article in COMPANION, page 186, present volume, headed "This is not a dun." Now it strikes me that it is a very good substitute. I for one think it is not the agents' fault at all times. We hope that the patrons may all take thought upon the above, and at once respond, for we see some of them spend money for tobacco, and other luxuries, which are only for the gratifying of the lust of the flesh and pride of life, which are only vanity and vexation of spirit, says the wise man.

GEORGE DETRICH.

We have no doubt but brother Detrich is right, in his opinion that it is not always the agent's fault that we do not get our dues more promptly. Indeed we think it is not often the fault of the agents. And it is for that reason, partly, that we will not publish a dun, fearing they might take it to heart, and yet could not help the matter. But if there were some way by which we could give a gentle reminder to delinquent subscribers, without offending agents' and those who have paid in advance, we believe our need of money would prompt us to make use of it. Cannot some of our ingenius patrons devise a plan ? Our assistant, thinking he had made an important discovery, suggests that said delinquents might devise a plan ; but he forgets that we have no way of reaching them. All we could say upon the subject they would suppose to be intended for some one else ; surely we could not refer to them. They are too well acquainted with us.

Traveling Agent,

Mr. W. C. Koontz, of this place is now in the western states, introducing Dr. Beachly's Family Medicines, for Dr. Beachly & Co, of Dale City. Mr. Koontz, taught the high school at this place, the past term, and gave good satisfaction. He has been raised in this community, and bears a good name for morality, and enterprise.

He is also authorized to act as agent for us, and receive subscriptions, and amounts due us, and receipt for the same. When you know it to be Mr. Koontz, you are safe in intrusting to his care any business he will assume.

Papers Wanted.

We are short of No. 48 of last year (Vol. 7) for our files. In endeavoring to give the remaining numbers of last year to new subscribers, we run ourselves so short that we are now suffering a severe loss. Will not some of those who may have that No. in good order, and yet not have the full volume, let us have several copies of said number. We cannot have the volume bound until we secure them. not originate from impressions made upon the mind by the word of the Lord.

Back Numbers.

TWO HUNDRED SUBSCRIBERS WANTED

Expecting a large increase to our subscription list we prepared for it by printing a number of copies more than were actually needed, in order to be able to furnish back numbers. Now there are about two hundred still remaining on our hands ; and we must soon cut down the issue to our actual list. Before doing so we make this appeal to our friends. Will not one out of every twenty of our friends send us a new subscriber, who will take the back numbers of the present volume? Please make the effort friends. (tf.)

Feet-Washing.

We call attention to the article on the above subject, in this week's paper, by brother Abram H. Cassel. We recommend all our readers to give it an impartial reading. We may have something farther to say upon the subject hereafter.

Answers To Correspondents.

CHRIS. MYERS :—It came to hand. Thank you for the favor.

J. J. COVER:—Correct—account square.

SAMUEL BOCK :—The mistake was in this office, all right now.

HAGERSTOWN, IND.—We received an anonymous article from this office, headed, Non professors of Religion not Eligible to Office. Who is the writer ?

GEO. DETRICK.—We have you credited with $16.16, on March 22. Is that what you refer to ?

WM. CULP —The money order for 2.25 was received. It was an over. sight.

A PRACTICAL.—We have no such place as Allison Prairie, Ill., or person as A. Practical, on our books, that we can find. Neither have we yet a preacher to whom we can say go. It will not hurt you to wait a little while longer; you will get a better appetite. Even if we were to come ourself, or send brother Lint, we fear we might not answer your purpose; as we do some very "poor preaching," and you are only hungry for good preaching. If you can accept of such as we have, and will give us your name and address, we may be able to do something for you. Do not write across the whole sheet in a line, please.

JOHN W. MOHLER:—We agree with your sentiments, and will therefore discontinue one copy. Thank you for the information.

D. J. MYERS:—Yes, it came all right, and is acknowledged in No. 13.

PETER S. NEWCOMER:—The article referred to is safely "hooked," and will be forthcoming. Bear with us a little longer.

G. W. BRICKER:—The money was received; the certificates and Almanacs were sent to Big Cove Tannery; but the paper through mistake was not sent. We have ordered the package to be forwarded to your office.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Information Wanted.

Brother Holsinger:—Will you, or some other brother, please give me information through the COMPANION concerning a certain man by the name of Conrad Peysel? I have in my possession a small volume entitled, "The History of all Religions," which gives an account of this man, Conrad Peysel, a German Baptist, that he was the founder of the "Dunkers," about the year 1724. Weary of the world, he retired to an agreeable solitude within 50 miles of Philadelphia. Curiosity brought several of his countrymen to visit his retreat. They formed a little colony of German Baptists, which they called Ephrata, or Ephrates. They use trine immersion; dress like Dominican frairs, shaving neither head nor beard; have different apartments for the sexes, and live on roots and vegetables. At their lovefeasts they eat mutton. No bed is allowed except in sickness; have a bench to lie on, and a block of wood for a pillow. They admit of works of supererogation. I have briefly given a sketch of their chief tenets. We also have an account of such people in Buck's Theological Dictionary. One great reason for wishing to know something about the above named people is, we have been assailed by others and accused of being the above named "Dunkers," which we boldly deny. I have often wondered why some brother did not write a full History of our Church, so that those critics would have nothing to get hold of to cause so much trouble to God's people, and raising such rumors in the country.

Yours in Christian love,

D. J. MILLER.

Brother Henry:—By request of the brethren in Kanawha county, I will try and give a note of my travels. I left home on the 15th of Oct., for the purpose of visiting the brethren in Lincoln, Putnam, and Kanawha counties. After three days riding, I reached the first appointment in Lincoln. Stayed and tried to preach until the evening of the 20th. Thence to Putnam. Stayed three days in brother Fisher's neighborhood. Preaching day and night. Thence to friend Winebrenner's. Had meeting at night. Thence to sister Belcher's; meeting next night. No meeting that day on account of election. The next day to Upper Falls of Coal, Kanawha county,. Meeting that day and next; good attendance. Left next morning at 5 a. m. for Cross Lanes. Meeting at 3 p. m. and at night. Next day being Sunday, to a large concourse at 3 p. m., at brother John A. Starkey's. At night at Rose Valley again. Meeting broke up then. We went two miles to the river, and as many as were willing were baptized. This was something new there. Next morning I started to fill an appointment on Big Coal River, in Boone county. Thence two days' journey home; found all well. Stayed part of the night at home. Thence to Dogwood Ridge, Fayette county. Commenced meeting at candle lighting. The 3d, 4th, 5th, and 6th, good attendance, night and day; and we were made to rejoice that the word was believed and obeyed. After baptism on the 6th, started for home. Stayed with brother E. Maffet and his kind family residing three miles from Fayetteville; thence home again.

After resting a little, I thought I would visit the Church in Wyoming county. Found them generally well. After three days I took my leave, the Brethren having been greatly comforted. I will say that the Brethren and friends have my thanks for their kind treatment, on all my journey.

Witchcraft.

Brother Henry:—I wish to introduce a subject, which, to some, may seem ridiculous; and it is only for the satisfaction of others, that I venture to introduce a subject of such a nature; therefore, I will present it in the shape of a query: Do the Brethren in general believe that witchcraft does or ever did exist? Now to open the subject for discussion, I will cite the reader to the scripture that speaks of something we think to be witchcraft. First, "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live;" Exodus 22: 18 Now read Leviticus 20:6—27. Next we read of a "consulter with familiar spirits, or a wizard, or a necromancer; in Deuteronomy 18: 11. See also 10th verse. 2nd Kings 21: 6. speaks some about the wizard. Isaih warns the people not to "seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep, and mutter;" 8: 19. Formerly I thought witchcraft was a vain imagionation; but since examining the scriptures, I am led to the belief that it did once exist. But I think it is now extinct. We read in 1st Samel 38: of all those that had familiar spirits and the wizards being put out of the land, except one—the one which lived at Endor; and I request all my readers to read this chaptor throughout. Now I will leave it to better thoughts, by saying, I think the lost one was cast out by Paul in Acts 16: 16; and will make a special request for all that will, to give some light on this mysterious subject.

An Appeal.

The church in Marion county, Iowa, to the Brethren throughout the United States, send greeting.

Whereas our beloved brother, David Sink, has, by misfortune and disappointment in business, become involved in debt beyond his power to extricate himself; and, as he is a minister of the gospel, in the second degree, and a faithful and worthy brother, whose labors are much needed here and elsewhere; and as the members here are in limited circumstances and have done about all they can to help brother David out of his troubles; therefore, we ask all the dear Brethren everywhere, to lend a helping hand in the name of the Lord, to remove the shackles from off the hands of this beloved laborer in the vineyard of the Lord.

The following amounts have been raised and applied to the payment of his liabilities:

By the church here, $200.

By the church in Monroe, Decatur, and Apparoose Co., collectively, $210.

Total paid, $410.

Leaving $700 unpaid.

Money may be sent by mail to English Settlement, or by Express, to Pella, both in Marion Co., Iowa, addressed to Jonathan Beard, who is appointed by the church as receiver.

Jonathan Beard, Minister.

Deacons. { J. J. Shupe, Jarves Wray, David L. Bowman, David Phillips,

Having examined the plea from the Marion county Brethren, we desire to say to the brotherhood at large, that we are somewhat acquainted with the case of brother D. Sink, and that we have known him for some years; that we esteem him a worthy, faithful, humble, brother, everyway worthy of the charities of the brotherhood; that he is an able minister of the word, and may be made extensively useful if he can but be relieved of the burden that hangs upon him, in consequence of his unhappy condition. We therefore earnestly hope, that the call of his brethren and fellow-laborers will be favorably considered, and will meet with a cheerful and abundant response. Let every one that hath, give to him that needeth. A little,—a very little,—from each will suffice. God loves a cheerful giver. Be not tardy; give not grudgingly; give cheerfully, and with a willing mind, and look to the Lord for the reward.

Whosoever hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth his bowels of compassion toward him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" "Let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth."

Brother Holsinger:—In connection with a little business, I will give you a small item of news.

On the 17th day of February last, in pursuance to notice, (and I think the printer made a mistake in that notice.) the Brethren commenced a series of meetings in this arm of the church, and continued one week. Brethren A. Dickey and D. Workman from the Ashland district were with us a few days and proclaimed God's eternal truth with power and we think a good effect. During the progress of our meeting, a Mr. Martin, living a few miles north of Tiffin, who was suffering with the effects of a cancer in his stomach, sent for the Brethren and requested to be received into the church by baptism. Brethren John Shontz and Samuel Loose responded to the call; and after some deliberations in regard to his physical ability to endure the fatigue, he exclaimed, "By the grace of God I can stand it." The Brethren then took him about a mile, to the Sandusky river, and cut the ice, which was several inches thick, and baptized him. When he rose up and received the salutation of the administrator, he exclaimed, "Thank God, it is accomplished!" and appeared to be much revived He lived one week thereafter and passed away, expressing his satisfaction.

I have another occurence to relate to you, which was heart-rending in the extreme. A son of Brother David Roop, a young man of about twenty-two years, in company with his brother and brother-in-law, started, on last Tuesday morning, to another farm a few miles distant, for some hay. Before they reached their destination, he was taken with a severe pain, caused, I believe, from a long-standing rupture. It was so severe that his companions were obliged to return home with him. His suffering grew worse and worse, until six o'clock in the evening of the same day, when the monster prevailed, and the young man who in the morning was the pride of his family, beloved by his fond parents, respected by his associates, and bade fair to become useful in society, was a lifeless mass of clay.

Thus one who, no doubt, flattered himself with the hope of many days here on earth, and expected to be a useful member of society, both in and out of the church, has been snatched away by the ruthless hand of death. O ye gay and thoughtless creatures, take warning; for "the Son of man cometh in an hour when ye think not."

United Effort.

Dear Brother;—I thought that a little church news from this place would not be amiss, inasmuch as it is desirable, and perused with pleasure and encouragement. We have at present no organized church here, and only preaching, on an average, about three times a year. We are as it were in a lonely condition with regard to church privileges. There are at present eight members of us residing in this county; and the little preaching we get to hear from the ministering brethren, makes us feel as though we were neglected and uncared for. We stand in need of ministerial aid and encouragement, as well as others, in the way to Zion. We have our troubles and difficulties to encounter, with you all, and our opposers in the doctrine of Christ to face. We long to see the season come, when some ministering brother shall locate here with us, and preach the gospel to the people here, in its true light, and unfold to them the knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ. There are other denominations here; but what satisfaction is there in going to hear the gospel perverted, the divine ordinances frustrated, and the knowledge of the truth beclouded from the minds of the people. We long to see the happy era approach, when the reign of ignorance and deception shall be overthrown, and the light of the glorious gospel of Christ be disseminated everywhere, and proclaimed to the people from the rivers to the ends of the earth. A universal dissemination of the light and truth of salvation has never yet been effected, and never will be until the church of Christ and its chosen ministers put forth their united efforts in pulling down the strong holds of the wicked one, and labor for the upbuilding of the kingdom of Christ everywhere; for the enlargement of the borders of Zion depends upon the labors and efforts of her people; and not, until they go forth and fulfil the command of the Savior, "Go ye therefore and teach all nations," will they realize a subversion of the kingdom of darkness, and a universal proclamation of the glorious gospel of Christ among all nations. Hence it is the duty of all God's people to labor earnestly for the spreading of the light of salvation everywhere, and to unfold to the minds of the children of men the knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus; for it is only by so doing that they can effect a fulfilment of the Savior's command, which is, to go and preach his gospel to every creature. It is the duty of the ministers of the church to preach the gospel of Christ wherever it is needed, especially where the true doctrine of Christ is perverted and, obscured from the minds of the people. The reign of deception is growing stronger, instead of becoming weaker through the advancement of the light of the truth. It is only by a united effort of the church to spread abroad the gospel of Christ in the world, that the kingdom of darkness can be overthrown, and, in its stead, the kingdom of righteousness be erected, and the gospel proclaimed in its primitive purity and simplicity. It should be the aim and object of every child of God, to spread abroad the light and knowledge of the plan of salvation among all nations, and endeavor to unfold to the minds of the people the true and appointed way to heaven and happiness. For so does the gospel teach them that have been enlightened therein, and that have been blest with the knowledge of the truth. They should not be content with what Christ has done for them; but they should ardently labor for the proclamation of the gospel among those who have never heard it in its primitive purity; and endeavor to extend to all mankind the true light and knowledge of the plan of salvation that the powers of darkness may be overthrown, and the glorious kingdom of righteousness established everywhere; and that others also may have free access to the grace of life, and enjoy the blest opportunity of making their peace calling and election sure with God.

We remain yours in the bonds of love and affection.

Dear Brother Henry:—I and my wife were stricken down with that terrible disease, small-pox. She took sick on the 18th of February, and I was taken down on the 25th. Now one reason why I write is, because there is so much talk about us and how we took this sickness. About ten days before we got sick, we made a visit to Perry county, I, my wife, and our two youngest daughters. We stopped off at Duncanon, went one and a half miles in the country to my brother-in-law, John Brighton's. Stayed there a few days; then went back to Harrisburg, stayed all night there. Next morning took the cars for York. Paid a visit to my friend Hiram Young. Took a hearty dinner; then he in company with us took the train for Columbia, and there parted. We made good connections and arrived home that evening. Here I will state that we met our beloved brother, William Hartzler, on the train. He stopped off at Harrisburg to meet brother Kiefer, to fill the appointments that were made for them. We felt sorry that we could not stay a few days longer they came to Duncanon to hold meetings there. Got slightly acquainted with brother Brubaker and brother Mannan at Duncanon. Conversed only a little with them, but had to think they had been with the Lord. Well, the talk is now, that we came to a place where the small-pox was, and that we were so "green and inquisitive" as to go there and see what these things look like. In answer to this I will just say, that we saw no sick person or small pox at all. How we got them I can not tell. Probably our heavenly Father sent them so that we take warning to prepare to escape that great and awful punishment which is awaiting all those that do not prepare. Brethren and sisters and all those that read this, we are yet in the flesh and we have to watch and pray. Small pox is a dreadful disease. The first week I could not sleep day nor night, my head and face were swollen so that I could hardly have been known. The physician gave me the glass and told me to see. O, I had to think, what poor mortals we are here in this world! I had to think on brother Adam Brown's sermon, which he preached five weeks ago, here in our meeting-house; and it was a consolation to me. In his sermon he said, "If the Lamb goes out into sickness, follow the Lamb out into sickness; if the Lamb goes out into persecution, follow the Lamb out into persecution; if the Lamb will go out into humility, follow the Lamb out into humility. Yes, if we want to follow the Lamb, we must become like little children; and if we will not take God's kingdom so, we can not enter in." My wife and I are able to be up, now, again. She can endure a good deal, but this came a little too hard. She told me that hereafter she wants to be vaccinated once every year. I thought so often would be hardly necessary. We were negligent in this matter. We were vaccinated when partly sick already. I would advise all who read this to attend to it to be vaccinated with the first opportunity. Doctor A. G. Bowman attended to us very regularly. My brother John and my oldest daughter, Mary A. Feigley, tended to us in our sickness. They did all they could for us, day and night, till my daughter was nearly worn out. I hope the good Lord will reward them for it. According to accounts, more than ten thousand have died since last August with this dreadful disease, in the city of London. I can not be thankful enough for the good nursing we had. We ought to do all we can to escape such a sickness as small pox. To-day is the first time I am out of bed of any account. I could just say, "I will arise and go to Jesus."

Now one thing yet to my dear brethren and sisters. We have a daughter that does not hear well. She is now over fifteen, she was not quite thirteen when she was baptized. She is so earnest in attending meetings, and reading the scriptures and the Companion and other reading matter. Hearing is a great blessing. Oh, how I do pity her! If I see sometimes in what condition she is, it makes tears roll down my cheeks. Now I make this appeal to you to lay in a mite in her behalf upon account of her hearing. Yes, through faith,

God has done wonderful works and miracles already; but after all, God's will shall and must be done. We believe in God and the Lord our Savior. We thank him for his word, and that he was crucified, died, was buried, and arose triumphantly the third day, was seen, and ascended to heaven, from whence he will come to judge the living and the dead.

Brethren and sisters, pray for us. May the grace of our Lord be with us now and forever.

HENRY ZIMMERMAN.

A Tribute of Thanks.

Brother Holsinger:—I am hardly able to sit up long enough to write a letter; but gratitude prompts me to try to utter a few words of thanks, through the medium of the pen. Thanks to the "All-Father," that He has given me such kind and charitable brethren and sisters. Thanks to you, brother, that you so unhesitatingly sent the C. F. C. to me; and thanks to the dear young sister who paid for it. Did you and the dear generous sister know my circumstances, and but one-half the griefs and struggles through which I have passed in the last three and a half years, you would not wonder that, when I read that my COMPANION was paid for, my eyes grew dim with tears of gratitude that came quickly gushing up from the heart's deep fountain. Oh may God bless you both! I know he will; for I have oft times proved his promises, and they truly are "Yea and Amen." "Bessed is he that considereth the poor." "He that giveth to the poor shall not lack." May you and the sister, with all the dear brothers and sisters who have kindly cared for me, be paid an hundred fold, is my daily prayer. Although I know not the sister's name, she is on my list of "covenant subjects" for prayer, to be remembered by me at the mercy-seat, daily, as long as I live. I shall know her in heaven.

In answer to your question, brother, I can only say, I have often felt a desire to write a few lines for the COMPANION, especially, to write to sister Hannah Burket; but I feel my inability, and you have a corps female contributors whose wise counsels are as manna to my soul. May God bless them and may they live long to write for the COMPANION. I will try to liquidate my indebtedness with you as soon as possible, as far as money is concerned; for your kindness God alone is able to reward you. May his blessing abide with you and yours forevermore, is the prayer of your grateful sister.

A Request.

The Brethren of Root River congregation contemplate building a meeting house the coming summer; and being generally poor, and not able to raise enough to inclose it, we have thought it no harm to ask for some help from our eastern Brethren, who have their houses of worship. We have raised six hundred dollars, but that will not get the lumber. We would need six hundred more to get it enclosed. If the churches feel to give us anything it will be thankfully received. We would like to hear from our brethren before June next. If there is any sent, address, by registered letter, Joseph Ogg, Preston, Fillmore county, Minnesota; or by express, to Lime Springs, Howard county, Iowa.

JOSEPH OGG.

Brother Holsinger:—I have located in Piatt county, Ill., six miles south of Cerrogordo. In my estimation in a good country, and a lively church. We have four speakers, six deacons, and about one hundred members, and room for many more.

ISAAC ULERY.

Brother Holsinger:—There are some brethren who would like to learn through the "Companion" whether the Council of the Elders, on the day previous to the convening of the Annual Meeting, will be public or private.

GEO. S. MYERS.

We are not authorized to answer, but presume it will be private, and that none but brethren will be permitted to said Council.

Brother Holsinger:—I saw in Companion No. 11, that there was good land yet to be had on preemption or homestead entry, in Jewell county, Kansas, and up the Salmon river, and in Cloud county. If any of the Brethren know of any Brethren living there please let me know through the Companion, for I calculate to go west this spring, the Lord willing.

ALFRED STOWELL,

Princeville, Ill.

Brother Henry:—Please state in the COMPANION that there is a minister much needed here in this part of God's moral vineyard, to assist brother Abram Richy. He is alone. Any wishing to come West will find a good country here to locate. We have two railroads coming to Lovington, the North and South road has the iron laid from Bement to Lovington. The East and West road is graded from Pana to Lovington, and part of the iron laid on the east end.

Yours in love,

DANIEL OAKS.

"HOW TO GO WEST."

Forty years ago, Illinois was as far West as most people wished to go, and journeys were made in the legendary "Prairie Schooner," but in these days of Progress and Improvement, the word West has come to mean Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, California, and the Territories, and the Traveler reaches almost any point therein by a splendid Line of Railroad.

This Line of Railroad is the Burlington Route, which starts from Chicago over the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R., from Indianapolis, over the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western Short Line, and from Logansport, over the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw R. R., and running through BURLINGTON, reaches Omaha, Lincoln, Nebraska City, St. Joseph, Atchison, Leavenworth and Kansas City, connecting with the Union Pacific, Kansas Pacific and other Railroads running from those cities.

Always go "By way of Burlington" and you will be sure to be right.

The Burlington Route has admirably answered the question, "How to go West?" by the publication of a truthful and interesting document, filled with facts in regard to Time, Connections, Accommodations, rates of Fare and other interesting items and illustrated by a large map, truthfully showing the whole West, which they distribute free of charge. Copies, and additional information can be obtained by addressing, General Passenger Agent, B. & M. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

THE

Christian Family Companion.

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son, Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be shown to necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

Marriage in its True Signification.

The inquiries are, what is marriage in its true signification? Who authorized it, and for what purpose was it authorized? Information on this subject being so earnestly solicited, I will endeavor to give some light on it.

First, marriage is a civil and also a religious institution, by which a man is intimately and permanently united to one woman, and but one, for various important ends, ordained by God himself. I refer you to Gen. 1: 28; 2: 18—24; Mal. 2: 14, 15; Math. 19: 3—11; Eph. 5: 22—33; 6: 1—4; 1 Cor. 7: 2—39.

Marriage is founded on the original constitution of the sexes, and dignified by peculiar sentiments of affection and honor. It is a part of the law of nations. The public use of marriage, consists in the private comfort of individuals and the better government of society, by distributing the community into separate families, and appointing over each the authority of a master of a family, which has more actual power than all civil authority put together; the additional security which the state receives for the good behavior of its citizens, from the solicitude they feel for the welfare of their children, and from being confined to permanent habitation, the encouragement of industry, and so on. Then I would say, Marriage should always be entered into with deliberation and mutual consent at a proper age. Then it is honorable, as being instituted by God.

Christ also honored marriage by his presence; and at such a solemnity he wrought his first miracle. Moreover it is honorable, as fornication, self-polution, and seduction are thereby prevented, the world peopled with inhabitants; families are founded and built up, supplying the important element of the church and of state; candidates for heaven multiplied, and by its various duties, life rendered a blessing.

When this important contract is once made, then certain rights are required by the parties, mutually, who are also bound by reciprocal duties in the fulfilment of which the practical virtue of each consists. Here the superior charactor of the morals of the New Testament is illustrated. It may even be within the scope of some mere moralists to show, that fidelity, and affection, and all the courtesies necessary to maintain affection, are rationally obligatory upon those connected by the nuptial bond. But in Christianity nuptial fidelity is guarded by the express law, "Thou shalt not commit adultery;" and by our Saviour's exposition of the spirit of that law, which forbids the indulgence of loose thoughts and desires, and places the purity of the heart under the guardianship of that hallowed fear which his authority tends to inspire. Affections should also be a matter of most diligent cultivation. Upon considerations peculiar to our religion, husbands are placed in a relation to their wives similar to that which Christ bears to his church; and his example is thus made their rule: as Christ loved the church, so husbands are to love their wives. The connection is thus exalted into a religious one; and when there is love which knows no abatement, protection at hazard of life, and a tender and constant solicitude for the salvation of a wife, the greatest security is established for the exercise of kindness and fidility. The reciprocal duties on the part of the wife are, affectionate reverence, subjection, obedience, assistance, sympathy, modesty, love, chastity, constancy and faithfulness unto death.

The Morman Book.

I presume that it will not be doing injustice to the real standing, and sacredness of the Morman Confession of Faith, when I state, that the thoughts and matter of which the book is composed, found their origin, principally in the brain of Solomon Spaulding, of Ohio. This remarkable, and yet unsuccessful man, was graduated at Dartmouth College, and finally became a minister. This profession, however, he relinquished, and became a merchant. Sometime before 1812, Spaulding wrote a religious romance, of the lost Tribes of Israel, whom he represented as being the ancestors of the American Aborigines, or the first people of this continent. These manuscripts were left at Pittsburg, in the hands of a Mr. Patterson. Before any arrangements were definitely made respecting their publication, Spaulding died. They still remained with the former till his death in 1826, when they found their way to a man by the name of Rigdon. By the way, he showed them to that remarkable man, Joseph Smith, who became completely captivated by the strange, curious, and attractive details, which the author had given of the lost Tribes in this country, with many other remarkable events. It was in the mind of Smith, that the idea arose to convert Spaulding's Novel into a new Book of Faith. Smith and Rigdon, were soon at work preparing plates, containing the contents of their new prize. The next thing that we hear of these plates, is, when in the presence of a certain class of witnesses, they were taken from mount Moriah, in the state of New York. How they ever got there, of course, Smith knew. No one but the authors could read the contents of these. Smith would commit a portion of Spaulding's Novel to memory, and then, while looking at the plates, through a mysterious rock, would repeat that portion which he had committed, while Rigdon, in the presence of witnesses, would record it. Thus came the MORMAN BOOK.

How is This? No. 3.

PROPOSITION:—God nowhere commanded any man or men, to sprinkle or pour water alone upon a man, woman, or child, for purifying purposes, nor as any initiatory rite under any dispensation, whether Patriarchal, Jewish, or Christian.

This may be thought a very bold and daring preposition; but it is a very truthful one: if any one doubts the strength of it, he is at perfect liberty to correct it; but nothing short of a "thus saith the Lord" will be received.

It is a bold assertion, from this consideration: it illegalizes, unscripturalizes every application of water alone that was ever poured, or sprinkled, on man, woman, or child for purifying, or as it is sometimes said, "regenerative purposes;" and, as a consequence, unchurches all such as are holding a membership upon the strength of such application of the water. In the second place, is it a bold proposition, from the fact that all catechisms from the great Heidelberg, the great-grandfather of catechisms, to the least sprout of the same, teach that pouring and sprinkling as an ordinance from God.

This I deny not, for it certainly is so: all the catechisms, every prayer-book, as well as all creeds teach it; but they never teach it nor is it practiced because God commanded them to sprinkle or pour water alone, in the manner they do. These catechisms &c., must have something to fall back on. So they have—the great-great-grand-mother of all these little children, that bear of her marks and impressions: if not in the long white gown, it may be in the liturgy or by the sign of the cross that is now placed upon the grand edifices in different localities. It is to her that these things must be traced: if not, the work called catechism, just reads like her productions would in many instances.

But to return: "was there no sprinkling and pouring done, that we can read of in the Bible?"

Certainly, water mixed with ashes and blood was sprinkled upon the people. Oil was poured upon different things; but water, without something mixed with it, never.

"Are you not too fast? What of the passage in Isaiah 52: 15? Was water mixed in this case."

What papistical theory have you on your brain? It is not said with what he will sprinkle whether with water, blood, sand, or all three combined; and more than this the person that the prophet refers to as being the sprinkler is none other than Christ. (See preceding verses.)

Allow me to present Ezekiel 36: 25. In this verse we have water, and it is said to be "clean."

And allow me to say that he here commands no priest, prelate, bishop, nor clergy to make use of this "clean water; but reserves that right to himself. Notice how emphatic: "THEN WILL I." &c.

"You certainly must be wrong in your conclusion; for you unchurch the greater part of christendom.

Beg your pordon, if I am right in my proposition, of which I have no doubt, I unchurch none; because they were never brought into the church. To pretend to do a thing in the name of God, and for the honor of God, without his commands, is, to say the least, Mocking.

In conclusion I would say; that I am sometimes astonished at our protestant religionists, who denounce Popery, and men's commandments, as being the fruits of all evil, and teach that the Bible is all sufficient, and yet fail in coming up to the latter, and are so near like the former, that a person can scarcely distinguish them from the Mother. However this is no more than natural: the child will naturally take after its Mother.

Remarks to Brother Forney.

In reading over the last No., of the Companion, I noticed an article over the signature of J. Forney; relative to what Ministers should not preach. In his essay, he says, "Brethren should not preach, that in the midst of life we are in death, when it is true that every one, young or old, dieth at the end of life." I am left to conjecture as to what idea brother Forney wishes to convey. Does he mean to say, that we should not preach that in the midst of an individual's life he his in death? or does he mean to convey the idea that it should not be preached at all? If the latter be his sentiments, the firm convictions of his heart, I beg leave to differ with the brother, and I hope he will not be offended at what I say.

The phrase "in the midst," often signifies, involved in, surrounded, or overwhelmed by; in the thickest; in the depths of; as, "In the midst of affliction." Such are the renderings of the word "midst," by Webster. From this we infer that the etymology of the word would allow the expression, that "in the midst of life we are in death."

In order to evince this fact, I shall illustrate it in a few words. You will observe, in the preceding rendering of the word it is used to signify, "involved in, surrounded, or overwhelmed." We may be surrounded by thousands of animated beings; yet, in the midst of all those, the messenger death may come and seal our destiny forever, in a world unkown to us.

Ministers ascend their pulpits to descant on the urgency of the divine commands and the beauty of holiness, trying to impress upon the hearers' minds, that they are in the midst of death, and that sooner or later they must pass the borders of time. With the same propriety we may say, that "in the midst of life we are in death," because life is all around us, and from the midst of life we pass away. We must bear in mind that the Apostle says words have a signification. Many demonstrative points might be aduced, if thought necessary. Hence ministers need not entertain fears to preach, that "in the midst of life we are in death."

The Concealed Spark.

"Fire! fire!" was recently the startling cry around a human dwelling. But soon the noble firemen extinguished the flames of the burning roof, all was quiet and seemed to be safe again.

The next day the same alarm of fire was heard, and again the conflagration was subdued.

Then came the question, How happened it that the fire broke out the second time? Oh! a little spark was hidden away in the garret where the first was kindled, and suddenly fired the roof once more.

Sometimes we wonder why a young man or woman respected and loved is detected in crime, or disgraceful, ruinous vice. The fact is, good instruction and influences had apparently subdued the heart and formed a pure character, but the soul was unrenewed, after all: the precious blood had not cleansed it from secret sin. Impure habit, untruthfulness, or some other evil tendency, was hidden away from human view. God saw it; and soon the fire burst forth, laying the soul and body in ruins.

Look out for the spark of sin. Your only safety is in the sincere prayer David offered: "Create in me a clean heart, O God! and renew a right spirit within me."

The Meeting of Elders.

We are fearful, from the remarks made by different brethren, that the design of the meeting of the Elders before the General Council, has not been properly understood. And it may be that the language of the last Annual Meeting in relation to the meeting of Elders alluded to has helped to make a wrong impression. That language is this ; "We have, therefore, concluded to request all the ordained Elders of the Brotherhood to meet in the fear of the Lord, and, under a due sense of their responsibility, in solemn assembly, on Whit-Monday, 1872, at the place of the Annual Meeting, to dispose of this subject as the peace and prosperity of the Fraternity may require." The subject of feet washing is referred to in the quotation made. From the language used, it would appear that the Elders alone are to dispose of the subject alluded to. This was not the meaning of the language, according to our understanding. The meeting of the Elders preparatory to the General Council was merely designed to prepare the subject for that Council, and thus facilitate its business and render its action the more successful. It was not designed that the conference of the Elders would keep the subject from coming before the General Council. Such is our understanding of the matter.

Seed of the Woman.

I see in first number of the COMPANION, present year, a query, "Where do we read that the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head ?" I do not think such an expression, verbatim, occurs in the Bible ; but, it seems, enough is found in the 15th verse of the third chapter of Genesis to give us license to use it thus : "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpents head." I do not know that I ever made use of the expression, but have often heard it so used ; and at present can not see any impropriety in so using it. The verse reads : "And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed ; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." Thee, thy and thou, must refer to serpent. The pronoun it seems to stand for the noun seed, and the pronoun her for the noun woman. Hence when the nouns understood are supplied, it would read something like this : "And I will put enmity between the serpent and the woman, and between the serpent's seed and the woman's seed ; and the woman's seed shall bruise the serpents head, and the serpent shall bruise the heel of the woman's seed." Has it not been so that the serpent—wicked one—has bruised, trodden upon, a remnant or part of the "woman's seed," and that the woman's seed, even "he that was born of a woman," has bruised and shall bruise the serpent's head—tread upon him to the uttermost, so that he shall be utterly overcome ? Any one having light upon the query, that might be profitable, by all means let us have it.

Feet-washing.

Brother Holsinger :—As the time of Annual Meeting is drawing near, when, by the arrangement of the last Annual Meeting, the Bishops of the church will meet in council to dispose of the subject of the difference in the practice of feet-washing "as the peace and prosperity of the fraternity may require," as it is express'd in the Minutes. Believing that the unity and well-being of the church requires, that the conclusion arrived at should be in accordance with the teachings of the scriptures, as we all profess to be governed by the word alone, I think it would be right for brethren to give expression to their views on the subject in our papers, so that the light of the teaching of the word may shine to all. With this object alone in view, I feel like writing a few lines on the subject for the consideration of the readers of the COMPANION ; and hope others who feel an interest in the welfare of the church will use the same liberty.

Feet-washing having been instituted by our Savior in connection with the supper and communion, its observance at any other time is not obligatory as an ordinance ; and on the other hand, to omit feet-washing at the time of observing the supper and communion, would be putting asunder what God has joined together.

It would appear, then, safe to conclude, that the Savior saw the necessity for enjoining the ordinance on the disciples, and through them on all those who afterward should believe on him through their word ; as in the commission given them after his resurrection, they were to teach the baptized believers to observe all things whatsoever he had commanded them.

It seems very plain that he intended by his precept, "Ye also ought to wash one another's feet," to teach the disciples that each one of them was under equal obligation to obey the precept ; and the obligation rests on believers now, the same as it did on them.

Although we may not understand all that was intended to be taught by the Savior in the institution of the ordinance, we have sufficient evidence in the scriptures to prove to us the necessity of its observance, and also the benefits and blessings promised to the obedient.

Christ says, "If ye know these things happy are ye if ye do them." The only way we can give evidence of our love to him, is, in keeping his commandments ; and if we keep his commandments we shall abide in his love. We learn from the apostle Paul's writings to the Brethren, that the members of the church constitute the "Body of Christ ;" and Christ's teaching to his disciples evidently conveys the idea that washing one another's feet was necessary to qualify the members for partaking of the supper and communion. In feet-washing an evidence of humility and love is given to each other, by which they are qualified to partake together at the Lord's table, as children, or members of the same family, equal in heirship to the same inheritance, and entitled to equal privileges and blessings in the kingdom of God.

And in thus "discerning the Lord's body," they are qualified to partake together of the communion in memory of him by whose death they are redeemed from under the power of sin, and all those privileges and blessings are purchased for them.

Then as the command is to wash one another's feet, and the obligation to obey rests on all alike, and obedience is necessary to qualify each member of the body to partake of the supper and communion, where is the ground for difference of opinion or disputes about modes of practice, if we follow the Savior's example in obeying his command?

Our Next Annual Meeting.

Our approaching Annual Meeting is looked to by many, and should be looked to by the whole church, with interest. It should not be forgotten that matters of importance will be before the Council. Consequently, the church should avail itself of every means within its reach to be fully prepared to meet the responsible work that will devolve upon it. The work to be done will not devolve upon the Elders or official members, or upon any particular number of the members of the church. Whatever active and public part some may take more than others, the views of our Brotherhood, in regard to the liberty and duty of all the members of the church in transacting the business of the church and our order of doing business, are such that no members is entirely exhonerated from duty or service. Every individual member, as a general rule, is permitted both to speak and vote in our Church Councils. This being the case, all the members of the churh, both male and female, should feel a share of responsibility resting upon them. And any measure that is likely to effect the unity, the purity, the prosperity, and the efficiency of the church in converting sinners, should be regarded with interest by all the members of the church, and all should exercise their influence judiciously, to have everything acted and settled by the church according to the Gospel. No member of the church should feel that he has no influence to put forth in doing the business of the church. Every real member of the body or church of Christ has an influence each will be held accountable. Does not and will not every member of the church feelf a concern and care for the success o the church? And that care will, at times when the church has trouble and difficulties to meet and dispose of, rest with weight upon the heart of every faithful disciple of Christ. And we are told what we are to do when we feel a burden of care upon the heart: "Humble yourselves, therefore, under the mighty hand of God that he may exalt you in due time; casting all your care upon him: for he careth for you." (Peter 5 : 6, 7.)

Then, when we are troubled, or have great care and anxiety, we are to humble ourselves and cast our cares upon the Lord; that is, we are to go to the Lord, and unbosom to him our grief and care, and ask him to relieve us, or to help us to bear our trouble; and if we humble ourselves before him, and trust in him, he will help us. And how are we to humble ourselves? There are different ways of doing this. But our purpose at this time will be best answered by referring to the way in which David humbled himself. He was troubled at the unkind treatment of his enemies, and he humbled himself before the Lord, and cast his care upon him; and he tells us how he did it: "I humbled myself with fasting." (Ps. 36 : 13.)

And there is considerable anxiety felt by many of the brethren and sisters in relation to the business that will be before our next Annual Council, we trust they will humble themselves under the mighty hand of God, and cast their care upon Him. We kindly remind them of their privilege, and also their duty, under the circumstances under which we are brought, and hope that every brother and sister will be much engaged with the Lord in prayer for the presence of His Spirit and the interposition of His Power at the Annual Council, that whatever is done may be done in harmony with the Gospel, that the blessing of God may crown the work of the meeting with success, that the church may be furthered on her glorious mission of Christian reformation. And that our prayers may be more likely to prove effectual, let us with David "humble ourselves with fasting." For uniting fasting with prayer we have divine authority and the sanction of the faithful in different ages of the world. Our Brotherhood justly regards fasting as a duty, and our Annual Meeting of 1867 recommends the observance of it. The Twenty Third Query and Answer read as follows: "Do not the Scriptures enjoin fasting in connection with prayer as a frequent service, and will not this Meeting recommend it as a means of promoting a higher degree of perfection and holiness? Answer. We think that according to the Scriptures fasting in connection with prayer is a service that is attended with great advantages to those who observe it, and we earnestly exhort the Brethren not to neglect this duty and privilege as a private institution, (Acts 10 : 30,) and that in important cases it should be enjoined upon the members as a means of sanctification for important duties." (Acts 13 : 1-3.)

Dear brethren and sisters, we kindly remind you of this decision of our Annual Meeting, and hope it will receive due attention. And we think it is made the duty of the teachers in the churches, according to the closing words of the article, to enjoin it upon the members in important cases. We submit to the consideration of our ministering brethren whether the impending cases are not important ones.

Perhaps it would have been well for some day to have been fixed as a day of fasting and prayer, but as this has not been done we do not feel like specifying any particular day, but think it is best to leave it with the members to choose the day which they may find is most suitable to be observed in the manner recommended. But let it be, indeed, a day of humiliation and prayer; and let not the praying for the approaching Council be confined to one day. Let it be a prominent subject in our prayers, both before the time of the Council and while it is in session.

In one of the Parables the Savior says "The kingdom of heaven is as a man travelling into a far country, who called his own servants and delivered unto them his goods." (Matt. 25 : 15.) The goods, we presume, may present, in general, the interests of the church or the gospel, with its various doctrines and ordinances. If we, then, claim to be the servants of the Lord, we should be faithful to the trust committed to us. We hope we shall all realize our responsibility and act accordingly—with the caution, discretion and wisdom which the eternal character of the subjects involved so loudly calls for.

Uncovering the Head.

There has been much said and written upon the subject of the covering of the head; but the difficulty is not yet removed, and I do not pretend to say that this article will wipe it out. The question has heretofore, in a measure, been discussed upon the strength of its conformity or nonconformity, among the sisters, according to the Brethren's order and the apostle's injunction. This is all good, and I have no objections to bring it in. I have thought, however, that a change from the regular train of arguments may at least make us reflect upon the subject in a different way; hence the above heading.

It is no more than reasonable for us to conclude, that, if the apostle speaks of an uncovering of the head, he also has in view the act of covering it; conveying the idea, that it is possible for us to uncover and to cover our heads, without bringing into disrepute the laws of nature. If politeness and common decency teach us to uncover or to cover our heads at certain times and places, in our social relationships, we cannot, for a moment, suppose that the apostle Paul is requiring too much of us, when he asks us, brethren and sisters, to uncover or to cover our heads when in the presence of God and the holy angels, as a worshipping and God fearing people. If uncovering and covering the head are legitimate expressions, which I think they are, they at once convey the idea that we have the power to remove, and to replace upon the head, that which Paul calls a covering. This being so, we must of necessity conclude that he has reference to an artificial covering, and not to the hair, as some say. I maintain that, if the hair is a covering for the sisters' heads, it must of necessity also be a covering for the brethren's heads; and if the hair is not a covering for the heads of the brethren, they are not for the sisters. There is not one, to my knowledge, in our beloved fraternity, that does not admit that the apostle has reference to an artificial covering, when he speaks of the brethren. If you force upon us the conclusion that the hair is the covering, and that they must be taken off according to 1st Cor. 11: 4, it would make quite a bald-headed congregation, at least that part composed of the brethren. This, I suppose the sisters would not wish to see, and will therefore still continue in the belief that it means an artificial covering.

In the fifth verse, same chapter, Paul positively asserts that a woman that prays or prophesies, must be covered, if she wishes to honor her head. If Paul refers to hair as being a covering in this verse, there must have been some sisters at Corinth that were bald-headed,—I mean had no hair upon their heads,—and consequently uncovered.

That Paul had no allusion to the hair as being a covering, or the want of hair an uncovering, we can learn by reference to the sixth verse. Notice the wording: "For if the woman be not coverd, (that is if she have no hair on her head), let her also be shorn": This would be hard to do; yea, it could not be done. Does this not at once convey the idea of an artificial covering for the head? "But if it be a shame for a woman to be shorn or shaven, let her be covered." Sisters, the apostle says here, if it is a shame to shear or shave your heads, (this expression leaves your hair upon your head) notwithstanding your unshaven or unshorn heads, "Let them be covered."

It is sometimes said, that there is not much in this uncovering or covering of the head. Be not mistaken as to this; for I verily believe that we can do great wrong in not complying with the injunction. Praying and prophesying are honorable engagements; but if not done in accordance with God's will it will never avail much in this life nor in that which is to come. The man that prays or prophesies with an uncovered head, dishoneroth his head, that is, he dishonoreth Jesus Christ, who Paul says is the head of the man. See verse three same chapter. And man being the head of the woman he has a perfect right to ask the woman to cover herself. Sisters, be assured that you dishonor your head if you are in a congregation wherever you make an attempt to offer a prayer, with an uncovered head; and you have no assurance that God will hear you.

Conclusion; If a brother prays or prophesies with his head covered, he disgraceth Jesus Christ; so likewise the sister by being uncovered in these, dishonereth her head.

I have been looking at this subject from a religious stand-point, not having had the glory of men nor women in view, but the glory of Christ and the church. I am aware that natural things are brought into the discussion of the subject, and thus the spiritual conclusion is partially destroyed. The following is what I refer to, (15th verse): "Does not even nature itself teach you, that if a man have long hair, it is a shame unto him?" Mark, "unto him," not to his head, which is Christ. "But if a woman have long hair, it is a glory to her; for her hair is given her for a covering." To her own glory, not affecting her head, which is man, in the least. May we not justly conclude, that, as long as we rely upon or trust in the last part of the apostle's exposition of this subject, we simply follow what nature teaches, and not what the Spirit of God teachets? And not only so, but we thereby abrogate one of the Divine institutions of God's house.

Brethren, let me call your attention to a very unbecoming habit that some of us are guilty of; that is in keeping our covering on at times of funerals. Is it posible that we in those solemn hours pray not? If there is a time in which we should bow before God in humble prayer, it is then: and yet how often do we see heads covered, and bodies not bowed! How can we, yea, how dare we pray, or even say Amen, where the minister prays, having our heads covered.

Faithfulness,

The duties that God, through the Son, enjoined in his last will,—the duties that all believers owe to their God, in behalf of the saving of their souls from a state of darkness to a state of light in the Lord Jesus Christ,—are everywhere too much neglected among the many different denominations in this day and age of the world. They all confess that Jesus is the Son of God, and teach that the gospel of Christ is the means of grace, unto salvation; telling the world that all must repent, and forsake their evil ways, and obey the gospel of Christ, otherwise they could not be saved. Fearful it is when a teacher knows how to preach the gospel of truth, but will not persist against a false creed. But alas, how sad the condition of such a teacher! The lines that fell to his lot to preach God's will; but loving the wages of the pleasures of this present life, like Balaam of old, he hath gone astray. So do these; having eyes full of abomination; ("a proud look is an abomination in the sight of God;")

"ever learning, and never able to come to a knowledge of the truth. Is it not a fact that a man of learning, who makes himself acquainted with books on science, teaches the knowledge that his books contain in an accurate a form? Did Christ ever give his apostles a command, that they should do differently from the example that he has given? No he did not, but said, "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." When Jesus came to Jordan, to be baptized of John in Jordan, John forbade him. Jesus said unto him, "Suffer it to be so now; for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness." Here, in the beginning of the plan of redemption, Jesus begins with baptism, and saith it is a fulfilling of righteousness; and about the time Jesus gave his last divine injunctions to his apostles for the benefit of his Church, he said to them, "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them. We meet God's approbation when we approve of all his sayings, and do them with an honest heart. The first duty is, to repent of all sins; in a state of humility and simplicity rendering our all to God. False conceptions and deceptions are so common in man, not allowing to confess the honest convictions of the soul to God and man. Brethren, stand fast in the truth as ye have learned it in the gospel of Christ Jesus; for all we do in his gospel is our heavenly Father's will. When we look to Jesus in his baptism, it tells us that all must be baptized for the remission of sins; when we look to his holy walk, it teaches us that we must be holy too; without holiness to God we cannot please God. Then to do God's will, is, to do his commands; and to meet God's approbation, is, to love and do his ways with all our heart and soul.

The Order of the Resurrection.

"But every man in his own order, Christ the first fruits, afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." 1 Cor. 15: 23.

Here Paul gives the order of the resurrection. At the resurrection of Christ, "the graves were opened, and many bodies of the saints which slept arose, and came out of their grave after his resurrection, and went into the Holy City and appeared unto many;" Matth. 27: 52, 53. Although there were many, the number was untold. The apostle Paul in Romans 8: 29 says, "For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate, (or design before), to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first born, (or first raised from the dead), among many brethren." But how many it is not stated. In the same manner Paul writes to the Ephesians, 4 chapter 8 verse, "Wherefore he saith, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive;" or, "He led a multitude of captives;" —DIAGLOTT. Still the definite number is not given. But John who was cast on the Island of Patmos, then and there had a vision, and saw what had been, and what was, and what was to come; Rev. 1: 19. Here John "heard the number of them that were sealed, (or resurrected), a hundred and forty and four thousand," (Rev. 7: 4), twelve thousand of each of the tribes of the children of Israel. "After this," he saw the resurrection at his coming, in a vision, which was of all nations, tribes, and people, and tongues. But these 144.000 which were redeemed from the earth, (Rev. 14: 3), "were redeemed from among men, being the first fruits unto God and to the Lamb." Now when John wrote the number, 144 000, there being so "many," as Matthew says, it seemed that Hymenues and Philetus, erred concerning the truth. What did they err in? Paul says, "Saying that the resurrection is past already; and overthrow the faith of some." But Paul says, that "they that are Christ's at his coming;" 1st Cor, 15: 24. Hence Paul taught Timothy to study the word of truth, so that he might rightly divide it; that is, to apply each portion of the word of truth to be fulfilled at its proper season or time.

Reply to Brother P. Dice.

Dear brother in the Lord: In No. 9, present Vol, is a communication from you, in which you think the single mode of feet-washing is the only correct one. Now brother, not for the sake of controversy do I write, but to give my views in love. In Colossians 1: 18, we read that Christ is the head of the body, which is the church. Now, if the church has a right to adopt rules as the reading of the word may dictate, we think it can, with authority decide that either mode will fill the command; therefore we think either mode will do; at least, we shall bear with one another. Now remember, he, Christ, is the head of the body, which is the church, and we are the different members; therefore we take different members to do the work. You think if the one washes and does not wipe, he leaves his work unfinished. Mind you, brother, we are all one in Christ. Now read 13: 14 of John, in German, which reads thus, as near as I can render it: "If I then, your Lord and Master have washed your feet, so shall ye among you was one another's feet." We think by this the double mode will fill the command. No more at this time. My love to all the brotherhood.

A German Letter.

Lieber Bruder Holsinger! Im „Companion" letzten Jahrganges, habe ich einen Aufsatz gelesen, worin ich lernte, daß ein "Deutscher Berichter" bei den Brüdern gedruckt werden sollte, welches meinem Herzen Freude machte, indem ich schon oft gewünscht habe, daß wir doch auch eine deutsche christliche Zeitung unter den Brüdern hätten, so daß wir Deutsche Brüder und Schwestern die nicht gut in der Englischen Sprache bewandert sind, eines dem andern Trost zurufen könnte, und gegenseitig einander ermahnen und auf dem Wege des Lebens fortzuhelfen durch die Auslegung der heiligen Schrift, welches das christliche Herz erfreuet und stärkt. Ich muß manchmal meine Mit-Deutschen bedauern, indem viele von ihnen oft in die Versammlung gehen ohne ein Wort des Trostes oder des Ermahnens in der Deutschen Sprache hören zu können, und hätten wir eine christliche Zeitung, so könnten uns doch die Brüder in der Ferne zurufen u. s. w.

Nun was sagt ihr Brüder dazu? Ich kann sechs oder vielleicht zwölf Unterschreiber bekommen; Bruder Paul Wetzel in Stephenson County, Ill., kannst Du nicht 24 oder 36 Unterschreiber bekommen? Bruder D. Deardorff in Lee Co. Ill., kann vielleicht 12 Unterschreiber sammeln; und Bruder H. Hartung in Marshall County, Iowa, kann vielleicht auch etwas für den guten Zweck thun. Brüder! Nehmt euch der guten Sache an und laßt die Deutsche Sprache wieder in den Schwung kommen.

Not Dead; but Buried Alive.

Brother Holsinger;—As I have one name to present to your subscription list, I now return the Prospectus that was designed for the COMPANION and PIOUS YOUTH jointly, as it may serve for future use. I retained it until the fate of the latter would be certainly known. It lingered long in the lap of suspense, and at last calmly sank to rest in the sheltering arms of Memory and Hope. These guardian spirits keep their vigils still around its hallowed shrine, to guard it from the intruder's tread. I am greatly surprised that the first juvenile visitor in magazine form,—"the first-born among many brethren,"—that came to us, clothed in the precious garb of youthful piety, should be suffered to pine away by slow degrees for the want of proper nourishment and support. There was an increased interest here, as well as in some other places. We were still hopeful until the unpleasant tidings reached us, that it was really dead. This assertion I could not quite believe. As doubts are admissible in some cases, may we not share the benefit of the same in this one also? More likely it has been buried alive; and happily for it, it is not too deeply entombed to be raised again. There are apertures enough kept open to admit sufficient ventilation to keep it alive, until the welcome words, "Come forth," shall be spoken; when it shall arise from its dreamy bed, shake off the fetters that have bound it, and appear in our midst, bearing no visible traces of premature decay.

As one who has had considerable experience in the treatment of diseases in their various forms and phases, it naturally follows that I should know something about "cause and effects" in matters of this kind, and am, I think, entitled to an opinion, at least, of the case in question. Being conversant with the PIOUS YOUTH, I was favored with frequent opportunities to examine its condition, socially and religiously, and never, in any investigation, discovered the presence of disease in any form that was likely to injure itself or any one else by continued association. Generally speaking, the system appeared to be healthy and vigorous all the time, and constantly improving by a judicious course of training. Hence the probability is, that the fatal blow was dealt by the influence of those who envied its prosperous career. My conviction is, that it was inconsiderately banished by some, who, perhaps, have regretted the course they have pursued in this matter. It may not remain in exile long. That such may be the case, and he that controls all things by his almighty power, may, ere long, devise means whereby his banished may return, is the prayer of sister

Two Scenes.

Dear Brethren, as many of the members of the church do not hesitate to drink a glass of wine, or something stronger, and some, too, who are very zealous in the cause of the Master, we, out of love, (remember our best friends are those who tell us of our faults and teach us how to correct them.) Submit the following, which we saw in a weekly News Paper:

"A gentleman took his son to a drunken row in a tavern, where the inmates were fighting and swearing, and said he,

'Do you know what has caused all this?'

'No sir.'

His father, pointing to the decanters, said, 'That's the cause.—Will you take a drink?'

The boy started back with horror, and exclaimed, 'No!'

Then he took the child to witness a case of a man with delirium tremens. The boy gazed upon him affrighted, as the drunkard raved and tore, and, thinking the demons were after him, cried, 'Leave me alone, leave me alone! I see 'em! they're coming!'

'Do you know the cause of this, my boy?'

'No sir.'

'This is caused by drink: will you have some?' And the boy shrunk back with a shudder as he refused the cup.

Next they called at the miserable hovel of a drunkard, where was squallid poverty and the drunken father beating his wife, and with oaths knocking down his children. 'What caused this?' said the father. The son was silent. When told that it was rum, he declared that he would never touch a drop in all his life.

But suppose the lad should be invited to a wedding feast, where, with fruit and cake, the wine cup is passed, and scenes of cheerfulness and gayety, where all the friends are respectable, beloved, and kind to each other, and he should be asked to drink, would he refuse? Or suppose him walking out with his father on New Year's day to call on his young lady friends, to enjoy the festivity of the ushering in of the new year. With other things wine is handed him by a smiling girl. His noble-hearted father, whom he loves, presses the wine glass to his lips, and compliments the young lady on the excellence of its quality, what wonder if the son followed his example!'

Taste not, touch not, handle not the unclean thing."

Fashionable Life.

IF there is any environment which can degrade a human being or harden a young heart, it is the atmosphere of merely fashionable life. You may take the tenderest and most beautiful and lovely girl, the one that is kindest at home, and loves her father and mother best, and put her into the highest circle of fashionable life, with plenty of money and plenty of scope to do as she pleases; let her dress herself as she will; cover herself with diamonds and pearls, and costly silks and laces; let the love of admiration become the controlling passion; and by-and-by, all the tenderness of that young nature passes away; her thoughts concentrate upon herself, what figure she is cutting, who her admirers are, what conquests she can make; and by-and-by the youthful, beautiful modesty is gone, and the way is open for vice that, in the beginning, would not have been dreamed of, or, if thought of, put away as utterly impossible.

Aphoristic,

Beaten in the race—The boy who sits down to groan over a stubbed toe.

Conceit—Flattering yourself that you hold the reins of your own establishment.

Sin—Riding a heavy bob-sled down a steep hill.

Financial.

During the past two weeks we have sent out bills and statements to over one hundred and fifty persons, amounting to upwards of two thousand dollars. All these bills are meant to be correct, and are sent out with a special view to bring in the money, for we must have it. Just think of a single handed establishment like ours having over two thousand dollars trusted out! And some of it has been out for four years. We cannot endure it much longer. If we continue at this rate for a few years longer we shall lose every dollar we have made in the business. We are able to cope with our competitors in everything else, but against capital we cannot work. Those who have farms and wealthy friends to fall back on, may offer inducements of credit. We have neither, and hence we dare not venture farther.

Will not our customers promptly respond to our statements, make immediate collection and forward us our dues? With each bill we sent out an envelope with full address printed thereon; and all that need be done will be to enclose the money with the statement, and have it registered, taking a receipt, and it will be at our risk. Or if convenient send bank check, or Money Order, on Somerset, Pa.

Some few agents have already responded, to whom we offer sincere thanks.

Should any errors be discovered in our statements they need only be pointed out and we will rectify. We want nothing but our own; and that we must have. We are especially resolved to have all old accounts settled up. We have a few persons on our books, owing us as high as twenty-five dollars, for several years, for which they have long ago received the money, and now they have turned around and are working against us, and in favor of other papers soliciting patronage from the Brotherhood. Such unprincipled conduct deserves to be exposed, for certainly no true Christian would be guilty of it, and we rejoice to know that there are not many such among us. Whenever they square accounts with us, others are welcome to all their influence and patronage. We have for sometime been secretly questioning whether it is right to indulge such persons. We have ever believed that the principle of equity is one of the highest obligations taught and enforced by Christianity. It is a quality of the soul that will remain with it, when all forms and ceremonies shall have passed away. To be candid with our readers, who have a right to know all our tenets, we do not believe there will be virtue enough in a man to raise him up from the dead without this grace of integrity, regarding it as we do, as one of the chief attributes of our Divine Master. It is one of the essential elements of the blood of Christ, which must be incorporated with our natures or we can have no life in us. Integrity and uprightness are preservative components to our moral and spiritual existence. Psalm 25 : 21. Their opposites are ingredients of destruction. "The integrity of the upright shall guide them: but the perverseness of transgressors shall destroy them. Riches profit not in the day of wrath: but righteousness delivereth from death." Prov. 11 : 3, 4.

H. R. HOLSINGER; Dear Brother: Am too nervous to write. Brain very much oppressed. Vertigo prevents me from reading. Intend laying aside my pen for a few months, and yield myself, if I can, to a merely vegetative life.

Let your light shine in your new home. Be a living epistle, known and read of all men. Let your deportment spell CHRISTIAN. Let Dale City be a Hill City, because you have pitched your tent there. May your name ever be luminous with the pilgrims Shekinah. In your office, at the table, at the fireside, in society, be determined not to know any thing but Christ, and Him Crucified. Baptize your types in the blood of Jesus, and let not Beelzebub shade a single letter with the pigment of perdition. Take every article into the Holy of Holies, and present it to the revision of Him who sitteth between the Cherubim, before you send it into the fold of Israel.

Be not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, nor of the reproach of the Cross. Ring out, in unmistakable clearness and emphasis, the irreconcilable disagreement between Christ and Belial. Let the line of demarkation between you and the world be ever broad enough to prevent shaking hands, while in another sense you keep hold of sinners all the time. Keep the golden wedge and babylonish mantle out of your tent. The love of reputation and the love of God cannot co-exist in the same heart. Christ "made himself of no reputation." Let this mind be in you, in me, in all who name the name of Christ. Phil. 2 : 5, 7.

To the Brethren and Sisters of the Middle District of Penn'a

As the time of the Meeting of the District Meeting for the Middle District of Pensylvania approaches nearer, our heart is beginning to draw that way. And for some time we had been congratulating ourself with the hope of attending your meeting, and were delighted with the prospect of meeting many loved ones, and learning to love many more now unknown. But it is now evident that we must forego that pleasure. We now belong to the Western District of Penn'a., and have been appointed a delegate to its meeting which will convene only the day following yours. Thus it will be seen we cannot attend both meetings. This we now regret very much, and feel that we shall regret it still more as the time approaches. But, though absent in body, we shall be present in spirit; that is, our prayers for your welfare, and our desires for your company, and to share in your pleasures, will be with you. We believe we have missed but one meeting before, since the organization of the District, and for a number of years have shared largely in your deliberations, and, with few exceptions, we enjoyed the meetings as a feast to the soul. We hope the Lord will bless your meeting, prosper you in your effort to advance the interests of his people and kingdom, and give you a pleasant and profitable association in public and private. And, although we shall be absent from both, we beg to have a place in your memories and your prayers.

We regret that the meetings of the two Districts were appointed for the same time, and can see no occasion for it. We regard it, however, as more accidental than designed, and think it will not occur so another year.

Our Next Annual Meeting.

Elsewhere in this week's paper will be found an article with the above heading from brother Quinter, taken from the Gospel Visitor for April, which we commend to the prayerful consideration of all our readers. Might not the neglect of the command of fasting have been the cause of losing the lamented power of religion, now under discussion in our columns? The Savior told his disciples of a certain class of evil that would not be dislodged without fasting. They had made an effort to remove it, but could not. They had hardly undertaken it without prayer; but Jesus told them it required fasting and prayer. It is to be feared that, under the long continued unbelief of the present and past faithless and perverse generations, in which the duty of fasting has been neglected, this class of obstinate evil has been accumulating? It would appear so from the amount of it that is brought to our Annual Meetings, and District Meetings. Some of these, of which the church has for a long time been possessed, it is proposed to drive out at our next Annual Meeting. It is therefore expedient that we resort to the means appointed for the purpose. These are pasting and prayer.

Regarding the time and manner of fasting, we would recommend that we search the word prayerfully, applying by reason, and enlightened consciences, what the Lord may reveal.

Earthquake.

A destructive earthquake occurred in California, on the 29th of March. The town Lone Pine was laid in ruins, and 23 persons were killed, and 30 wounded. Nearly the whole populace was buried beneath the ruins. The cries for help, and the screams of pain from the wounded, filled the air, while those who escaped from the ruins were calling for help to rescue fathers, brothers, wives, and children. The first shock, which sounded like a park of artillery fired directly beneath the town, was followed, in quick succession, by three others. Over three hundred distinct shocks were felt between half past two o'clock and sunrise. In fact, the earth was in a constant shake and tremble for hours. A chasm was opened, extending thirty five miles down the valley, ranging from three inches to forty feet in width. Rocks were torn from their places and rolled down into the valley. Everywhere through the valley are seen evidences of the terrible convulsion of nature. Damage was done at Cerro Gordo and other places, though not on so fearful a scale. In central and northern California only a slight shock was felt.

Our Love-feast.

Our Love-feast, at Elk Lick, has been appointed for Saturday, May 25th, to commence at 4 o'clock in the evening. It was fixed at this time with the hope of getting some of the ministers to stop with us on their return from Annual Meeting. Some of the Maryland and South-eastern Pensylvania brethren, will no doubt pass over our road, being the most direct route to the place of Annual Meeting, from Cumberland and all points east of Cumberland. Will not all such enter it upon their programme to stop off at Dale City, and remain with us over our meeting, or longer if convenient? Mark the time: on Saturday after the Annual Meeting.

Another Immigrant.

This week we have the pleasure of announcing the arrival among us of brother Jos. B. Sell, of Altoona, Pa. He is here with his family, has a house rented, and a good situation, at fair wages, in the planing mill of brother Shultz. He has a large family of fine, healthy, intelligent looking children, just what we need to build up our country, and we extend him a hearty welcome. They had a weary journey, having been delayed several days by rail-road stoppages and other causes, but made the landing safely.

We have situations for as many more brethren, of all trades and professions, as may wish to come among us. A Tailor, Shoemaker, Cooper, Tinner, Doctor, and carpenters, masons, brick-layers, by the dozen, can find employment. But only brethren of push and drive, "diligent in business, and fervent in spirit," are specially desired. Slow coaches we need not import.

No. 10 Short.

By mistake No. 10 was twice sent out to some of our patrons, once instead of No. 11 ; and one subscriber declared that for three weeks he continued to get No. 10. And in consequence our supply of copies of No. 10 has run down. Now we beg of those who have been thus served, first, to pardon the error, and, second, to return the extra No. 10 plainly marked on the wrapper—not on the paper and we will send them No. 11. Thus they will be accommodating us, and serving themselves. But if they want the No. 11, or any other No. they must not forget that we must have their address.

Delay in the Mails.

During the past week the trains over the Pittsburg & Connellsville Rail-road have been very much delayed, in consequence of slides and other accidents incidental to the departure of the frosts of Winter. For two days we had no mail from the West, and, we suppose, the west had none from us, and most likely our issue of last week was delayed several days from this cause. So our readers will please excuse us from any blame in the matter.

Printing Press for Sale.

We have a Novelty Printing Press, largest size, for which we have no use, and which we will sell very cheap. For those who wish to do work on a small scale it will answer very well. It is as good as are made of the kind. Address H. R. Holsinger, Dale City, Pa.,

Answers To Correspondents.

J. W. Byrne: We do not remember anything about the 98 cents ; but suppose it to be right. When was the money sent? and what for? Please let us know in your next.

M. Lichty: No : we do not pay postage on the C. F. C. except upon those which go outside the boundaries of the United States. You should pay the Post-Master twenty cents a year. We would think it right to pay it, whether demanded or not, for we have learned that many post-masters in the U. S. do not know as much as the law would allow them to know.

J A. Studebaker: The Brethren's Encyclopedia consists of the decisions of the Annual Meetings of the Brethren, so far as they are to be arranged and classified by subjects with remarks and explanations by the compiler and publisher, Elder Henry Kurtz. It has also bound with it a memoir of Alexander Mack, Sen. ; a conversation between a father and son upon the Rights and Ordinances of the house of God ; and Ground Searching Questions answered by Alexander Mack. The whole makes a book of 350 pages, 12 mo. Price $1. 70, postpaid. For sale at this office.

Abraham Baum: The Brethren's Tune and Hymn Book will be ready about July next. Will give prices in a few weeks. All the Hymns in the Brethren's Hymn Book will be found in the Tune book, and corresponding with the numbers.

Herman A. Hinman: We can send you Crudon's complete Concordance by mail for $4. 00.

John Q. White: If you will give us the post-office address of yourself and G. Renner, and tell us what the money was for we can tell you whether we received it or not. We have the Hymn Books.

N. Longanecker: The 75 cents was the balance on Vol. 8 for yourself.

Jane Marquis: You overpaid, after deducting percentage, 90 cents, which we, according to instructions, have placed to charity fund.

Jesse Roop: You are right, we owe you one dollar.

Solomon Mattes: Had you subscribed for the Companion through an agent, or had you acted agent for yourself?

Isaac Dell: Your subscription for the last year was not paid. We have now entered your name for another year, which makes $3. 00.

T. S. Dome: We have made the desired change. Will you give your address in full ?

David Gerlach: The paper is now being sent according to directions, although we can find no such office in the list of postoffices.

Churches in Kansas: Sister Morrow, in Osborne Co., Kansas, wishes to know where we have churches established in Kansas. Will some of our brethren in Kansas give the desired information ?

THREE YEARS IN A MAN-TRAP.

The long-expected companion to "Ten Nights in a Bar Room" is nearly ready, and will shortly appear. The popularity and great usefulness of this standard temperance book is evinced by the immense sales that have been made, much greater, it is believed, than that of any book of its class ever published. Who has not read this remarkable book, so true to nature, so intense in effect and so terrible in its moral, and who that has read it has not wished for a companion To satisfy this widely-expressed desire, the author has undertaken and just completed a new volume, that unmasks the liquor-seller and his accursed traffic in a way to startle and arouse the public.

The new book is entitled "Three Years in a Man-Trap. It gives an inside view of the liquor trade, and portrays the terrible effects of that traffic in a series of life pictures, full of the intensest interest, with the skill and fidelity to nature so eminently characteristic of the author. The book cannot fail to make a strong impression, and, as a new auxiliary in the cause of temperance, will have a wide and powerful influence. Nothing could be more timely than its appearance now. We learn by the publishers' circular, that it is to be sold exclusively by agents, and as it is a good opportunity to secure a book which will sell easily, and at the same time do a vast amount of good, we advise any one seeking profitable employment to apply to the publishers, J M. STODDART & Co., No. 733 Sanson Street, Philadelphia, for an agency, and enter into this work of moral colporteurage at once Brother Henry: I have been taking your valuable paper for two years. I think it is a cheap paper, and every person who loves to hear the truth should take it. I would not do without it as long as I am able to pay for it. It has been a great comfort to me in sickness; for I love to hear from my brethren and sisters. I have not seen much on the tobacco subject for some time; so I concluded to give my experience. I was like the rest of my brethren in using the weed; I would say, "I can not quit using tobacco: I tried it two or three times; but to no effect. At last I formed a resolution, that I would quit by the grace of God, and I conquered, It is now almost one year since I quit; and I would not use it again to please any man. Dear brethren, let us worship our heavenly Father more earnestly; and let us, as God's people, do all we can against the use of tobacco for the rising generation; for I verily believe its use is an evil. Written in love.

ADAM RENNECKER.

Brother Holsinger:—I will send you a part of my subscription, and the balance as soon as the patrons pay me. I am very thankful that I can work for such a good cause as the COMPANION. I think it is a messenger of the glad tidings, bringing manna to the hungry souls of men. But there are some who say they have no time to read. To such I would say, do not spend all your time working for the wants of the flesh, as it will soon fade away; but strive to win something for the soul, as it will live through all eternity; and if you do not work for it now, you may be forever too late. If you are deprived of the pleasure of attending meeting, you can improve that time by reading your Bible or COMPANION. This is my plan. Won't some more try it?

ELIZA BRYANT.

From Sublimity, Oregon.

Brother Henry:—If acceptable, I will inform you and the brethren, and the readers of the C. F. C., that, through the mercies and goodness of God, we are in the enjoyment of good health and the comforts of life, with the rich blessings of God, for which we try to be sincerely thankful. We emigrated to this country last fall. Left our old residence near South English, Keokuk Co., Iowa, the 27th of September. Came by rail-road, on the emigrant train, to San Francisco, California; thence by steamer, on the Pacific Ocean, to Portland, Oregon; thence by rail-road to Albany, Linn county, Oregon, where we arrived on the 12th of last October. In this place and county we found brethren, who received us very kindly, and entertained us

Next we went in company with two visiting brethren—David Peebler and Benjamin Hardman, to Jackson Co., in the southern part of this state, called the Rogue River Valley. Here we found two or three members, and some of our old acquaintances, formerly from Iowa, who also received us and entertained us very kindly. Also met with brother P. S. Garman, a ministering brother, who resides in Lynn county, who went up there a few days before we did. We had several meetings up there; and while there, there were three souls received into the church by baptism.

Returned back to Linn Co., on the 7th of November, with the intention of moving up there: but the Lord's ways are not our ways. We made an effort to go, but did not get there; consequently we remained in Linn Co., with our brethren, until the last of January, when we moved into this neighborhood. Here we had been on several visits before we moved here; found a few of our brethren, who also received us and entertained us very kindly. Held some meetings before we moved, and are still holding meetings here and in the surrounding country. There have been four baptized here in this neighborhood since we arrived in Oregon, and a few more mave made application for baptism. There are very many requests for meetings here. The field is great; or, as the Savior said, "The harvest is great, and the laborers are few." There are only two of us in the ministry in this valley, called the Willamette Valley. The main valley is said to be about 130 miles in length, north and south, and about 40 miles in width, east and west. We now reside in Marion Co., about 3 miles north-east of Sublimity P. O., eleven miles east of Turner Station on the Oregon & California rail-road, about 16 miles south-east of Salem, our county-seat, (which is also the Capital of Oregon,) and about 25 miles nearly north of the settlement of the brethren in Linn Co.

This is no paradise—far from it; yet we think, upon the whole, we have a very good country. There are some things here we like very well, and some things we do not like. Soil in general is good—some, very poor; good, soft water. Springs are pretty plenty in this neighborhood. We have an excellent fruit country, such as apples, pears, cherries, plums, and berries; but it is not so good for peaches, yet they do raise some. Lands are selling in this vicinity at from 10 to 20 dollars per acre, according to improvement, locality, soil, &c. Near Salem, lands are very high. We think our neighborhood is very healthy; and more than this, we think the good Lord is, here in the far west, operating on the hearts of the unconverted; and that he is just as near and as dear to his faithful children here as in the east. We think the prospect good for building churches, provided we prove faithful, and the Lord wills. We also think Satan is here, and has his ministers and synagogue are here. His ministers are waging war against the truth, either directly or indirectly. They are somewhat afraid that their craft is in danger. Nothwithstanding this is the case, I trust that every true minister of the Gospel will earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints We would say to our dear brethren. and sisters everywhere, pray for us.

Our postoffice is Sublimity, Marion Co., Oregon. We expect to make Oregon our earthly home.

Yours in the hope of eternal life,

DAVID BROWER.

Notes of Travel.

Dear Brother: I thought I would write a few lines, hoping they may be interesting. We have been away over four weeks. And attended sixty-three meetings; fifteen in Lower Cumberland congregation, in company with brother J. Sherfy. Brother Grabill Myers accompanied us two days in this place. Thence, to Upper Cumberland in company, with brother Jacob Lerew, where we had twenty appointments. From thence, to the German congregation, York Co., in company with brother J. Raffensparger, where we had fifteen meetings. We also had a few meetings in Baltimore Co. Md. Should we be particular in naming persons and places, our article would be too lengthy, having traveled over hills and mountains, and sometimes we were in danger; but, as we believe, by the prayers of the saints and the favor of God, we arrived home safe, found all well for which we thank the Lord.

Now, while the Sowers went forth to sow the word of life into the hearts of saints and sinners, that the weak might be made strong, the sleepy awakened, and the dead in tresspasses and sins made alive, we hear the glad news, that some of the lost are found, and the dead are alive; so parents, yes, saints and angels may rejoice. The poor, lost sinners, who have been standing on the brink of ruin, have now turned to Jesus; they have repented of their sins, have been baptized, and put on the garment of righteousness. There is no condemnation to those who are in Christ Jesus, and observe all things whatsoever he has commanded, and leave undone whatever he has forbidden. But if you sin through weakness, you must go to your advocate, in faith and repentance, for pardon. And now brethren and sisters, as some have come into the Kingdom of Christ, and others are in the Gospel net, pray that they may not stifle their convictions, that they may be drawn to the shores of salvation. Dear sinners, reflect, if you fall on the stone of mercy, it will be broken; but if the stone of judgment fall's upon you, it will grind you to powder; for lo, the great day of his wrath will come, and "who shall be able to stand?" If mercy be long rejected, justice will take its place. Oh, then, come to Jesus, that you may have life, and pardon for your sins, and obtain a right to the tree of life. Jesus says, 'Come,' the Spirit says, "Come," the Ministers are traveling, preaching and praying for you. We do not wish to make you come against your own will; for God has made you free, to choose by your own will, be it life or death, heaven or hell. But we pray that you may serve the Lord, and insure the great reward. In conclusion, we will say to the brethren, sisters, and friends, who so kindly received and entertained us, "Jesus has said, whatsoever you have done unto the least of those who believe in me, ye have done unto me." May the Lord bless and qualify us all for heaven; is the prayer of his servant. Amen.

DANIEL LONGANECKER.

From Vernon Co, Mo.

Brother Holsinger: We moved here from Cedar Co., Mo., in February last. During the winter, while staying east of this place about 20 miles, we kept on the lookout for a location suitable for a colony of brethren, I found here, if I mistake not, about 12 in number, with one young speaker, Samuel Glick, two deacons, Jonathan Calyar and James Miller. At prsent we number 19, all of which have come from other church districts, save one brother who was initiated into the church yesterday.

We have a fertile country, well adapted to fall wheat and fruit of kinds, as far as has been tested. Our prairie is located between the Momataw and the Little Osage rivers. Good timber land on those streams can be bought for $15 per acre; unimproved prairie, at from 7 to $12, owing to location, and distance from our county seat. One R., R, in running condition, and one partly under contract, and a third one under contemplation. Building rock and stone-coal in abundance. Range for stock cannot be exceeded. Summer seasons, long and plesant; winter seasons, short and mild in comparison with Pa., Ohio, Ind., Ill., and Iowa. Brethren wishing to go west, I think, would do well to come and see our country, before locating elsewhere.

J. D. YODER.

Nevada City, Mo.

Brother Holsinger: —By request of others, I will give you a short report of my journey west this winter.

Left Goshen Dec 10th. Arrived at Chicago, spent some time over the burned district; was much astonished at the great change of scenery—the mighty marble walls lying in ruin. Certainly this must be one of the wonders on earth, spoken of. Stopped over night with Dr. Fahrney. Had a pleasant time with them. However the doctor was some discouraged through the loss of property by fire; and his wife, the sister, just recovered from a severe spell of sickness.

Next day took train for Nevad and Marshalltown, Iowa, on busines. Visited Eld. John Murry, and others of the brethren. Found them well. Took cars south to Newton. Happened over Lord's day at Grinnell, Iowa. There we enjoyed ourselves well, though not among the brethren. Attended religious meeting; much good order and attention were manifested to the well-framed sermon read off by the pastor. The largest and best attended sabbath-school we ever saw, was at this place. It is a town numbering several thousand of inhabitants, and no saloon or rum shop found in it. May God grant us grace, who live in and near towns, to use our moral and religious influence against this world-wide evil.

Took train for Moulton, Iowa, a new town—population 975. In this place we bought the 3rd and 4th town lots, sold in 67. Now there are numerous business biuildings, churches, schoolhouses, and factories; not one saloon in the place. Had several meetings with the brethren; a good interest manifested. Elders Replogle and D. Zook, house-keeper; church in good order. Was accompanied to the train by brother Replogle, gave a parting hand for Kansas.

Arrived in Lawrence, Douglas Co., Kan., Took conveyance with friend D. Ullery out into the country; met with dear friends for the first time in 11 years. Had a pleasant visit with them. Spent a week preaching, and visitng old acquaintances. Weather was colder than was ever known in Kansas: ice reported to be from twelve to eighteen inches. Was conveyed by brother J. J. Baker to Carlon Dale station; thence to Marion county Florence station; thence to Marion Centre, where we met many old acquaintances, and expected to meet brother Buck, who has charge of a small flock of members at this place, but we failed to see him. Had two meetings: much ihterest manifested by all. For this part of the county I can say I am satisfied it is the place for men of small capital. Numbers with whom we were well acquainted, came to this part of Kansas with little or no capital a few years ago, who have now good homes. Fine building and fencing stones are plenty; stone coal in many places; plenty pine timber, and good running streams; home stead preemtions, and cheap railroad lands can be had. Young farmers and renters, do not let rich landlords shove you from place to place, while uncle Sam is rich and bids you welcome to a home cheap. Poor persons going West should take no team of horses, and but few goods. Second class through trains or emigrants, save money. A tent large enough to live in a while would be good. Much could be said, but we forbear. Can some minister go to this place and assist the brethen? We gave a parting hand to many in this little thronging town. No saloon in it. Was conveyed to station by friend Griffeth. Took train for home. Stoped according to a former promise in Chistian Co., Ills. Had several meetings here, with good interest. Several families of members are living in the cause of their Master. They have one young minister S. Lear is doing well. Much love was manifested among them. "Come and help us" was the cry "or end some one."

DANIEL SHIVELY.

Brother Henry : For the satisfaction of the readers of the COMPANION, I will try, by the grace of God, to give them an idha of how we are prospering in this arm of the church, known as the Washington Creek District. We number in all about 90 members at this time. Since last Fall eleven have been added to the church; six by letter, three by baptism, and two reclined. We have had very pleasant meetings during the winter : meetings every Sunday in each month, excepting the second, which is vacant. We held council meeting last Monday, it being Easter Monday, at the house of brother Philip Metsker. Brother Peter Brubaker was ordained to the full ministry; and brethren John Stutsman and Christopher Flory were elected to the office of deacon. We held our public meetings at school-houses as yet, but they are not large enough to accommodate all in attendance. A meeting-house is needed very much bythe brethrenhere in this partofGod's moral vineyard. May we all so live as to be a shining light to those that are yet out of the ark of safety, that they may see our good works and glorify our Father in heaven, is the prayer of your unworthy young brother,

J. H. STUDEBAKER.

Brother Holsinger : My poor heart is often made to feel, when I read in the COMPANION of the poor brethren and sisters who love to have and read the COMPANION, but are not able to pay for it. Now I do think such things ought not so to be, while there are brethren in the church who have their thousands, and could send it to every poor brother and sister, and it would never be missed in their families, where everything is full and plenty. In case those poor brethren do not spend their money for rum, or tobacco, or other useless things, they ought to have it ; so I send you one dollar tor the charity fund, and I want twenty-five cents worth of the tobacco supplements. I feel sorry there is so little said on that subject of late. If there is one thing in the church I dislike using that filthy stuff ! How can our bodies be fit temples for the Holy Spirit with such impurities about them ?

CATHARINE R. SUPLEE.

From Holt Co., Mo.

H. R. HOLSINGER, Dear Brother : The good cause of the Master is on the progress here in the Far West. I believe by strictly confining ourselves to preaching the pure word, and living up to the same as much as in us lieth, much good will be done in the good cause of the salvation of precious souls. Living up to what we preach, is the main thing. It makes a better impression on the people out here than preaching does, and perhaps anywhere it has the same effect. But I must say this much for the people of the West : they are a church-going people, and pay the best attention to preaching of any people I ever had the honor of preaching to. I would like to read the COMPANION, but I am not able to pay for it at present. I hope I may be able sometime. I do not want to take it on other's expense, no how. We have engaged extra good health since we have been in the West ; have been ablo to fill every appointment for 12 months. God be praised for his wonderful goodness shown to the children of men. I hope that the blessing of God will rest upon us all that fear and obey him.

A. J. CORRELL.

Forest City, Mo.

Brother Holsinger : — We very often bury our talent and do not improve it as we should; therefore I will try and write a few lines this pleasant Sabbath evening. The COMPANION is a very welcome visitor to me, I love to peruse its columns, and to hear from my brethren and sisters, especially those I am so well acquainted with. I have not seen anythtng in print from the Black River Branch, Michigan. I should like very much to hear from them, as that was formerly my home, and as I know there are some there that are competent to write. I should like very much to meet with the brethren and sisters in that church once again, but if we never meet on earth, may we all meet in heaven, is my prayer. Dear brethren and sisters, pray for me that I may hold out faithful unto the end.

From your unworthy sister,

HANNAH RITTER,

Lattasburg, Ohio.

MARRIED.

At the residence of the bride's father on Thursday Feb., 15th by John H. Umstead, brother JOHN D. KINDY and sister MAGGIE C. SLINGLUFF, both of Montgomery Co , Pa.,

John H. Ellis.

DIED.

March 26th, sister JANE BOWERS, daughter of brother Wm. and sister Sarah Bowers, aged 27 years and 12 days. The subject of this notice put off her return to God until a few hours before she died, when she informed her parents that she wanted to be received into the church by baptism. The brethren were sent for immediately, and the writer, being in the neighborhood, accompanied the brethren to the house where the poor girl lay in a dying condition. The brethren examined her in regard to her faith, and she made a good confession. The 18th chapter of Matthew was read to her, and she was received as a member of the body of Christ, with the exception of baptism, which, to her regret, could not be performed, as her physical strength would not permit her so to do. The brethren sang and prayed for her, and in a very few hours she quietly breathed her last. This would suggest to every candid mind to attend to the duties they owe to God while in health. The funeral was attended by a large concourse of people and many sympathizing friends for the bereaved. The occasion was improved by the Brethren from Job 14th 1 : 2.

In the Santafee congregation Miami Co., Ind., March 27th, sister BARBARA MASON, aged 81 years 5 months and 5 days, has now followed her husband, who departed this life nearly 3 years ago, after living a married life of 61 years and raising a family of 16 children, 14 of their own and 2 grand children, all of which lived to unite in the bonds of matrimony. Sister Mason lost her sight (Previous to) the death of her husband ; but in this she still put her trust in the Lord, and, like Job, she could say, "The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away and blessed be the name of the Lord." Her pleasure was in hearing the word of God read or spoken, and in conversing and communing with the brethren and sisters. She longed for the day of her death, that she might be with her Creator, and she passed from time fully trusting the merits of a crucified but risen Savior, after having spent 62 years in his vinyard. Funeral services by Godlope Keller, and John Wolf, from Rev. 14. 12 : 13.

Fell asleep in Jesus. in the Root River congregation, Fillmore Co., Minnesota, at the home of her daughter, sister CATHARINE SHOOK, daughter of Johnathan Miller of Somerset Co., Pa., aged 74 years 7 months and 15 days. Disease not known. She was well and hearty the day before ; ate a hearty supper, went to bed as usual. At 3 o'clock in the night one of the boys heard a strange breathing and he called to his sister to wake her, thinking she had nightmare. When the girl waked up, the old sister was sitting up and said she had phthisic. Her daughter came up stairs, and by the time they got a light, she lay down and breathed her last. Her remains were taken to Preston on the 28th. Funeral services by the writer, from Cor. 2 : 5-31. in the Methodist church, to a large concourse of people.

THE

Christian Family Companion.

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

Preachers Pay.

I would say in the first place, there is no pay in the matter. The pay alluded to by brother Snyder is no pay,"it is the gift of God." preachers do not expect to merit salvation: when we have done all we are commanded, we should say we are unprofitable servants, and have done only our duty. All things are the gift of God: espicially concerning future rewards. So far as gifts and donations are concerned, there is no limit among ourselves. Brother Snyder thinks our preachers are working to a disadvantage, in going to preach where they have preachers. Now the reason of this is, because the Church will not send them. "How can they preach except they be sent?" The fault is in the Church, and not in the preachers. We have a good many preachers who are willing to go and preach where they are most needed, but are limited in circumstances. So if the Church will do her duty, equip her preachers and send them, then they will get to the right place; and as long as this is not done by the Church,we cannot expect any better than we are doing. Sending out preachers is a Church business. The reason they go to places where some might think they are not needed, is because the Church calls them, and makes them able or bears expenses. We have some, I know, who could do considerable on their own expense, but they are mostly well content. ed at home; and in consequence they do not get acquainted, and have few calls. I hope my brethren will bear with me in giving a statement the matter aluded to. Oh! I hope to see a better state of affairs soon; When we see the leak, let us go to work and stop it.

Imagination

Having somewhat of an active imagination, and my thoughs being more inclined to run out into an undesired channel, it is easier, oftentimes, for me to be engaged in worldly thoughts than in spiritual thoughts. I thought by writing a piece for the Companion, once in awhile, it might have a tendency to aid me, by the grace of God, to keep my mind more engaged in spiritual meditatations. David of old was meditating in the Law of the Lord day and night. By putting to practice what we know, or obeying his Law,we will learn to see and understand the Lord's ways Passages that sometimes seem dark to the disobedient, will be revealed unto us thruogh the grace of God,if weobey or practice what weknow. We are created and placed here upon this earth in order to be cultivated, prepared, fitted out for a better world a higher and more perfect state. In this body—a natural body, and a spiritual one. In this state we see only in part, and know part, according to our faith in Jesus Christ: our natural body, or carnal mind is attached to those temporal affairs very much, which often is a hindrance to us, that we do not realize the same enjoyment in heavenly or spiritual things as we would desire

True Riches Amidst Poverty

An aged man was sitting before the embers of a fire in an almshouse. He was very deaf, and every limb shook with palsy. Deeply poor was he. "What are you doing?" said a friend who called upon him.

"Waiting, sir."

"And for what?" asked his friend.

"For the coming of my Lord."

"What makes you wish for his coming?"

"Because, sir, I expect great things then. He has promised that when he shall appear he will give a crown of righteousness to all who love him." "On what foundation do you rest for such a hope?" again questioned his friend.

Rubbing and putting on his spectales, he read: "Therefore, being justified by faith," etc. (Rom. 5: 1, 2.)Happy old man! so poor in this world's goods, yet so rich in faith.

Seen By God.

The astronomer Mitchell was once engaged in making some observations on the sun, add as it decended toward the horizon, just as it was setting, there came into the range of the great telescope the top of a great hill about seven miles away. On the top of that hill there were a large number of apple trees, and in one of them were two boys stealing apples. One was getting the apples, and the other was watching to make certain that nobody saw them, and seeming to feel sure that they were undiscovered. But there sat Prof. Mitchell, seven miles away; with the great eye of his telescope directed fully upon them, seeing every movement they made as plainly as if he had been under the tree with them.

So it is often with us. Because we do not see the Eye which watches with a sleepless vigilence we live as though we were not seen. But the great open eye of God is upon us, and not an action can be concealed. There is not a deed, there is not a word, is not a thought, which is not known to God. If man can penetrate with the searching eye which science has constructed for his use the wide realm of the material heavens, shall not He who sitteth upon their circuit be able to know all that tanspires upon the earth, which he has made the resting-place of his feet? Thou God seest me." — S. S. Messenger.

Too Late.

Among the Sierra Nevada Mountains I was walking with some of the passengers, to relieve the overladen stage, when one of them gave me his history. He said: 'With my wife, I came to California twenty years ago. We suffered every hardship. I went to the mines, but had no luck. I afterward worked at trade, but had no luck. Then I went to farming, but had no luck. We almost suffered starvation. Every thing seemed to go against us. While we were in complete poverty my wife died. After her death I went again to the mines. I struck a vein of gold which yielded me forty thousand dollars. I am now on my way to San Francisco to transfer the mine, for which I am to receive one hundred thousand dollars." He said: "Yes; but it comes too late. My wife is gone. The money is nothing to me now." So there are those whose entire life is made of poverty and misfortune. When success comes it comes too late; and they can not enjoy it. But glory to God! the path of tears has a terminus. The storm will not blow on forever. Child of God, you are not far off from the last disappointment and the last groan. The Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shsall lead you to living fountains of water, and God shall wipe away all tears from your eyes.—

A Petition to the Annual Meeting.

WHEREAS, great grievances have arisen in many parts of our brotherhood on accouut of the action of certain Councils, Committees and Ruling Elders, which we deem contrary to the Gospel, and the former order of the Church, by which many good Brethren and Sisters have been expelled from the Church fellowship, and thousands of our Brethren's children and others, are kept standiug outside weeping and praying for admittance, some of which grievances we herein present:

1st. Requiring applicants to be dressed in a special garb, and to answer questions not found in the Gospel, such as the Elders may denote.

2d. Prohibiting Sisters from communing unless they come with a specified covering on the head, and Brethren, unless they have their hair parted in a certain style, and are dressed to suit said Elders.

3d. Requiring members to conform to all the decisions of District and Annual Councils, and excluding them from the Church for non-compliance, though they are to live pu to them as far as they correspond with the Gospel.

4th. Forbidding the preaching of the Gospel without the consent of the Ruling Elder, the preaching of more than three times in succession in one place, and the singing of more than three hymns at one meeting.

Knowing as we do, that the enforcement of such rules as the above, is producing disunion in feeling and action, in the Church, and destructive of the best interests of the cause, yet while earnestly desiring the union and harmony of the Brotherhood, we conscentiously protest against such action; and hence petition this Annual Meeting.

1st. To pass a decisiou to prevent Committees or Elders from making the above points, or any other rule or decision, in the absence of positive Gospel law, a test of fellowship.

2d. That this Annual Meeting declare the New Testament to be our only rule of faith, practice and Church Government, and that all members shall be received into the Church, and dealt with according to the Gospel only.

Passing Away.

"Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." Matth. 24: 35.

Time is divided into seconds, minutes, hours, days, years, and centuries. One second is a very short time; one minute is also a very short duration of time. Although it takes sixty seconds to make one minute, and sixty minutes to make one hour, yet how often do we hear it said, "How soon this hour has pass away!" We do not observe the swiftness of time, unless we call to mind some incidents that have transpired in the past; then we can realize how swiftly time is passing away.

According to Bible chronology, it has been about 5876 years since Adam and Eve were placed in the beautiful garden of Eden.

At the first thought we are very likely to exclaim, what a long duration of time! But let us call to mind our youthful days, and see how transitory the time doth seem; and then, if we ask our aged parents and grand parents, they will tell us the same words, proving at once that time is fast passing away.

Then I would say to the young: Make good use of your time in storing up useful knowledge; for "what is your life? It is even a vapor that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away."

Eighteen hundred and seventy-one years* have passed away since the Savior of mankind was, born into this world.

Then twelve years pass away, and we hear of this same child, Jesus, conversing with the doctors and lawyers; and on being requested by his parents to come and go to his home with them, he says, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?"

Eighteen years more pass away and he is baptized of John in the river Jordan; and from that time until his betrayal, he was almost continually preaching and applying remedies to heal a sin sick-world. After his betrayal he was condemned and crucified by wicked and infurated beings. He was then taken down from the cross and buried by one "named Joseph of Arimathea."

On the third day he arose triumphant over the grave, and appeared unto his disciples, remaining with them but a short time and then ascending into Heaven, to the right hand of his Father.

Whilst some of his beloved apostles stood with breathless silence, watching their kind and affectionate Redeemer, passing away from their view, they behold two men in white apparel, which said, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts 1: 11.

Yes, dear reader, He has promised us that he will come again. But this time he will come to execute the law that he left on record for us; and that time may be near at hand. Then how solemn is the thought, that, while some are rioting in the drinking saloons, others in the ball-room, twirling in their merry dance, the church bells are tolling to tell the sad tale that some have passed away a few, perhaps, to life everlasting, others to condemnation. But whither they go, God's words will follow them. To the righteous his words will be peace and joy, to the wicked sorrow and shame. Some will yet deny our Savior and scorn his teachings; but when they are called into eternity, then will they remember his words, as did the rich man that "died and was buried;" for God has said, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." Kind reader, hear what the poet has said:

"Delay not, delay not, O sinner, to come.
For mercy still lingers, and calls thee to-day;
Her voice is not heard in the vale of the tomb,
Her message, unheeded, will soon pass away."

Brethren and sisters, let us ponder a while upon our own condition. If the call should be proclaimed to-night that the bridegroom was coming, are we ready to go forth and meet Him, or would some of us be found with empty lamps, as were the foolish virgins? If so, let us immediately set about to procure a full supply, by renewing our faith and former vows to Him who sitteth at the right hand of the Majesty on High.

As our mind wanders back in the dim vista of the past, it calls to memory familiar faces that we have longed, to see, and to salute with the kiss of charity; but they have passed away, yet their memory clusters round us. How they labored to guide and cheer us on our way! Let us try to follow their example; for we too must soon pass away.

AARON H. BALTIMORE.

Christmas Day.

Was the birth of Christ on the 25th of December? If so, where is it recorded in the Bible? My humble opinion is, that it was not on that day; For the Shepherds were watching their flocks, in the field at the time of its occurrence. And according to history, the sheep were driven to pasture about the middle of March, and returned the middle of November. So we have no account of the day of the Savior's birth in divine revelation. But those who think it a sacred day are following Heathen Rome. December 25th was the day the godess Brooma was set up by Heathen Rome. Brooma was an ideal goddess, which the Pope worshiped. Let us as the followers of Christ, dissent from all such superstition.

LITTLE WORDS.—A very little word will often do great harm. In the hour of temptation the word "No," uttered with firmness, will save us; while the word "Yes," though said most reluctantly, will lead us downward.

"If the stars," writes Emerson, "should appear only one night in a thousand years, how would men believe and adore, and preserve for many generations the remembrance of the city of God which had been shown. But every night come out these preachers of beauty, and light the universe with their admonishing smile."

"I hold it to be a fact," says Pascal, "that if all knew what they said of each other, there would not be four friends in the world. This is manifest from the disputes to which indiscree reports from one to another give rise."

For the COMPANION.

Does it Matter How We Dress?

Brethren and sisters, we are conscious of the fact that God is a God of order; that he is, in all his mysterious ways, altogether systematic; that he is unchangeable "the same yesterday, to-day, and forever."

Hence the importance of making him our example. In order to imitate him, we must be a systematic people; because we can have no order without system. To have no order, we would be wholly compelled to follow the world; and to follow the world be highly displeasing in the sight of God; and to displeas God, renders us entirely unfit subjects for the kingdom of heaven. Hence the great importance of having order.

How are we to have order? Can we have it by dressing after the worldly fashions? I think not; because, if we dress after the world, we will be compelled to make many changes; for how often I can not tell, is some new fashion brought about every year. Can we have order when some follow the world, while others dress according to the order? I claim we must all observe the order of the church in dress. It is highly necessary that we have an established dress. or that we will not be following the world.

Since we have a dress adopted by the church, why not wear it? Some of us probably have considerable objections to it in consequence of its being old fashioned in form. It is true, it is old and "out of date," but that should not concern us in the least. Our "kingdom is not of this world," therefore we should not be ashamed to wear it. We should not care how much the world ridicule's us? To be ashamed to wear it, looks as though we would like to please the world; it looks as if we are servants of the world; "for by whomsoever ye are overcome his servants ye are." For consider him who endured such contraditions of sinners against himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds; Heb. 12; 3. Here is consolation to us, when the world laughs at our peculiar dress.

The scriptures have many passages directly on the point of dress, which make it very evident that we should not conform to this world, or dress after the fashions of the world. "In like manner also, that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shame-facedness and sobriety; not with broidered hair, or gold, or costly array; but which becometh women professing godliness with good works;" 1 Tim. 2: 9, 10. Now sisters, how plain this passage is in regard to dress. Language can not make it much easier to be understood, or any stronger. You are commanded not to wear gold, or pearls, or costly array; but you should be willing to come down to the extreme depths of humility in dress, as well as in other things. You should be willing to come to the order of the church, which is highly pleasing in the sight of God. If you come to the order of the church, it shows that you are willing to do anything for an inheritance in heaven. When you do this, you are as Christ wishes you to be. He says, "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye can not enter into the kingdom of heaven." Math. 18; 2. We all know how a little child is; it will wear anything that the parents put on it, and it does not feel abashed in the presence of any body.

Now sisters, should there be any among us that are unwilling to come to the order (but I trust there are none), it would look as if there is yet a deficiency in humility; it would seem that there is too much pride there. What else could it be? for the clothes that are according to the order of the church are neither inconvenient nor uncomfortable.

It may be said that such clothes do not make the wearer proud, or that they are not proud. I ask the question, what is the reason they wear them? Is it because the church has adopted no order? Surely not. It seems as though the worldly dress is preferred, while the order of the church is set aside in part. Peter says, "Whose adorning let it not be that onward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel;" 1 Peter 3; 3. What a strong evidence in favor of plain dressing. The phrase, "or of putting on of apparel," plainly informs us that sisters are not permitted to put on foolish or worldly apparel. This phrase either means, that sisters are not permitted to wear any clothes, or that they must not wear such things as the brethren call foolish things." The first is too erroneous to be admitted. Hence, we have a very strong evidence in favor of common apparel. Sisters, could any of you, supposing you desired such clothes, conscientiously wear such things, seeing there is such overwhelming proof against such apparel?

Now brethren, a few words to us. The phrase, "In like manner also," in 1 Tim. 2; 9, plainly informs us that man, too, must "adorn themselves in modest apparel;" because the phrase informs us that women must do in like manner as the men. Since they are commanded to dress in modest apparel, we must give the example, before they can imitate us, or do "in like manner."

Some say there is no order given in the Testament for the round breasted coat, and such other plain things as are worn. I admit it. But we can draw enough from the scriptures to prove that we must not conform to the world in dress; therefore, I claim that the church has power to adopt a certain kind of dress. And why not wear it? The very idea of having no system in dress is absurd. "But which becometh women, professing godliness with good works;" 1 Tim. 2; 10. This verse shows also that there should be a difference between the dress of the church, and that of the world. It proves that every kind of dress does not become "women professing godliness." Now I claim that this has reference to us, brethren, as well as to the sisters; because Paul says they (the women) are to adorn themselves "in like manner," that they both must observe plainness. We find that Peter commanded the women to not put on apparel (1 Pet. 3; 3), which I have had reference to foolish or worldly things. We have the expression in 1 Tim. 2; 9, only a little easier to be understood, by its being modified by "modest," which tells what kind of apparel. I claim what one of these phrases has reference to the other also has. Who can deny it? Hence we have a very strong evidence in favor of not dressing worldly-like. "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds;" Rom. 12; 2. Since Christ has commanded through his apostles, that we shall not conform to this world by the putting on of apparel, where is the renewing of the mind in regard to dress, when we come to the church and still dress aftet the world? Hence this is another very important item in favor of the subject under consideration.

I ask the question, how can we conform to this world? I answer, by conversation, by action, and by dress. Who can deny it? Now, when we wear fashionable coats, to what are we conforming? Is it to the world, or is it to the church? When a person comes to the church, and submits to all, and believes there should be an order, which is very evident, does not his mind become renewed in dress or nonconformity? Since Christ has commanded through his apostles that we shall not conform to the world in dress, I claim that we are not entirely renewed in the mind till we are convinced that we must not conform to this world, or follow the fashions, and do not follow them; because the hearer of the law is not justified, but the doer. We all well know that the scripture teaches us, that if we do the whole law, except in one point, we are guilty of the whole law. Since God has commanded that we shall not put on apparel, we are compelled to comply with it or suffer the penalty. We should remember that none of his commands are too small to be observed; for the least things that he speaks are great, and must not be broken. We should not call the subject under consideration one of the small commands? It is one of the great ones, because it expresses the internal of the Christian. It shows whether the professor is proud, or desires common clothes. How could we know a tree were it not for its external appearance? It has been said that there are a good many sins concealed under the round breasted coat, but does that condemn it? No, not by any means. Were this a fact, we could with the same propriety condemn the apostles, because one was a traitor. Consequently, we should not condemn it because some one hides under it a multitude of sins.

Conformity to the world is nothing independent of dress; it is one of the essential parts. "True religion and undefiled before God and the Father, is this, to visit the fatherless and the widows in their afflictions, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." James 1; 27. The three principal marks, as I have already stated, are, conversation, actions, and conformity in dress. I claim that conformity in dress is equally as great as either of the others, and probably greater; because the conversation of the world is greatly fixed upon dress, and their actions too, which are said to speak sometimes louder than words. Who can really deny it? Hence we have in dress all of those indications; they speak about it, act upon it, and wear it. Why not say it is the greatest? When we prefer a fashionable coat, or something else, or a sister something that is inconsistent with the order of the church, and wear it, does it not constitute a most noted spot? "He that will come after me let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." Math. 16; 24.

Brethren and sisters, we are to deny ourselves of worldly lusts, and take up our cross that which crosses nature, and follow him. The Savior says, "A tree is known by his fruit." Math. 3; 55. We claim to be a meek and humble people; and I would like to know if wearing fine or fashionable clothes really expresses our profession? If it does, we will have to beg leave of the Almighty to differ with him, and say, a tree is not known by its fruit. If it were not to look well in the sight of the world, or to be spoken well of by the world, I could not say whether fashionable clothes would be worn at all. This we should very strictly avoid, because we can not serve two masters. The Savior says, "Woe unto you when all men shall speak well of you! for so did their fathers of the false prophets." Luke 6; 26. What a caution we have! When we are trying to be friends to the world, we are becoming enemies to God.

Our common dress makes us very unpopular, I think, because when some of us dress like the world other denominations seem to speak well of it. I have heard that some of the brethren have been told that we are making rapid improvements in popularity; that we are dressing more fashionably, and will soon be as other churches, highly esteemed. Now here we can see that this very thing, dress, is causing the world to speak well of us. Well might the Savior caution his church to not strive to be well spoken of by the world. Consequently, when we are growing popular, the Savior says, "Woe unto you." The Savior, the night in which he was betrayed, prayed that we (the church) might be one, as they (the Father and Son) are one, (John 17.) But if we dress differently where is the unity? Since Christ has prayed that we might be one, why not appear of one mind in these things? Why should not our external appearance express our internal union? There is nothing more reasonable than that it should. But when some of us dress according to the world, and some according to the order of the church, does it really express a union?

It has been said that the order of the brethren is the order of heaven. This I admit, so far as it agrees with the gospel; and as for my part I do not know whether there is anything that does not agree with it. But the question is, what is the order of heaven? I will give it from the pen of the inspired writer, who, being favored by a revelation, writes as follows: "After this I beheld, and, lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands." Rev. 7; 9. It is a unity in dress. Here those people are internally joined with love and union, and their external appearance expresses it. Here it is that they are perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment and in the same appearance. Well may the Savior say, "A tree is known by his fruit;" because, here they are all in unity in dress, not one with a robe on, and another with something else. Here is the order of heaven—all dressed in white robes. What a unity! I can safely say, as I have said before, that our external unity should be expressed by our external appearance; and I claim that this should be our system. When the brethren adopted "the old brethren's order," as it is called, it became the order of heaven, because it agrees with the scriptures. They adopted it under the influence of the Holy Spirit, and, of course, according to the key of heaven, which is the Word.

Since we have an order, why justify any other kind of dress? If it can be made appear that the round breasted coat is inconvenient let the A. M. adopt some other coat, that is entirely plain; but if there is nothing inconvenient about it, let us all wear it. If we refuse to wear it, what does it show but that we have proud hearts, and desire to conform to the world? Let none of us say it is an inconvenient coat before we wear one. Suppose we try one anyhow, and see how we like it. There have been things taken on trial, which gave satisfaction, and who knows but what the coat will do the same? I presume some of us never had one on, and I would like to know how we can tell whether it is inconvenient or not? I fear some of us do not want to try one to see whether it gives satisfaction.

Now brethren, if we respect the order of heaven, which I trust we all do, let us, at once, put our external appearance into unity. Since the order of heaven is a unity in dress, can we be obeying or imitating the order of heaven if we dress differently? I am yet young in the cause of Christ, only have been a member four months, and am twenty three years old, but I say to the brethren, come one, come all, and let us all wear the peculiar garb. D. W. GEORGE.

The Lost Power. No. 6.

The interesting letter from our afflicted sister, Margaret Deardorff, in the 9th No. of the C. F. C., fully repays me for the trouble of bringing the subject of "The Lost Power" before the brotherhood. No doubt many hundreds, like sister Margaret, are anxiously awaiting and desiring to see the signs following "them that believe." What a pity it is, that the only church organization in existence, to my knowledge, that carries out all the ordinances of the Lord Jesus Christ, SHOULD NOT BELIEVE, and contend for the blessings emphatically promised by the blessed Saviour. If I believed that the promises, that he declared should follow those that complied with his commands have ceased, by limitation, I would also believe that the commands which preceded those miracles were also limited, and no longer obligatory upon the sons of men.

Is not God the same unchangable Being to-day, that he was when he said, "And these signs shall follow them that believe," &c., in Mark 12. 17, 18? He certainly is; and I rely on his blessed word where it says: "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that—miracles, then gifts of healing, helps, governments, diversities of tongues." I. Cor. 12. 28. Paul commences the chapter by advising them to "follow charity, and desire spiritual GIFTS." As we are told that "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness." Certainly the instruction of Paul to his Corinthian brethren was designed to enlighten them, in their spiritual gifts, which they were to use for the glory of God, and confirming of His word.

My beloved brother, Elder Henry Koontzs, ask me, in the last C. F. C., "Has the word of God been confirmed?" He answers, affirmatively, "By signs and miracles." I admit his answer to be correct. I will in turn ask him a question: If it required signs and miracles, to confirm the word of God, when the word was present in the person of Jesus Christ, and his disciples, how much more necessary now to have that word confirmed by His promised signs, in the wicked generation, when an imperfect translation, is doubted as authentic, and binding on the sons of men? He says, "We cannot look for a second confirmation of the scripture by miracles." And why not look for them, and see them? Simply because we have lost that living faith which the people of God once enjoyed, and which it is the privilege of His people to enjoy, and exercise in confirmation of His Word.

Brother Henry admits that there "will be miracles in the latter days; but they will be worked by the power of the devil, to defeat, if possible, the Gospel of Jesus Christ." If such be the fact, how much more important it will be, that God, who is all powerful—being omnicient, omnipotent and omnipresent — should show to the followers of anti-christ, that there is a greater power, against which the gates of hell shall not prevail. The church should implicitly rely on the promise of Christ, when he says, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to ob serve all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." Long after the blessed Redeemer had uttered the above words, and assended to the Father, St. Paul explained to his Corinthian brethren, that they should desire those spiritual gifts, which were exercised by the apostles, the severity, and all those who obeyed the command of Jesus. He told them he would not have them ignorant of those spiritual gifts; and yet, in this age of the church, we are told that the church of God has no such gifts. And why not? Can brother Henry point me to a single line of the inspired word, where that power, or rather gift, was taken away? I feel assured he cannot. He says, "And as prophecy has ceased, miracles have ceased also." I must admit that my brother speaks in an enigma. I think whenever a servant of the GREAT I AM, gets up to preach the word of God, inspired by the Holy Ghost, he is prophesying, and hence it has not ceased; and I believe miracles are also performed by some of the people of God, who have faith requisite thereto. I may hereafter name a few that have been done by "the brethren." I am sorry, very sorry, that there should be a single Elder in the church, who will admit to the taking away, or giving up, of a single command or promise of the Saviour in his last words to his disciples. I never, since I was baptized into Christ, had a doubt of its being essential to salvation, until many of the old brethren, openly asserted that the blessings which Christ asserted, "should follow those that believed," had ceased. Thank God, I yet cleave to His Word, His whole Word, and nothing but his WORD.

SELF-TAUGHT.—Many men are said to be self-taught. No man was ever taught in any other way. Do you suppose a man to be a bucket, to be hung on the well of knowledge and pumped full? Man is a creature that learns by the exertion of his own faculties. There are aids to learning of various kinds; but no matter how many of these a man be surrounded by, after all the learning is that which he acquires himself. And whether he is in college or out of college, in school or out school, every man must educate himself. And in our times, and in our community, every man has the means of doing it.

Blessed are the merciful,
For they shall obtain mercy.

Grateful Spring.

BY J. W. BEER.

The blue-birds bright, and robins dear,
Have come to us once more,
To greet us with their vernal songs
As they had sung before.

The clouds, spread over mountain heights,
Ride on the gentle breeze;
And buds are swelling once again
Upon the various trees.

The grass and grain on hill and plain,
Are dressing in bright green;
And Nature strives, with active force,
Lost beauty to regain.

The fleecy snow has left its bed;
The ice has left our streams;
The glorious sun is rising high,
To bless us with his beams.

Our springs, and brooks, and rivers broad,
Are purling forth their lays,
Ten thousand tongues, afresh inspired,
Speak forth their Maker's praise.

Rich flowers long in silence lay,
And roses ceased to bloom!
But soon in richest tints they'll rise,
To bless with their perfume.

And man, shall he look mutely on,
With heart untouched—unmoved?
Shall he not sing God's praise anew,
Who most his goodness proved?

No, Lord, our souls are deeply moved,
Our hearts with praise o'erflow;
We bring our thanks and raise our songs,
Our gratitude to show.

Accept our off'ring 'tis the best
We know to thee to bring;
But when eternal spring shall come,
Thy highest praise we'll sing.

The Two Witnesses.

The question has been asked, who those witnesses were. I will give my view, and call them Justice and Truth, which must decide the destiny of every man and woman that ever lived or will live. Under the first dispensation, God, by the hand of Moses, delivered his testimony as a witness unto those who lived under that dispensation. We should remember that when God spoke to Moses, he spoke as man would speak to man, or we could not comprehend his meaning. The law given to Moses was a just law, given by God himself, as a witness for or against those who lived under that dispensation. The Jews disregarded the commands of God. They laid them aside, and kept the traditions of men; hence, this witness was dead to them, it had fallen in the streets, as a dead man. "For our transgressions are multiplied before thee, and our sins testify against us; our transgressions are with us; and as for our iniquities, we know them; in transgressing and lying against the Lord, and departing away from our God, speaking oppression and revolt, conceiving and uttering from the heart words of falsehood. And judgment is turned away backward, and justice standeth afar off; for truth is fallen in the streets, and equity cannot enter." Here we discover this witness as being dead; but it will be brought to life, at the judgment of God, and will condemn all who lived under that dispensation, and rejected it; for they who are under the law shall be judged by the law. You will find this testimony, which we think sustains our position in Isa. 59; 13, 14. As regards these two witnesses being killed, God will show that there is power in those two witnesses that have been rejected. His witness is the power of God unto salvation. Then if my position be correct, the Mosaic dispensation is one of those witnesses spoken in, Rev. 11; 3.

The Gospel of Jesus Christ is the second witness, to all that ever did or ever will live under that dispensation. When did this witness die? When Jesus Christ was rejected by the Jews as a nation. "Away with him! Crucify him!" This witness was rejected, and speaking after the manner of men was dead; but will live again. These two witnesses shall prophecy again when Jesus Christ shall descend from heaven with the Angels, to take vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; and what has been neglected, that has been prophecied by these two witnesses be an eternal reality to all that has been spoken by these two witnesses; namely, the two dispensations, which will be the only witnesses at the judgment of Christ; for the books will be opened, and the dead shall be judged accordingly. Hence, the two witnesses, will be the two dispensations, though they are represented under the figure of prophets. If we have been converted to God, and have walked in all his commandments the witnesses will be in our favor, and the Judge will say, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, enter into the joys of your Lord." But if those witnesses find us guilty, the sentence will be the reverse; "Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angles."

Why We Reject the Apocrypha.

1st. Because it was never written in Hebrew.

2d. Because it was never quoted by our Lord.

3d. Because it was rejected from the canon of Scripture by the Jews.

4th. Because it was rejected from the canon of Scripture by Origen, A. D. 200, St. Epiphanius, A. D. 358, and St, Jerome, A. D. 392.

Beside these reasons for rejecting the Apocrypha in general, we especially reject the book of Maccabees as uncanonical and uninspired.

1st. Because Pope Gregory I., A. D. 590, did so; and by the late Vatican decree, that must be an infallible judgment.

2d. Because the author distinctly disavows inspiration, saying; "If I have done well in writing this history it is what I desire; but if not so perfectly, it must be pardoned me." 2 Macc. xv. 39.

HIS HOLINESS THE POPE has, it is stated, signed a decree convening the Ecumenical Council. Important matters will claim their attention, the most important being the professed transfer of the Papal head quarters. The Holy Father and Victor Emanuel don't get along very well together, andthe Council will probably select a more desirable and congenial residence for him. The Island of Malta has been spoken of as the place of meeting of the Council. This doubtless also indicates the future seat of the Papal power Feet washing:--Examples of it in Scripture.

For the benefit of brethren and sisters who may wish to examine the entire scripture on the subject of washing feet, we submit the following, collected from the Bible, both old and new. There may be more passages where it may befound, than what we give in this table, but thus much is to be found in the sacred word.

"Let a little water, I pray you, be fetched, and wash your feet and rest yourselves, under the tree.' Gen.18 :4.

"And he said, Behold now, my lords, turn in, I pray you, into your servants house, and tarry all night, and wash your feet, and ye shall rise up early, and go on your ways. And they said, Nay: but we will abide in the street all night. And he pressed upon them greatly, and they turned in unto him, and entered into his house ; and he made them a feast, and did take unleavened bread, and they did eat." Gen. 18 ; 2 : 3.

"And the man came into the house ; and he (Laban) ungirded his camels, and gave straw and provender for the camels, and water to wash his feet and the men's feet that were with him." Gen 24 : 32 ;

"And he brought the men into Joseph's house and gave them water, and they washed their feet; and he gave their asses provender." Gen. 43 ; 24.

"And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying : Thou shalt also make a laver of brass, and his foot also of brass, to wash withal, and thou shalt put it between the tabernacle of the congregation and the altar, and thou shalt put water therein. For Aaron and his sons shall wash their hands and their feet thereat. When they go into the tabernacle of the congregation, they shall wash with water, that they die not ; or when they come near to the altar to minister to burn offering made by fire unto the Lord. So they shall wash their hands and their feet that they die not ; and it shall be a statute forever to them, even to him and to his seed, throughout their generations." Exodus 30: 17—21.

"And he set the laver between the tent of the congregation and the altar, and put water there to wash withal; And Moses, and Aaron and his sons, washed their hands and feet thereat." Exodus 40 : 30—32.

"So he brought him into his house, and gave provenders unto the beasts ; and they washed their feet and did eat and drink." Judges 19 : 21.

"And when the servants of David were come to Abigail to Carmel, they spake unto her saying, 'David sent us unto thee, to take thee to him to wife.' And she arose and bowed herself on her face to the earth, and said, "Behold, let thine handmaid be a servant to wash the feet of the servants of my Lord. 1 Sam. 25 : 40, 41.

"And David said to Uriah, Go down to thy house and wash thy feet." 2 Sam 11 : 8.

"The righteous shall rejoice when he seeth the vengeance : he shall wash his feet in the blood of the wicked." Psalm 58 : 10.

"Have now given the accounts of this practice and the reference to it, in the Old Testament Scriptures, so far as we can find them ; and will proceed now to give its practice and reference to it in the New.

"And one of the Pharisees desired him (Jesus) that he would eat with him. And he went into the Pharisee's house and sat down to meat. And, behold, a woman in the city who was a sinner, when she knew that Jesus sat at meat in the Pharisee's house, brought an Alabaster box of ointment, and stood at his feet behind him weeping, and began to wash his feet with tears and did wipe them with the hairs of her head. And he turned to the woman and said unto Simon, Seest thou this woman ? I entered into thine house ; thou gavest me no water for my feet, but she hath washed my feet with tears' and wiped them with the hair of her head. Thou gavest me no kiss, but this woman since the time she came in, hath not ceased to kiss my feet. My head with oil thou didst not anoint ; but this woman hath anointed my feet with ointment ; therefore I say unto thee ; Her sins which are many are forgiven: for she loved much ; but to whom little is forgiven, the same loveth little. And he said unto her, thy sins are forgiven. Thy faith hath saved thee ; Go in peace." Luke 7 : 36—50.

"And Jesus knowing that the Father had given all things into his hands, and that he was come from God and went to God ; He riseth from supper and laid aside his garment ; and took a towel and girded himself. After that he poureth water into a basin, and began to wash the disciples feet, and to wipe them with a towel wherwith he was girded. Then cometh he to Simon Peter ; and Peter saith to him "Dost thou wash my feet?" and Jesus answered and said unto him, "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter." Peter saith unto him, Thou shalt never wash my feet. Jesus answered him "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me.', Simon Peter saith unto him, Lord not my feet only, but also my hands and my heart. Jesus saith to him, He that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit ; and ye are clean, but not all. For he knew who should betray him, therefore said He, ye are not all clean. So after he had washed their feet and had taken their garments and was set down again he said unto them, Know ye not what I have done to you ? Ye call me Master and Lord; and ye say well, for so I am. If I then your Lord and Master, have washed your feet ye also ought to, wash one anothers feet. For I have given you an axample, that you should do as I have done to you. Verily, verily, I say unto you, the servant is not greater than his Lord, neither is he that is sent greater than he that sent him. If ye know these things happy are ye, if ye do them." John 13 : 3—17.

Remember the word that I said unto you, The servant is not greater than his Lord." John 15 : 20, Let not a widow be taken into the number under three score years old, having been the wife of one man, well reported of for good works ; if she have brought up children, if she have lodged strangers, if she have washed the saints feet, if she have relieved the afflicted, and if she have diligently followed every good work." Timothy 1 5 : 9—10.

Such are the portions of scriptures that teach the ordinance of feetwashing. Under the law and in the patriarchal age the act was performed for one's self ; but under the Gospel Dispensation, the services was always performed for others. It is one thing to wash one's own feet, quite another to have them washed for us by a second person ; but much more so, when we perform that service for an other brother a neighbor or perhaps for an enemy. There must be no respect of persons if we wish to obtain the promised benefit.

Pious Youth Department.

Thoughts on the Pious Youth.

As the PIOUS YOUTH is still remembered among us, I am prompted to offer a few thoughts in regard to it. Peradventure it may be of some interest to our readers, at least to some of them.

We frequently, in supplicating a throne of infinite mercy, invoke the eternal Father to work within us, both to will and to do, that the cause of Christ be enhanced, and souls rescued from the grasp of Satan. Do we truly try to comprehend the sublime import of these invocations in behalf of so noble a cause? If so, I have an important message for you. Read it with a meditative heart ; and if you can coincide with me in my sentiments, then we would solicit you in making an effort to maintain the YOUTH.

The PIOUS YOUTH is not dead, as was surmised, butsleepeth ; and oh ! shall his sleep be eternal ? May God forbid. He has already a department in the C. F. C., and by a little effort and self-sacrifice on our part, he may be enabled to assume his former uniform again. Only a little effort, my friends, and we have the promise of again seeing him come. Bringing the soul-cheering tidings, that a Savior has died to save poor sinners, such as you and I are, and that by a close application of his blood we can become his children. "If children, then heirs, and joint-heirs with him in glory."—A happy re-union in heaven.

How many souls have been discomforted on account of the YOUTH'S declining ? and how many more will yet be, if he should not be restored ?

Now friends, will you make an effort in endeavoring to maintain the YOUTH ? Write some articles for the Youth Department, and if it takes too much space in the COMPANION, another proposition will be made.

Advice to Children.

Let me give you a few words of advice for your instruction ; hoping you will read and reflect, to see if you have been doing your duty to your parents, and your God. We all know the beautiful commandment God gave to the children of men, "Honor your father and mother that your days may be long." How much more pleasant it is to see a child do as it has been told, than to fret or wait until some one else will do it. I am sure such a child is not doing his or her duty. Always do as your parents tell you, and there will be happiness in store for you. Never talk unkindly to those who try to teach you to be useful in the world ; always bear in mind, that it is for your benefit that they labor, not for their own. How wrong and unpleasant it would be if every child would have its own way, and parents had no control over them. A good boy is almost certain to make a good man ; and I assure you that, if a girl is kind and obedient to her parents, she will make a good woman.

God has also commanded us to be truthful. I feel very sorry when I hear a child tell a lie, or deny a fault. I can not place much confidence in such a child, nor can any one else. Then how much better it would be if the truth was always told. Always speak, think, and act the truth, and every person will love and respect you.

WM. H. ELKINS.

Hutsonville, Ill.

Stepping in Father's Footsteps.

One bright winter's morning, after a snow storm, a father took his hat for a walk to attend to some farm affairs requiring his attention. As he started, his little boy of five summers also snatched his hat, and followed father with mock dignity and an assumed business-like air. When they reached the door, the gentleman noticed that no track, or pathway, had been made in the snow, and he hesitated about letting his boy follow him. But the soft, fleecy snow was so tempting, so pearly white, that he concluded to walk after him. He took long and rapid strides through the untrodden snow, when, suddenly remembering his "little boy," he paused, looked back for him, and exclaimed :

"Well, my son, don't you find it hard work in this deep snow ?"

"Oh ! no," said the boy, "I'm coming ; for, father, I step in all your tracks."

True enough, the dear child was planting his tiny feet just where the parent's had trodden. The child's reply startled the father as he reflected that thus would his child keep pace with him, and follow in his tracks through life. He was not a friend to Jesus, not a man of prayer, and not a Christian ! and well might he pause and tremble as he thought of his child, ever striving "to step in all his tracks," onward, onward, through life's mysterious mazes and myths, toward eternity ! The little boy's reply brought that strong, stubborn-hearted man to think, when never the preached word of God had made any impression on him. Finally he repented, and sought and found peace in believing in Christ. We believe he is now making such tracks through life, that, at some day, that son may be proud to say : "Father, I step in all your tracks."—British Workman.

Too Quick.

One morning an enraged countryman came into Mr. M.'s store, with very angry looks. He left a team in the street, and had a good stick in his hand.

"Mr M.," said the angry countryman, "I bought a paper of nutmegs here in your store, and when I got home they were more than half walnuts ; that's the young villian that I bought 'em of," pointing to John.

"John," said Mr. M., "did you sell this man walnuts for nutmegs ?"

"No, sir," was the ready reply.

"You lie, you little villian," said the countryman, still more enraged at his assurance.

"Now look here," said John ; "if you had taken the trouble to weigh your nutmegs, you would have found that I put in the walnuts gratis."

"Oh, you gave them to me, did you ?"

"Yes, sir, I threw in a handful for the children to crack," said John, laughing at the same time.

"Well, now, if that ain't a young scamp," said the countryman, his features relaxing into a grin as he saw through the matter.

Much hard talk and bad blood would be saved if people would stop to weigh before they blame others.

"Think twice before you speak once," is an excellent motto.

Holy City.

O Behold, the holy city,
Coming down from God, on high;
As a bride, all dressed completely,
Now decending from the sky.
She's adorned with grace and glory;
Beautified with costly stone;
Lovely is her form before me;
Bright as the meridian sun.

Ancient prophets of her speak well,
Revelation does declare,
Length and breadth and height are equal,
And her platform lies four square,
Fifteen hundred miles extended—
North, and South, and East, and West,—
Fifteen hundred miles most splendid,
See her buildings rise abreast.

See her pearly gates all spreading
To receive the righteous there;
Whom the gracious Saviour's aiding
To her holy mansions fair,
See her golden streets all paved,
As the righteous march along,
When the nations of the saved
Join in one eternal song.

See the heavenly Host advancing,
Near the throne of God Supreme,
Where each saint receives a mansion,
And eternal love's their theme,
On their Savior beauty gazing,
In sweet raptures round the throne;
With celestial voices praising
God's eternal, holy Son:

Pride.

"The Pharisee stood and prayed thus with himself: God, I thank thee, that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican." Luke 18; 11.

The above is the language of a proud, boasting Pharisee, in the temple, while praying, and bears upon its bosom self-righteousness, self-honor, and self-applause. It seems that man has inherited more or less of this proud, boasting, self-righteous spirit in his fall from that high and holy state in which he was created. We read that "God created man in his own image; in the image of God created he him;" Gen. 1 : 27. But man did not long remain in this righteous and holy state God for wise purposes put our first parents under restrictions, Gen. 2 : 16, 17, "And the Lord God commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayset freely eat: but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." And by referring to the 3rd chapter of Genesis, we have a full account of man's transgression and of the punishment inflicted in consequence of his eating the forbidden fruit, and thus violating a divine injunction. Thus man fell and inherited this self-righteous spirit manifested by a Pharisee while engaged in the act of praying. We may trace the life of our blessed Savior from Bethlehem's manger to the blood-stained cross on Mount Calvary, and it is in vain that we seek for anything that will justify the spirit manifested by this van-glorious Pharisee.

But let us turn and view the busy world,—Church and State,—and we find this same spirit leading the mighty hosts of earth. It shows itself in the nations and kingdoms of the world; is stalks forth in every society; it manifests oppression; it implies superiority and inferiority; it shows a desire to rule. Go with me to the society of those who profess to be the followers of that meek and lowly one, who is now pleading at the right hand of the Majesty on High, and, in place of true humility, you will easily catch something of this spirit; for professors of the religion of Jesus Christ will enter the house of God in all the pomp and splendor that a fashionable world can devise, and there and then advocate the cause of fashion. Yea they pretend to approach into the presence of the most High with hearts as humble as those of Galilee's fishermen; they tell us these things are all right in the eyes of the Lord, and that they know that their sins are all pardoned, and they are the chosen people of God, &c. Now if our Holy Record, the book of God, breathes forth such sentiments as these, we are willing to submit; but if to the contrary, let us follow it; for there is no other name given whereby we can be saved. Jesus Christ declared in his prayer to his Father, that his disciples are not of the world. "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world." John 17: 16. From this we understand that the people of God are, to a certain degree, a distinct and separate people from those of the world, in character and party. They do not follow the sinful practices and customs of the world. Now all those who plead for the foolish, giddy, and superfluous fashions of the world, let them be professors of religion or not, must confess that it is an unmistakable indication of a proud heart; and we hope they will be profited by a serious reflection upon the words of Christ. Luke 16: 15. "And he said unto them, ye are they which justify yourselves before men; but God knoweth your hearts; for that which is highly esteemed among men is an abomination in the sight of God.

Hints to Grumblers.

"What a noisy world this is!" croaked an old frog, as he squatted on the margin of the pool. "Do you hear those geese, how they scream and hiss? What do they do it for?"

"Oh just to amuse themselves," answered a little field mouse.

"Presently we shall have the owls hooting; what is that for?"

"It's the music they like best," said the mouse.

"And those grasshoppers, they can't go home without grinding and chirping; why do they do that?"

"Oh, they're so happy they can't help it,' said the mouse.

"You find excuses for all; I believe you don't understand music, so you like the hideous noises."

"Well, friend to be honest with you," said the mouse, "I don't greatly admire any of them, but they are all sweet to my ears, compared to the constant croaking of a frog."

RESTRAIN YOUR TEMPER.—Many Christians who have borne the loss of a dear child, or of all their property, with the most Christian fortitude have been entirely vanquished by the breaking of a dish; or the blunders of a servant.—Newton.

Some good Christians have a great deal of trouble in this world. The reason of it is, that God is preparing them for very great happines in heaven.

Envy deserves pity more than anger, for it hurts nobody so much as itself. It is a distemper rather than a vice, for nobody would feel envy if he could help it. Whoever envies another secretly allows that person's superiority.

A real impetuous laugh dissipates many illusions, sweeps the twilight out of our imaginations, and brings honest daylight. But it must be real. No dry, hacking laugh. It should be spontaneous, outbursting, irresistible, infectious.

A Petition to the Annual Meeting.

TAKE NOTICE.

In our Pica, wide columns will be found a petition to Annual Meeting, to which we call the special attention of all our readers. It had not been our attention to give it such prominence in our columns, but after it was in type, we did not wish to lose the work. We give it to show our Brethren what is going on among us. We have no information as to the authors of the Petition, nor from whence it comes. It was received through the mail, by Elder Lint, who handed it over to us. The postmark was too indistinct to be deciphered. It is printed on writing paper, and contains a long foot-margin for 'signers.'

We take occasion to remark while upon the subject, that the Petition meets with no sympathy from this office. We agree with the last article, but think it useless for the Annual Meeting to re-adopt what it has forever held as a sacred law in our church government. But we protest against this underground method of gaining points. Only a few years ago it was attempted by a set of radicals in the other extreme, asking the Annual Meeting to pass resolutions that would excommunicate all that held the sentiments expressed in the present petition. It was clandestinely circulated, just as this one. Now if these petitioners think the Gospel should be our only law for church government, why do they petition the Annual Council to make others?

We have a fair way of getting questions before the Annual Meeting, and upon Gospel principles, which can be resorted to, by all who want business fairly done. Those who wish to smuggle it through must necessarily do it in some other way. They shall never have any assistance from us, be they clergy, priest, or people.

German Baptists.—Brethren.

A petition will be presented to next Annual Meeting, (providing it can pass the District Council) praying the meeting to discard the name of German Baptists, and re-adopt the original, scriptural name, Brethren. We hope all congregational, and District council Meetings not yet transpired will take the matter into consideration. We know that not one member in fifty makes use of the name German Baptist. Nor does the public recognize us by that name. We have no desire at this time to discuss the matter, simply to call attention to it.

That Will Do.

We thank our friends for their liberal response to our request for the return of copies of No. 48 of last volume. We are now fully supplied, and if occasion offers we hope to do a "good turn" to those who have favored us.

Dale City Record.

The above is the title of an independent weekly newspaper, about to be published at this office, the first number of which is in proof before us

It is edited by Mr. Albert J. Hasty, a fluent and easy writer, and an enterprising business man.

This enterprise has been undertaken at the instigation of the citizens of the place, who think the town has citizens and business enough to support a paper, and interests that require an advocate. In these opinions our publisher concurs, and hence he has done his part in the work, by establishing a first class office in the place, and now offering the specimen copy of the paper. If the citizens of the town will now do their part by giving the Record a liberal patronage, in advertising and subscriptions, it will become a fixed institution, and will be regularly issued in a few weeks. The regular issues will be delayed only until a subscription list, and advertising can be secured, to justify the undertaking. Everything else is ready Unleavened Bread.

On which day of the first month, and about what hour of the day, did the Hebrews commence to eat unleavened bread? It is desired that J. W. Beer give his views.

Elizabeth Neher.

Answer.—It is assumed that the query has reference to the feast of unleavened bread. There was no law to prohibit the use of unleavened bread at any time; and where no law is there is no transgression; therefore, it would have been no violation of God's law for the Hebrews to commence the use of unleavened bread on the 10th day of Abib, or at any time prior to that. But the law of the Lord required them to eat unleavened bread at a specified time, and to continue its use for seven full days. The following is the law on this point: "In the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month at even, ye shall eat unleavened bread, until the one and twentieth day of the month at even. Seven days shall there be no leaven found in your houses; for whosoever eateth that which is leavened, even that soul shall be cut off from the congregation of Israel, whether he be a stranger, or born in the land." Ex. 12: 18. By noticing this law it will be seen that the time to begin the use of that which was unleavened, was, "on the fourteenth day of the month AT EVEN." It is evident, therefore, that the use of leaven was strictly prohibited for seven full days from the time appointed for the killing of the passover, which must be killed "in the evening" of "the fourteenth day." (Verse 6). From the killing of the passover in the evening, at the close of the fourteenth day, for seven entire days, till the evening of the twenty-first day of the month, no leaven dare be found in their houses. This being the case, their houses must be cleansed before they killed the passover; for the leaven must be found in order to be removed, and it dare not be found in their houses after the time for sacrificing the passover. It might have been removed before the fourteenth day, but later than the fourteenth it could not be.

If the Hebrews had dispensed with leaven on the tenth day of the month, and continued the use of unleavened bread only seven days from that time, they would have been guilty; for the law required them to dispense with the use of the heaven "until the one and twentieth day at even." If they had used leaven after the killing of the passover they would have violated the law. Reason suggests that they would, and history teaches that they did, cleanse their houses from leaven during the fourteenth day of the month, the same day on which the passover was killed, but before it was slain. Because of this preparation for the ensuing feast, the fourteenth day, the day on which the passover must be killed, was called the day of the preparation;" Matth. 27: 62. And because they dispensed with leaven on this day and used unleavened bread at its close, it was called "the day of unleavened bread." Luke 22: 7.

But the fifteenth day of the month was the first day of the feast of unleavened bread, styled, because of its commemorative character, "The feast of unleavened bread." Lev. 23: 6. It is therefore as plain as language can make it, that the law required the Hebrews to eat nothing leavened for seven full days commencing with the time for killing the passover, in the evening of the fourteenth day of Abib. MARSHALTOWN, IOWA. We have an answer to the query relating to the rock upon which Christ built his church, from the foregoing office, that came without the name of the writer. Who is the author? When will our contribitors learn to comply with our rule, and not send their contributions without their names? If they have reasons for not wishing their names to appear, let them be stated: if we deem them valid, we will withhold; if not, the names will appear.

P. S. N. We shall not be able to visit Maryland before next Autumn. We have then in contemplation a visit through Cambria, Blair, Bedford, Huntingdon, Mifflin, Juniata, Perry, Cumberland, Adams, and York counties, Pa., and by way of Baltimore up through Maryland home. We have two tickets from Pittsburg to Baltimore, paid for, and they must be used. We (wife and I) think of using them ourselves. Farther notice will be given; but we now say, the time embraced in the trip will be extend from the middle of August to the middle of November, at which time we must be at home on business.

I. S. S. We believe we would let them alone. The Annual Meeting will not keep much account of it, not having announced its willingness to receive such petitions. In that way you will do no harm at least. Or if you wish you can have petitions on the other side. Then you will only counteract what evil the others may be doing.

MOSES LIGHT. Your article is not realy a plan or a proposition for getting up a Fire Insurance Company among the Brethren, but is rather a Constitution and By Laws for an organized Company. For that purpose it would be very good so far as it goes. We think it hardly called for through our columns for the present. Some suggestions as to the propriety or impropriety of having Fire and Life Insurance Companies of our own would be in order: what would our readers say of having a Brethren's Mutual Protection Society, to prevent suffering from loss by Death or Fire?

Miracles.

Dear Brethren: — As the subject of miracles is at issue in the COMPANION, I thought proper to add my mite, in love.

I will try, first, to show that the power to work miracles was given to man; then, that this power was to follow and did follow those who believed in the name of Jesus Christ.

Matth. 10: 1, reads thus: "And when he had called unto him his twelve disciples, he gave them power against unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all manner of sickness, and all manner of disease." Now turn to Mark. 6: 7., and see that it agrees with the foregoing.

Luke says: "Then he called his twelve disciples together, and gave them power and authority over all devils, and to cure diseases. And he sent them to preach the kingdom of God, and to heal the sick." Luke 9: 1, 2. In the 10th chapter 19th verse, Luke says: "Behold, I give unto you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy; and nothing shall by any means hurt you." This is conclusive proof that the power of working miracles was given unto Christ's followers.

Next I will cite you to the working of miracles by the apostles, to show that the power followed them, and then try to show that the same power remains for us. The first after the ascension of Christ was by Peter, Acts 3rd, the healing of the lame man. Next, in Acts 5th, in the healing of divers sick folks, and casting out unclean spirits. Our next is by Philip, in Samaria, Acts 8th, "For many that were possessed with unclean spirits were healed, with many that had the palsy." The next you find in Acts 9th, the healing of Eneas, by Peter, in Lydda. There he found "Eneas, which had kept his bed eight years, and was sick of the palsy. And Peter said unto him, Eneas, Jesus Christ maketh the whole;" &c. See Tabitha restored. Our next you find Acts 14: 8. The healing of the impotent man at Lystra, who heard Paul speak and believed, and had faith in God, and was miraculously healed by Paul. Next we find the casting out of the spirit of divination, in Macedonia, by Paul. The next we offer is, special miracles wrought by the hand of Paul, "So that from his body were brought unto the sick handkerchiefs or aprons, and the diseases departed from them, and the evil spirits went out of them." Acts 19: 12 Still another in Acts 20: 9, the restoration of Eutychus, who fell down from the third loft, was taken up dead, and Paul restored him to life. Thus far we had thought to mention the miracles wrought by the hand of the Apostles, through Jesus Christ, to show the reader at a glance, that they were many, and not a single failure occured. Other miraculous occurences are recorded; but let this suffice here.

Does this same power remain for us? I answer, emphatically, yes. Some of my dear brethren and sisters speak of this power as the "Lost power." Let me say, it is not lost, but only neglected. And why this neglect? Is it for want of faith, or is it weakness in the flesh only? We hope the latter. We say it remains yet for us, from the fact that we have it from the lips wherein was no guile found, and altogether his last words to his disciples. Here is his promise (Mark. 16: 17.) And these signs shall follow them that believe; In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover. How plain and comforting are these words from the lips of our blessed Lord. See also context Luke 10: 17.

Now, dear brethren, if this neglected power remains for us yet, why not draw near to our Savior with full purpose of heart, and rely on him to perform miracles through us, giving him all the praise? All that is wanting is an effort on our part, and he will perform. O most Holy Lord our God and our blessed Savior, help us to exercise this neglected power which thou hast given us.

I wish now to say a few words to my dear brother Daniel Keller. In No. 1, present Vol., page 10, you say: "Then I brought my case before God, and besought him to take the life destroying power from this disease, that it might do me no harm."

Further on you say you felt that the Lord had taken your case in hand, and all fears of dying through this disease disappeared; you felt safe in the hands of the Lord. Well you might feel safe. Now, from this confession, I look upon your recovery as almost, if not altogether, miraculous. Then go on with this confession, and look to Jesus Christ to perform the work, and you make the confessions. Come out on the Lord's side, brethren. G. W. BURKHART.

Nolo, Pa.

Brother Henry :—I wish to drop you a few lines for the COMPANION again. I am alone in my chamber, but this is nothing strange for me. When alone, you know how the mind wanders. I have been reading until I became tired, Then my mind was carried back to my childhood. Oh, how sad I feel when I think of my playmates with whom I used to play in my childhood! The tears run down my cheeks, when I think of my innocence. O sisters, can we refrain from weeping, when we see so much of our time was wasted in sinful pleasures? I cannot: it makes me feel very sad. I am, I feel, going to the grave; yes, fast hastening away And must I stand before God in judgment? Yes and so must you. Shall we be able to stand in God's presence in the great day?

Dear brethren and sisters pray for me, that I may be able to stand in the great day of God Almighty, and hear the Judge say "well done, good and faithful,—enter into the joys of thy Lord." I feel so unworthy. We can not be too good. God does not want us luke warm. If we are lukewarm. he will spue us out his mouth. "If the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?" we may now help each other, and encourage each other; but when that day shall come, we can help one another no more. If we are not prepared to meet God, no one can help us then. Then let us put our trust in God. He can help us in time of need. O sinner, what are you doing? If you were travelling along a lonely road, and should see a great fire before you, what would you do? you would call on God to have mercy on you. Then call upon him now: "Call upon the Lord while he is near." "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let them turn to the Lord and he will abundantly pardon." In love.

NANCY WISE.

From Cawker City, Mitchell Co., Kansas.

Brother Holsinger :—Through the mercies of our heavenly Father our unprofitable lives have been spared; and this Sunday morning finds us in Mitchell Co., Kansas, five miles east of Cawker City, a small place of sixty houses, started about one year ago. We feel thankful to God that our lives are thus spared, and that the blessings of health and the comforts of life, at least in part, continue with us; and we feel confident that his goodness will abide with us. To this end we trust, and in our hearts ask God to give us contented minds to fill us with reverence for His laws, make us humble before Him, and finally fully accept of us and save us, in and through the Lord Jesus Christ, eternally in Heaven. May His mercies be with and comfort you all. I do not know that any of our Brethren live in this County; if I did I would go and see them. Brother Ives, minister in the second degree, and brother J. L. Switzer, one of your contribitor's, some seven or eight miles east of brother Ives's both live in Jewel Co., Kan., some thirty-five or forty miles north of this, on White Rock River. If any brethren live near me, and are readers or the COMPANION, we would like to hear from them. We have a good country here; as good, perhaps, as there is in Kansas: and if any brethren contemplate moving to Kansas, they will be gladly received. f they will come and see us, we will do all we can to find them a place. Any information we can give in reference to this locality we will willingly give, and are very anxious to have ministering brethren come and build up a church here Who will write to us? Yours in love.

WAYNESBORO, PA., March 26, 1872.

Beloved Brother in the Lord:—We are all well at present, and the brethren and sisters are generally well, as far as I know. Brother Daniel Holsinger intends to leave us, the Lord willing, for Iowa, on the 2d of April. Last Sunday he preached in the Antietam Meeting House for the last time. He said this is going to be the last time you are to hear my voice at this place, and when he said so, there were many wet eyes. The church does not like to see him leave. His services would be wanted here.

By the request of some of my brethren I will give you a statement of our church since divided. The congregation was subdivided on the 19th of September, 1866, and since we have received into the church by Baptism 123; and by letter of recommendation 20; lost by death 34; moved away 39; three of them returned back again. Expelled 19; restored 4. And at this time we have 329 members; of brethren 107, and of sisters 223.

JACOB SNOWBERGER.

In Vol. VIII, No. 15, brother D. J. Miller asks about "a certain man, Conrad Peysel." His name is more properly Conrad Beissel, and the query is answered in part in the same No. of the C. F. C in which it occurs, in the article on feet-washing by brother A. H. Cassel. And a synopsis of the doings of Conrad Beissel and his followers brother Miller gives himself. They generally go by the name of seventh Day Baptists. They have a Cloister in Franklin county; also some elsewhere. Their Cloister at Ephrata, Lancaster County, is well nigh at "wit's end." This answer shall not, in the least, prevent other brethren from answering the query. I read much about Conrad Beissel in the Cloister Chronica and I felt it my duty to make this ventilation. Your brother,

GEO. BUCHER.

Cornwall, Pa.

Query.

Will not some of the brethren of the different congregations, bring the following query to our District or Annual Meeting? Is baptism for the remission of sin and the reception of the Holy Ghost to the penitent believer? Or is the penitent believer to be in possession of the pardon of sin and the gift of the Holy Ghost, before baptism? These are solemn questions, and should be considered carefully. For the present I would say that we do not wish to undo what has been done, but to prevent more such cases. If the Gospel promises the remission of sin and the gift of the Holy Ghost before baptism, please let me know, that there be no contention. But if we consider the administrator lawfully called and qualified by the Lord, and if he baptizes according to the scriptures, then his baptism, his laying on of hands and his prayer, are all right and valid. But why is it that some of the brethren tell the candidate to bow the knee while they go through the process of laying on of hands and pray the second time for them? Would it not be better to do all over again, instead of only half? Will not the District or Annual Meeting give a decision, so that the Minister may know how to preach on the subject?

Advertising alone does not prove success. Such is the policy of the Burlington Route that runs to three great regions in the West: 1st, To Omaha, connecting with the Pacific Roads. 2nd, To Lincoln the capital of Nebraska, and all that beautiful region south of the Platte, field with R. R. lands and homesteads. 3d, To St. Joseph, Kansas City and all Kansas points.

The roads are splendidly built, have the best bridges, finest cars, the Miller platform and coupler, and the safety air brake (to prevent the loss of life that is everywhere else happening); Pullman's sleepers, Pullman dining cars, large and powerful engines (to make quick time and good connections), and are in a word the best equipped roads in the West. So that if you desire to go safely, surely, quickly and comfortably to any point in Southern Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, or on the Pacific Roads, be sure that you go "By Way of Burlington."

THE

Christian Family Companion.

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

Personal Acquaintance of John the Baptist ,and Christ.

Brother Worst, I don't approve of lengthy discussions in' our periodicals; because they sometimes lead to harsh words; and I don't think them profitable, any more than I do a multitude of commentaries. But as the question on which we differ is not very important, I have no idea that our discussion will grow into any unseemly length. There is a question of much more importance which I have asked myself; Do I know Jesus ? The answer of my soul is, I want to know him better. I hope every one that has read your article, and may read mine, will ask himself the question, Do I know Jesus whom to know is life eternal ? All that have the least acquaintance with him will have to answer for themselves, the question which so troubled Pilate: „What then shall I do with Jesus ? "Shall I turn from him as from one who has never done anything to meet my love? or shall I receive him into my house, that I may know him better? This question will have to be decided. If it is deferred from time to time, Death will finally decide it for every one. While life shall last, we will never be called upon to decide a more important question. The interests involved in this question are eternal; for the effects of the decision will be felt in eternity. I hope that some who may read this, will be so absorbed in answering this question, that they can feel no interest in the one we are discussing. I think you will join with me in this wish.

You appear to believe that John never left his native place, or desert, until his shewing unto Israel." I believe he did lead rather an isolated life till he began to preach; but that he did not keep the Mosaic law, which he ceuld not have done without going up to Jerusalem, I can not yet believe. Zacharias and Elizabeth "were both righteous before God, walking in all the command ments aud ordinances of the Lord blameless.'

Is it reasonable to suppose that their lives were less blameless after the birth of their son than they were before? They would have been far from blameless if they had failed to diligently teach their son, and cause him to observe all the commandments of the Lord, among which was that of going up to the yearly feasts at Jerusalem. During his childhood it would have been their duty to take him there. Besides the passover was a family feast. It was observed separately by each family. How could Zacharias lawfully keep the passover, and his only son be absent? As Zacharias and Elizabeth " were both well stricken in years "when John was born, they may not have lived till he reached manhood; but even if such was the case,the influence brought to bear upon John would have been the same. When he first began to preach he was almost universally receive by the people as a prophet. If all Judea went to him for baptism, there certainly were many from Hebron and the surrounding country, who had known him all his life; and if he hadso, neglected to observe the Mosaic law as never to appear at the feast,it seems to me the people would not so readily received him. You say, "We always prefer to reason upon gospel grounds; we think it safest under all circumstances." I most heartily agree with you. Anp I also think we ought always accept the scripture in its most simple and natural sense.

But, my dear brother,don't you see that I have as much cripture, if not more for supposing that more than one journey was made between Nazareth Hebron, as you have for believing that there" was something supernatural"about the appearance of Jesus whenhe approached to John for baptism. He hath no form nor comliness; and when we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him." Is 53:2. The sign John was to receive was definite, "upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending." There was no need to" venture" a guess and try to find out that way whether this was the person; because he waiteb for the proper sign that was to reveal him. That was given when he baptized Jesus. It is not probable that these words, "I have need to be baptized of the,' sprang naturally to his lips from the personal knowledge he had of Jesus' righteous life.

John, you say, reiterates," And I knew him not. The repetition of these words seems to convey the idea of astonishment on the part of John that he should, of himself, have known that Jesus was the Christ. And I suppose he, wished, for some reason, to impress it on his disciples, that he was ignorant of the fact that his cousin was the Messiah or the "one mightier "than he.

When John says, „And I knew him not," it is evident that he meant he knew him not as the one that was to come me, for he immediately adds, "But he that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, upon whom thou shalt see the spirit descending and remaining on him, the same is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost."

In concluding I desire to say, that although I believe my view of this question to be more reasonable than yours, yet knowing my fallibility I freely acknowledge that I may possibly be mistaken. "If any man think that he knoweth any thing, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know."

The Lost Power.

Be it understood that the working of miracles, is, and always was the work of God. Many miracles have been performed by him, through the instrumentality of Christ and his apostles ; sufficient to prove to us that all things are possible with God, and a full resignation of our will to his divine will is the substance of true religion. Yet our privilege, as well as our duty, is to make use of all the means appointed for our benefit. The last means is to send for the Elders of the Church to pray over us and anoint us with oil &c. When all the means are complied with on our part, then say, the will of God be done. I am satisfied, if we make use of all the means appointed, God will make us what he wants us to be, and if he sees fit to work some more miracles, he will find the instrument. We are all at his disposal, for the working of miracles. To be sure the prayer of the righteous availeth much but the prayer of the righteous always is Thy will be done. "But says one, "Paul positively says, "God has set the working of miracles in Church ;" 1, Cor, 12 : 28. Read the 18 verse of this chapter, "God has set every one as it pleased him. " This shows plainly that God is the author of all the different gifts, by the same Spirit. I am sorry to hear the blame of the Church for weakness in some organ of the body, both spiritually as well as temporal. His ways above our ways. My advice to my brethren and sisters is : try and do the will of the Father, revealed through Christ his Son, and not concern ourselves about God's work. God is a Spirit, and he will do the spiritual part of the work. If we do our part all will be right. May God grant us clear conceptions of his holy and divine will; and hearts of submission to his will. Thy will be done, O God. Amen.

Answer to J G Neher.

It seems a little strange for a brother to ask for an explanation of a portion of scripture that is so plain as John 13. 14. But most likely the person asking for explanation is a stranger, who does not know that the Brethren practice feet-washing, and yet seeing the command so explicitly in the said verse, thinks it ought to be observed. If so, he could have seen what the Brethren practice on the last page of the " Companion." Should the querist be a brother, I can not see what his object is in asking for explanation of what reads so plainly as this, If I then, your Lord and Master, have washeb your ; ye also ought to wash one another's feet ." Surely, there is nothing mysterious about this verse. Then in Hebrews 10 :25, the saints are admonished not to forsake the assembling of themselves together, but to exhort, to encourage one another, to provoke unto love and good works ; "and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching." What day ? It would seem as if the apostle considered the day of gospel light only dawning at that time , because no reference is made to any other day. So long as the gospel light does not shine in us, we are not of the day, but of the night, and may see the day only dawning or approaching. And this seems to have been the case in a great measure with those Hebrews who still had the vail untaken away from their hearts, in the reading of the law and the prophets. Therefore the apost exhorts them to assemble themselves, and so much the more as the Daystar shines into their hearts, and they see the day approach.

Importance of Time.

O time, how few thy value weight!
How few will estimate a day;
Days, months, and years are rolling on,
The soul neglected and undone.

Time past, and time to come are not;
Time present is our only lot.
O God, henceforth our hearts incline
To seek no other love than thine.

In faithful cares and empty joys,
Our life its precious hours destroys;
While death stands watching at our side,
Eager to stop the living tide.

At every motion of our breath,
Life trembles on the brink of death;
A taper flame that upward turns,
While downward to the dust it burns.

Thine earthly sabbaths Lord we love,
But there's a nobler rest above;
To that our longing souls aspire,
With cheerful hope and strong desire.

Life is the time to serve the Lord
The time't insure the great reward;
And while the lamp holds out to burn,
The vilest sinner may return.

When faith is strong, and conscience clear,
And words of peace the spirit cheer;
And vision'd glory's drawing nigh,
'Tis joy, 'tis triumph then to die.

For nobler cares, for joys sublime,
He fashioned all the son's of time;
Then let us ev'ry day give heed
That we his servants' be indeed.

How to Improve our Talents.

I have long since felt like writing something for the Companion, but refrained from doing so up to this writing. I have now resolved to make the effort, although I feel my inability as much as ever to write any thing that will or may appear edifying to the public. I believe it is the duty of every brother and sister, whom the Lord has endowed with a talent, to make use of every available opportunity to improve the same. The talents spoken of by the Savior, in the parable, I understand to represent the mind, or intellect, which every rational man or woman is in possession of. But our Creator, in his infinite wisdom, has seen fit to distribute differently among his creatures.

Some are endowed apparently with faculties far superior to others; their memory seems to be much stronger, the faculty of reasoning much more powerful, and they seem to be able to comprehend anything more easily than others; and accordingly as they are in possession of these natural intellectual gifts. They may wield a greater or less influence for good or evil.

But the fact that we are in possession of but one or two talents, does not appear to make us any the less responsible beings as is very plain from the tenor of the parable. If he who had received the one talent only, had been faithful in discharging his duty to the best of his ability; if he had made use of his faculties by a faithful performance of the labors enjoined upon him by his employer, his reward would no doubt have been just as great in proportion to the amount of labor performed as that of those to whom were given a greater number.

Now then, the inquiry may arise in the minds of some, how shall we go about this work, to improve our talents?

Can we do it by cultivating our minds — by storing them with knowledge of the sciences and literature of all kinds? In answer, no. I claim that we may possess a knowledge of all the sciences, and yet, may in the end, be found guilty of having buried our talent, not having exercised it in the cause of our Master. But to the contrary, have been laboring in the cause of the evil one, perhaps, and thus, when the Lord will come to reckon with us. He will give us our portion with the "wicked and slothful servant, who took his talent and buried it." O Brethren! let us be careful, then, that we improve our talents by applying our hearts unto wisdom. David says, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom."

Paul counted all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Jesus Christ. Therefore if we have ever so much worldly wisdom, and do not apply it to the service of God it will benefit us no more in the end than if we had not had it, but will only tend to our destruction. L. B. Berkley.

Resurrection of Christ.

This doctrine is of fundamental importance in Christianity, both historically and doctrinally, as a fact indisputably proved. It was the crowning demonstration of the truth of all that Christ claimed, 1st Col, 15: 14, 15. He had repeatedly foretold it; and his enemies were careful to ascertain that he was actually dead, and to guard his tomb for additional security; yet he rose from the dead on the third day, and appeared on several different occasions to numerous witnesses, convincing even those who were the most doubtful; and after forty days ascended to heaven from the Mount of Olives. To this important fact the apostles gave great prominence in their preaching; Acts 1: 22; 2: 24—32; 4: 33; 10: 40, 41. In its relation to Christian doctrine, it stands as a rock of strength, assuring us of God's acceptance of the sacrifice; of Christ's triumphant accomplishment of the work of redemption, and of his raising to immortal life the souls and bodies of his people. He was buried under the load of our offences; but he rose again almighty to justify and save us. His dying proved the greatness of his love; his rising again, shows that his love had secured its object, resurrection of the dead. It is the peculiar glory of the New Testament that it makes a full revelation of this great doctrine, which was questioned or derided by the wisest of the heathen; Acts 17: 32. In the Old Testament we also find, though less frequently, the doctrine asserted. For example, Isaiah 26: 19; Daniel 12: 2. When our Savior, appeared in Judea, the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead was received as a principal article a religion by the whole Jewish nation, except the Sadducee's. Ther denyal of it rested on the assumption, that at death the whole man, soul and body, perishes. "The Saducees say that there is no resurrection, neither angels nor spirit;" Acts 23: 8. Hence the refutation of the unscriptural assuption was a complete overthrow of the ground on which their denial of a future resurrection rested: for if the soul can survive the body; it is plain that God can give it another body. In this way our Lord effectually refuted them." Matt. 22: 31, 32; Mark 12: 26, 27. The resurrection of Christ is everywhere represented in the New Testament as a pledge, for the resurrection of the just, who are united to him by faith; Cor. 15: 49. In virtue of their union with him as their Head, he is "the resurrection and the life;" John 11: 25. They sleep in Jesus, and shall be brought in glory with Him; Thess. 4: 13, 17, 5: 10. Their "life is hid with Christ in God;" Col. 3: 3.

Blasphemy against the Holy Ghost.

There has been, of late, considerable written concerning the Blasphemy against the Holy Ghost. Now I do not profess to know more about the subject than any one else; but I do think I can clearly see, for myself, what that sin is which is unto death, for which John does not say we shall pray. I believe this subject deeply concerns the brotherhood, and I think it ought to be handled until there does some light appear that can be sustained by the word of God. I do not believe that, to commit one sin alone would be blaspheming against the Holy Ghost; neither do I believe, that the Savior meant the blasphemy of those wicked Jews which gave rise to the expression, to be the blasphemy that has no forgiveness in this world nor in the world to come; for he certainly asked God to forgive them, when he was hanging on the cross, for the reason that they did not know what they were doing. But still, there might have been some among them that number, who, after they did know what they had done, repented and embraced the doctrine of the apostles, but did not continue in the grace of God. I do not think to blaspheme against the Holy Ghost can be as easily committed as some suppose; and certainly it would be folly in any one to commit suicide on account of it. I do not think we could easily blaspheme against the Holy Ghost before we are partakers of it, or else those wicked Jews that blasphemed against the Son of God with all manner of blasphemy, saying, "He casts out devils by the prince of devils," and charged him with many other falsehoods, would be sinful enough to be that sin; at least, it came as near it as any sin can. But the Savior says, "All manner of sins and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men, but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall never be forgiven." But if, after any one has escaped the pollution of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, he is again entangled therein, and overcome, the latter end is worse with him than before he was converted. Such had better not known the way of righteousness, than, after they have known it, to turn from the holy commandments. Therefore, we who are of the household of faith, ought to be very careful. When members commit some great crime—fornication, or drunkenness, which is just as bad, or any other black sin—so that it is necessary for the welfare of the church, to sever them from the body of Christ, —we ought to be very careful. If, after they have had sufficient time to consider the matter, we should see to it; and if we discover the least sign of repentance, they ought to be encouraged to come to a full repentance, and let such know, that he that restores such a sinner from the error of his ways, has saved a soul from that sin which is unto death, and hide a multitude of sins, which otherwise could not be hid. But if there are some that will still persist in the error of there ways, and will not assemble with the Brethren, "as the manner of some is," and will still continue to sin wilfully after they had received the knowledge of the truth, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and the powers of the world to come, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and will go so far as to count the blood of the covenant an unholy thing, and have done despite unto the spirit of grace, such I believe commit that unpardonable sin, for which John does not say we shall pray; it would be a useless prayer. Such have no forgiveness in this world, neither in the world to come.

Perhaps some might think, there certainly are none, in this, our day, that are guilty of such blasphemy. We do not know for that. The apostle Peter, in his second epistle, second chapter, and Jude, have given us an account of such characters being in the church in their days; and we do not know but what there may be some such in the church at this time; but, we hope, none that are in full fellowship with the Brethren.

Perhaps it might be necessary to say a few words in regard to nothing being impossible with God. We know that with him all things are possible; but that does not say that he will forgive such; for Jesus himself says, that such blasphemy has no forgiveness in this world, neither in the world to come. Now we all know what forgiveness means, if I owe any one anything, and there is something that prompted me to go and ask him to forgive me, and he accepts of my prayer, and releases me, then, certainly, I am forgiven and free; but if there is nothing to urge me to ask for forgiveness, then I cannot expect to be released, and will have to pay all, even to the very last mite, before I can be free. I suppose the best of us will need much forgiveness, when we are brought up to give an account of our stewardship; but we certainly can expect to be forgiven, if we live up to our calling to the best of our ability. The Savior says, "All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men;" but that does not prove that he will forgive them, unless they repent and accept of the terms he has proposed for such a release. I suppose there are not many in this our day, that would, like those wicked Jews, blaspheme against the Son of God. Such an act would be considered a sin of the deepest dye. But, at the same time, there are some that are doing no better, by denying his word, esteeming it of no account, saying, "It is not essential." This is just as bad as when the Jews said, "He hath a devil. Why hear ye him?" only it is covered over a little with the cloak of religion. But this class of sinners have this advantage over the other class: they can repent and obtain forgiveness, if they will, but the other class is past redeeming—they are "twice dead, plucked up by the roots." But if those who blaspheme against the Son of God, or his word, which is the same, do not repent of their blasphemy, they need not expect to fare any better at the day of Judgment than those that blaspheme against the Holy Ghost.

The Lost Power. No. 7.—To Elder Henry Koontz.

"And as the devil has power to work miracles in the latter days, if preaching has the power, how would you distinguish which is worked by the power of God or by the devil?"—ELDER HENRY KOONTZ.

I cannot see how you, my dear brother, have gotten yourself into a strait in regard to distinguishing miracles performed by devils and those performed by the Lord, through his followers. The comparison before Pharoah, when the Lord's miracle swallowed up the devils, left no doubt as to the source of Aaron's serpent.

You may say, that was under the Mosaic Dispensation. It was; but I think we can find one under Christ's Dispensation. We read in the Acts of the Apostles, Chapter 19, that Paul had been preaching at Ephesus for three months, and accomplished nothing. Indeed, the people were hardened, and believed not, but spoke evil of that way before the people. Paul then separated from his persecutors, and proclaimed the gospel, daily, in a school-house, God working special miracles by his hands, by causing handkerchiefs and aprons, which he sent to the sick, to restore them to health; and to cause the evil spirits to come out of those possessed with devils. But it seems that the devil thought he would try his power, in comparison with the Lord's. "Certain vagabond Jews, exorcists, took upon them to call over them which had evil spirits, the name of the Lord Jesus, saying, we adjure you by Jesus whom Paul preacheth. And the evil spirit answered and said, Jesus I know, and Paul I know; but who are ye? And the man in whom the evil spirit was, leaped upon them, (there being six men,) and overcame them, and prevailed against them, so that they (the six men) fled out of the house naked and wounded." What was the result? Fear fell on all, both Jew and Creek, at Ephesus; and the name of the Lord Jesus was magnified; and many that believed brought their books of curious Arts together, and burnt them before the people. Here we see that it required a more tangible and convincing agency than preaching to turn the people of that day from the error of their way. Has the Lord, or the people, changed since that period? Has God instituted a new mode of saving men from perdition? and if so, where do we learn that new way? Paul says: "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." It will not do for us to preach that the Word of Inspiration, as recorded in God's Holy Word, suited the Apostolic age of the world; but is not applicable to us now. If we do, we not only set aside the mediatorial death of Jesus Christ in our behalf, but also lose the glorious, simple, free and efficient means of reclaiming man from his fallen estate

As a member of the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ, I not only believe that it is imperatively necessary to comply with every known command of the blessed Redeemer; but to believe in and confidently expect every gift and blessing to follow a compliance with that command, which he promised should follow, as a token or sign that we are the children of the Most High I do not believe that the devil's power is equal to, much less superior to, the power of God; for Jesus said, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." He then directed his Apostles to "teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." As in the two tests above, the power of God was manifested to the discomfiture of the devil and his satellites: so will it be, in every instance, in which the two powers are brought into juxtaposition. To admit that the devil has the power, in the latter days, to do miracles, which God cannot confound and bring to naught by genuine miracles, so that the people can easily discern the genuine from the bogus, is to admit that the power of the devil is superior, and more powerful than God.

And now, in conclusion, my beloved brother, I know not that I shall be spared to live long in this world; for I feel this frail body fast giving way; yet I pray to the Lord, if not in my day, to hasten the time when the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ may convince an unbelieving world that the Lord Omnipotent reigneth on the earth, and his promises are yea and Amen to those that believe.

In love I would ask you a question. Can I be saved if I do not believe the whole Word of God?

Where Art Thou?

"The Lord God called unto Adam and said unto him, Where art thou?" Gen. 3: 9.

This language, although spoken nearly six thousand years ago, soon after man was placed in the Garden of Eden; although addressed, at that time, to Adam, yet it is the voice of inspiration. When God placed man in the Garden of Eden, he placed him there in a state of trial or probation. God gave him a law whereby he was to be governed, and attached a penalty thereto. The penalty for a violation of that law was, "The day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Before man fell from his primitive state he seems to have loved and not feared God, but after the fall he lost that love, and fear took its place in his breast.

And why was he afraid? Because he knew he had violated God's law. So it is to-day with all of Adam's posterity. When they move on in the proper sphere where God intended, conscience applauds and peace resides within the breast. Conscious of their own integrity, and secure in the Divine favor, the soul enjoys a calmness not to be described.

But how is it with the violators of God's Law? Is it not with them as it was with Adam? Are they not afraid when they hear God's voice? When the hour of calamity arrives, when sickness seizes and death approaches, then their conscience constrains them to listen to her accusations. "There is no peace to the wicked." Then they would have the rocks and the mountains to fall upon them and hide them from the presence of a just and a holy God, whom they fear to meet, for they know they have violated God's law, and are under the sentence of death. For we are taught that we are all naturally under condemnation; for death passed upon all men in consequence of Adam's transgression.

But is there no way of escape? Yes, thanks be to God, a way of escape has been provided. God has given his Son Jesus Christ to die, that we might live — live eternally. Through obedience to and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, we may inherit eternal life, and obtain a seat at his right hand.

Now, "Where art thou?" We are all somewhere; either in the narrow way to life, or the broad road that leads to destruction. Matth. 7: 13; for there are but two ways spoken of in the scriptures of divine truth; the one leadeth to everlasting life, the other to everlasting shame and contempt. "Where art thou?" in "The King's highway of holiness," following Jesus in all his appointed ways? Say, dear reader, hast thou followed the Savior down into the liquid stream and been buried with him in baptism? Dost thou follow Jesus in the beautiful and impressive ordinance of feet-washing? Or art thou in the broad road that leads to eternal death? Remember the Savior said, "He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad."

Brethren and sisters, where are we? Are we progressing or retrograding? One or the other we are surely doing; for we are so constituted that we cannot stand still.

Another thought, where will we be in eternity? That vast, unbounded, incomprehensible space! A drop of water is part of the ocean; a grain of sand a part of the earth, yet many millions of years is, comparatively, no part of eternity. Endless duration! and yet our souls will live on during this unending period. O dear reader, where will our souls be? in happiness or torment? Let us all ponder well those solemn and momentous questions; and let us be admonished by Israel's great leader, Moses, "Only take heed to thyself; keep thy soul diligently;" and may the Holy Spirit apply those truths to our hearts, is my prayer.

Baptism for the Dead.

In Vol. 8, No. 2, is desired an explanation of the words, "Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead if the dead rise not at all? Why are they then baptized for the dead?"

In the first place, we learn that the church at Corinth was very much out of order at the time the apostle Paul wrote his epistles to them; and he reproved them sharply for their contentions and inimical ideas concerning the resurrection of the dead, the Lord's supper, &c.

In order to get at the true meaning of the words at issue, we must consider their strange ideas concerning the resurrection of the dead. We learn that there were some that did not believe that Christ was raised from the dead: "Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead? But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then Christ is not risen. And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain." But now we are baptized into the living fountain head—the Lord Jesus Christ: "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized unto his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we should also walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." Rom. 6: 3–5. We understand that Christ was manifested in the flesh for our example—was baptized for our example; and he was crucified, buried, resurrected, and he ascended to the right hand of the Majesty on High. This seemed to be a mystery to some of the Corinthian brethren; and they did not all believe in their resurrected Lord. Well may the apostle cry, "For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised; and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins." "But now is Christ risen from the dead and became the first fruits of them that slept.

And in this most holy name the Corinthians, as well as we, were baptized. I understand that the apostle is in this way reproving them for their unbelief: "Why are ye Corinthians baptized in such a dead name? If so be that the dead rise not; if Jesus be not raised from the dead; if he (Christ) lies dormant in the tomb, why be baptized for the dead? Useless, indeed, if the dead rise not at all, our preaching is vain, and your faith is also vain. But now is he risen, and become our guide and our criterion, and in this name we are initiated into his church militant." If this could have been impressed upon the minds of the Corinthians, Paul would have had no occasion to reprove them. The words, "Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead?" &c., would have been of no avail; but with the church, or at least part of the church, at Corinth it was not so. These are my views of the subject at issue; but if not correct, I am always willing to exchange error for truth.

Death.

Death is a solemn thought; but when we are prepared to die, it is not so lamentable. Now it is our privilege to be ready for the solemn change, which must take place soon, and very soon, too; for our lives are as a vapor, that appeareth for a short time and then is no more. We are told that "man, that is born of a woman, is of a few days and full of trouble." Job 14: 1. We are certain of only one thing, and that is death. Now it is in our place to prepare for the solemn change. The way is opened; Christ, the Son of God, first trod the way. If we follow Christ in the way he laid down for us to travel in, we need not fear death; for we are told, "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." But on the other hand, it is a fearful thought to die out of Christ. What, to be banished from the presence of God and his holy angels for ever and ever! The thought is enough to make the hardest heart quake.

My dear readers, if you yet live in your sins, why live another day in such open rebellion against your God, who gave his only Son to bleed and die for you on Calvary's cross? Sinner, stop and think seriously for one moment, before you go farther; for the next step may land you into oblivian. Think of the anguish the soul must have that is lost. But you will have none to blame but yourself. We are free moral agents; serve whom you will.

Sinners, turn, w hy will you die?
God your Savior asks you 'Why?'
God, who did your spirit give,
Died himself that you might live."

Lawful Interest.

Brother E. J. Meyers' answer does not meet Brother Blough's query. The question was not whether right or wrong to take more than lawful interest from rich brethren. Brother M., as well as we all, knows it would be an impossibility to compel a rich brother to pay more than lawful interest; therefore they are out of the question. By all means let us keep the query in view as it was stated, and let us discuss it in brotherly love.

If a rich brother sees fit to borrow money to speculate with, and then agrees to pay more than lawful interest, he knows he is able to make more out of it than it costs him, and we cannot see very much wrong in charging him what he of his own free will agrees to pay. On the other hand, the poor are often compelled to pay more than lawful interest. Here, then, is where our rich brethren should be careful. This no doubt gave Brother Blough cause to ask the query. But brother Meyers wants me to give the law, meaning of course, that I tell what lawful interest is. I answer, whatever the law makes it. If I should give a note to Brother M. for a certain sum, payable one year after date with interest, the law of our State would give him the right to charge six per cent.; not eight, ten, or twelve per cent., or even more and worse yet. So we see what lawful interest is; and I say, any brother who compels a poor brother to pay more than this does wrong. But brother M., and those who concur with him, may say, The law says what two parties agree on is lawful. Whether it is or not, what has this to do with the question before us? All we want to know is this, what lawful interest is, and whether rich brethren are doing right by compelling poor brethren to pay more than lawful interest? Is brother M. ready to say that all is right that is agreed upon, if the one party can do nothing else than agree to the demands of the other party?

Again, I would like brother Meyers to answer the following questions: Why is it, that the most sincere, most pious brethren in our State, are opposed to taking more than six per cent., while on the other hand, we have those who seem to build all their hope of eternal salvation on outward appearances, such as a certain shape and pattern of dress, cut of hair, or just because they are called brother, who take all they can, lawful or unlawful? These are they who give the world reason to say these Dunkards are the stingiest of people, they cannot get enough. These are they who give the world cause to blackmail the holy church of Jesus, and at the same time bring blush to the cheek of his followers. More than this, by even putting treasure upon treasure, they are never able to give a few cents of it, when called upon, for the furthering of Christ's Kingdom. But should this all be so? By no means. Brethren should show that they belong to Christ's Kingdom. The compelling of poor people to pay more than lawful interest originated with ungodly men, and let them alone have the benefit here in this world, and finally in the world to come. Let us all be sincere in the matter, and if all would be, they would not want more than what is lawful, particularly not compel poor members to pay more than what is lawful. The riches of this world will be left behind, when we take farewell from this world; and whose will it be which has been heaped up unlawfully? Will the rich brother feel more happy on the great day, when he remembers that he compelled his poor brother to pay more to him than what was lawful? Does not the Master say, whatever you have done to one of these, you have done unto me? Will your reward be greater, think ye? Consider all well, and then do what you believe to be in accordance with God's will, as made known by Jesus.

No Pardon Doctrine.

In the 9th number of the COMPANION, vol. 8, there appears an article over the signature of D. Klepper, which purports to be a "repudiation of the no pardon doctrine." The writer goes on to sharply criticize an article written by me, and published in the G. V., Dec. No. Now I have nothing to say in reply to the brother's criticism, but leave the matter entirely to the judgment of the reader. All that I would say, is, that so far as my own personal feelings are concerned, I sincerely wish myself mistaken and him correct; but notwithstanding my own personal feelings on the subject, when I look at the facts in the case, and view them by the light of revelation, they force conviction upon my mind to the contrary. But however this may be, we all know that "facts are stubborn things." My object in writing this, is, to notice one single sentence in the brother's article,—the one with which he closes. I am forced to do this, I confess, with some reluctance, as I very much dislike to speak to my own praise, or to recite my virtues. If all the brethren and sisters who read the COMPANION were intimately acquainted with me, or my character, since I became a member of the church, I would be spared this trouble; but as many of them have no knowledge of me, only what they may have gained through our periodicals, or otherwise, I am forced, in justice to myself and to them, to fully exonerate myself from the odium which might attach to me through that vile contumely (in the shape of an insinuation), in the paragraph referred to. The writer says, he wonders how I can reconcile my views with my own case, as though I were guilty of some great crime. I am therefore forced to give the following brief history of my character since I have been a member of the church, and I most sincerely hope that the brethren and sisters will exercise charity, and not think me vain, or guilty of egotism, in making this statement. As many of the brethren and sisters already know, from what I have written in a former treatise on my early training, I was not reared and educated among the Brethren, but under opposite influence. Neither had I any kinsfolks, or relatives, in the church. Myself and wife joined the church in the summer of 1862. Early in the spring of 1863. I was called to the ministy in the first degree. In February, 1864, I was advanced to the second degree; in which capacity I served, as God gave me ability, until 1868, when I was ordained an Elder in the church.

I do not give these facts boastingly, far from it, because they only humble me the more as I feel the heavier responsibilities laid upon me; but give them for the consideration of those brethren and sisters abroad, who do not know my standing at home in my own country. Since I have been a member of the church I have never had a difficulty in it; neither have I been charged with one single immoral act, either in the church or in the country in which I live.

In conclusion I would only say, that all this is not from any merit in me; "for in me, that is in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing; for to will is present with me, but how to perform that which is good I find not." But "by the grace of God I am what I am."

JESSE CROSSWHITE.

LITTLE SINS.—A little hole in a ship sinks it; a small breach in a seabank carries all away before it; a little stab in the heart kills a man; and a little sin, as it is often improperly called, tends to his final destruction. A little drop has been many a man's ruin—every drunkard began with a single glass.

This corner had better be filled with short items from correspondents.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Grumblers.

Grumbling is a disease which, when once caught, is seldom got rid of again; a habit that sticks like a burr, and grows like a mushroom; a Nessus garment which, when put on, cannot be taken off and hung up in the wardrobe at pleasure, but which clings to the devoted flesh with immovable tenacity, and resists every effort from the outside to tear it away. Nothing but the most resolute will can conquer that habit when formed, but resolute will, though strong enough when dealing with other folks' weaknesses and tempers, is wonderfully incapable when acting as a curb on one's self. And when the question comes of doing anything disagreeable to flesh and blood for the good of one's soul, resolution is apt to melt away from marble to mud.

Yet if the grumbler only knew how disagreeable he makes himself! It is to be presumed that we all like to be loved, save those few eccentric people who boast of their ability to live without the sympathy or charity of their kind. But, taking mankind en masse, and making no abnormal exceptions, we all desire the esteem and good feeling of our fellows, and most of us condescend even to underhand meanness to insure consideration. But the grumbler, without intending it, makes all who come in contact with him so uncomfortable that they only long to escape him; and he wearies even the stoutest affection by time. So far from seeing that any cloud of his has a silver lining, to his way of looking at things the brightest silver throws a sable shadow; and instead of the longest lane having a turning at last, the shortest that he may have to traverse is as if endless. Whatever good things he has are overtopped by their corresponding disadvantages, and his lean kine eat up his fat ones at a sitting. If you praise his children, he points out to you their faults; if you tell him his garden is plenty, he laments the trouble and expense of keeping it up; if you envy him the sunny aspect of his flower-clad house, he counts up to you the cost of the faded carpets and faded curtains which a southern aspect involves, and sighs over earwigs in his tea and greenfly on his roses. Whatever you see in his surroundings to admire or approve, he is sure to expose to you the defects; and if he has to choose between admiring a flower and lamenting a weed, the weed will come in for the lamentation and the flower will go unregarded.

Every man who is fond of preaching economy to his wife should ask himself how often he practices that self-denial, in little personal expenditures, which he is constantly recommending to her.

Chloroform.

Chloroform, the most important of all anæsthetics, was discovered first by M. Soubeiran, in 1831; then by Baron Justus von Liebeg; and its chemical and physiological properties were more fully investigated by Dumas in 1835. It is formed from chlorine acting on marsh gas, and is prepared on the large scale by distilling together bleaching powder (chloride of lime) containing a little quicklime to render it alkaline, water, and spirits of wine, or wood spirit; the distilled liquor is then shaken with several successive portions of distilled water, to free it from soluble impurities, agitated with its own weight of pure oil vitriol, and lastly distilled from a mixture of chloride of calcium and quicklime, which removes every trace of water and acid, and renders it much more permanent and safe to use than if these impurities were allowed to remain. Chloroform is also the best known solvent for camphor, resins, sealing wax and gutta percha; it also dissolves the vegetable alkaloids, strychnia, quinia, etc., in large proportions and is very useful as a local anæsthetic in allaying the pain of toothache; as a solvent it will remove greasy spots from fabrics of all kinds, but its chief use is as an anæsthetic, of which kind of medicinal agents it is the type. There are several other volatile bodies which possess similar proprieties, but none, so far as has been discovered as yet, produce the total unconsciousness and muscular relaxation that follow the inhalation of chloroform.

Enemies.

They who are very successful in business, who achieve greatness, notoriety in any pursuit, must expect to make enemies. So prone to petty jealousy and sordid envy is poor human nature, that whoever becomes distinguished is sure to be a mark for the malicious spite of those who, not deserving success themselves, are envious of the merited triumph of the more worthy. Moreover, the opposition which originates in such despicable motives is sure to be of the most unscrupulous character; hesitating at no iniquity, descending to the shabbiest littleness. Opposition, if it be honest and manly, is not in itself undesirable. The competitor in life's struggles who is of true mettle deprecates not opposition of an honorable character, but rather rejoices in it. It is only injustice or meanness which he deprecates; and it is this which the successful must meet, proportioned in bitterness; oftentimes to the measure of success which excites it.

—Love is faith, is charity, is gentleness; all truth, all peace, all beauty and all virtue, dwell in this one short word; the rule of life, the precept of our death.

Cure for a Felon.

We warn our readers against paying attention to any newspaper paragraphs in reference to health and disease, unless the name of the writer is attached. There is a scientific cure for a felon always safe, always efficacious, relieving instantaneous and always: get a physician to plunge his lancet down to the bone. A natural felon is a born thief; a physiological felon is a boil betwen the bone and the sinew, or "fascia" as the doctors love to talk. When a boil is under the skin only, it is painful enough until it "breaks," that is until the skin divides or burst and lets out the yellow matter; but when it is remembered that the sinew is as much tougher than the skin as a beef hide is tougher than paper, it is easily to see that the pain of a boil, under the sinew, is more terrible than one under the thin skin, and that it must take longer to make its way through the fascia than through the skin; hence, instead of passing many sleepless nights and agonizing days in waiting for the matter to be absorbed, or make its way through the tough tendon, the educated surgeon advises the use of the lancet as above: for the cure is just as certain, and the relief from the agonizing pain is just as instantaneous, as in the case of the extraction of an aching tooth. The cause of a felon is usually a bruise of the finger heavy enough to reach down to the bone and to inflame it.—Hall's Journal of Health.

The Ruts of Life.

Get out of them, if you wish to live long. Men and women must have recreation, must have amusement, must have diversion. It is wholesome for the mind to break away from its daily vocation or employment every night. The man who goes from his counting-house or his workshop at the close of the day, and does not leave it behind him, but sits at the family table in moodiness, brooding over past occurrences, weighing probabilities, laying plans, and when the meal is over, thinking, thinking, thinking by the hour, and goes to bed to toss and tumble about, cannot live long; the brain or heart must fail.

Air Your Beds.

Some advocates for excessive neatness have the beds made up immediately they are vacated. It is not healthy. They need to air for a couple of hours. Open the windows as wide as possible, and set open the door also. Unless there is a thorough draught, there is no true ventilation of a sleeping-room. The only exception to this rule is during high winds, when the door cannot safely remain open and in very wet and foggy weather.

Baptism for the Remission of Sins.

The question is often asked: Is baptism for the remission of sins? We answer emphatically, YES IT IS; and he who teaches otherwise, be he foe, friend, or brother, either does not understand the teachings of God's word, or willingly and knowingly perverts them. Our position is put in strong terms; because it is clearly taught in the New Testament Scriptures, and because the importance of the question demands us to assume a decided stand. In discussing this question due regard shall be had for the feelings of those who assume a negative attitude; but it must be understood that we shall not depart from, nor in anywise pervert, the plain teachings of the sacred oracles, to tickle the ears, please the fancy, or spare the feelings of any. It is not proposed to consume time in discussing the question as to whether or not the baptism of John was Christian baptism; neither is it our purpose to bring into this investigation the action in the administration of the sacred rite. Divesting the question of such extraneous issues, it shall be viewed in its own merits. Of course no one will undestand us to assume that baptism alone, baptism without regard to its necessary prerequisites and accompaniments, will assure to any one the forgiveness of sins. This is not our position. Neither should any one understand us as saying, that there is any sin-atoning virtue, either in the baptismal water or in the actual performance of the ordinance, that can cleanse from sin. This is not assumed. Our position is, that Christian baptism—baptism performed according to Christ's appointment and in its proper relation to other religious duties—is for the remission of sins. To guard still farther against any misapprehension, we here state, that, by the phrase, "for the remission of sins," we mean in order to, and not because of, the remission of sins. This position shall be proven, 1st by reference to Christ's promise in connection with baptism; and 2nd by an examination of the teaching of the apostles and inspired writers. Then we shall follow with some incidental remarks showing the reasonableness of this position and its harmony with other scriptural doctrines.

I. Christ's promise in connection with the appointment of the ordinance of baptism, teaches that baptism is for the remission of sins.

Just before the ascension of Christ, having completed his work of redemption and instructed his disciples in the things pertaining to his kingdom, he commanded them to teach all nations—to preach the glad tidings to every creature. He commanded them also to baptize such as would receive the glorious news, "in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." And in connection with this appointment he said: "He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved." Here is a promise of salvation to those who believe and are baptized. It is not to bepresumed however, that the promise has reference to eternal salvation. The plain meaning of this text is, that he who believes the glad tidings of salvation through the Lord Jesus Christ, and is baptized according to his appointment, shall be saved from his past sins; or in other words, his sins shall be forgiven. That the promise of salvation has reference to deliverance from sin cannot and will not be denied by any; and to apply it to eternal salvation would imply the forgiveness of past sins,—all we claim for it,—and much more. But few give it this extended meaning, and we are certain this view cannot be harmonized with other portions of scripture; for, as God's promises are faithful, if this promise has reference to eternal salvation, then, those who do believe and are baptized are eternally saved—cannot possibly be lost: then, too, all the admonitions to faithful perseverance are unnecessary and useless, and all the warnings to the saints are gratuitous if not worse. But to make it mean anything less than the forgiveness of past sins, would be about the same as saying that it means nothing at all, and would be charging our blessed Lord with talking nonsense in his departing moments.

Our explanation is this: Christ, the founder and head of his church, who has all power in heaven and earth given into his hands, and through whom alone we can be saved, has the prerogative to appoint the conditions upon which he will pardon sinners and save his people. In the rightful exercise of his peculiar privilege, he commanded his disciples to proclaim the glad tidings of salvation to a sinful world, offering them deliverance from past sins, from the doleful consequences of sin—all on conditions clearly specified in his revealed will. Then he announced the conditions upon which sinners can be pardoned and become his people. He that believeth and is pardoned shall be baptized? Nay, verily, the Lord did not say so, although many (and to our shame be it said, even some Brethren) try to make us believe that this was his meaning. Hear what the Lord did say: 'He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved:' he that reposes confidence in me and receives the good news proclaimed, and is baptized as I have appointed, shall be pardoned—cleansed from past sins by my blood. 'But he that believeth not shall be damned;' for if he has no confidence in the message brought him, he will not comply with the conditions I appoint, and, consequently, he will remain unforgiven and must be lost." This is the plain meaning of the text, and is the only disposition of it that will not conflict with other plainly revealed facts; therefore, baptism is "for the remission of sins."

II. The apostles of Christ taught that baptism is "for the remission of sins."

We need not search long for scripture te support this proposition. Peter, on the memorable day of Pentecost, in answer to the question, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" said, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins." Acts 2: 38. This text proves our position in full, that baptism, performed according to Christ's appointment, and in its proper relation to other duties, is "for the remission of sins." To deny this, is to spit into the apostle's face and to insult divine inspiration. Having shown that baptism is "for the remission of sins," it now only remains to be decided whether this phrase means in order to the remission of sins, or whether it means something else. To decide this, we will consider:

1. The question asked, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Those who asked this qustion were under peculiar circumstances, and they attached to it a definite meaning. There was an important query in their hearts, which they expressed in the question, "What shall we do?" It is necessary for us, in order to comprehend fully the meaning of Peter's answer, to acquaint ourselves with their condition—with the workings of their hearts; for it is evident that the answer was adapted to the question, or it was no answer at all. To enable us to enter into their feelings and to discover what they really wished to know, it is neccessary to acquaint ourselves with their circumstances at the time of asking. Let it be remembered, then, that these were Jews, from all nations, Acts 2: 5, 22-26; that they were abiding at Jerusalem, no doubt to keep the feasts, ver. 5; that fifty-one days prior to this time they had said to Pilate, in reference to Jesus of Nazareth, "Crucify him, crucify him!" and, "His blood be on us, and on our children." This they said and prayed for because, they thought he was an impostor; and according to their law, it would have been no sin, but a virtue, to put to death a mere man who had the audacity to claim that he was the Son of God. But now a great change had taken place. They had crucified Jesus but he had risen from the dead, ascended to heaven, baptized his disciples with the Holy Spirit, and had enabled them to speak in various tongues the wonderful works of God. These men, thus equipped, preached, "in demonstratin of the Spirit and of power," that Jesus of Nazareth, whom they with wicked hands had crucified and slain, was indeed the Lord, that he had arisen from the dead, that he had ascended to the right hand of God, that being there exalted, he had wrought the wonders which they there witnessed—all of which Peter demonstrated so clearly by reference to their own prophecies, that they could no longer resist the conclusion that Jesus of Nazareth was the Christ—the long expected Messiah—the King of Israel. With this conviction sealed upon their hearts, their consciences goaded them unsparingly. They felt that the blood of him who was to be called, "Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting, The Prince of Peace," was resting upon their guilty heads, instead of the blood of a vile deceiver They were well assured that the ponderous weight of God's sore displeasure was resting upon them on account of their wickedness. And as they saw their sinful state, and felt the burthen of their sins—their crimes, they came with feelings of deep penitence, mingled with despair and hope, saying, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Oh, we are wretched, miserable sinners! What shall we do to be at peace with God? What shall we do to be relieved of this heavy load—that our guilt may be removed, our crimes pardoned, our sins forgiven?"

This will give us a faint intimation of their feelings, and an understanding of the query in their hearts; and it also furnishes us with a correct key to Peter's answer. Did they feel their sinfulness? Peter allowed them to retain their compunctions, and intimated nothing to the contrary. Did they desire to know what they should do that their sins might be forgiven? Peter answered, "Repent (of your sins) and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ (according to Christ's appointment), for the remission of sins," (that your sins may be forgiven you).

That this is the meaning of Peter's answer, is confirmed by the following consideration: He admonished them to "repent and be baptized" for some purpose. Whatever is said of repentance is said of baptism. There is no rule of interpretation by which this conclusion can be evaded; neither can the most artful sophistry weaken it: nothing but stubborn infidelity will deny it. Were they exhorted to repent because they were forgiven? Away with such ridiculous nosense! They were certainly to repent in order that their sins mitght be forgiven, for there is no pardon without repentance, and there is no room for repentance where there is nothing to be pardoned; but they were admonished to be baptized for the same purpose that they were to repent; it is therefore as clear as the mid-day sun in a cloudyless sky, that they were to be baptized according to Christ's appointment, for the remission of sins—in order that their sins might be forgiven.

Accident.

Brother Cornelius Berkley met with an accident on last Tuesday evening, 23rd inst., which might have proved fatal. He was leading a colt to water which became unruly, and in his efforts to restrain it, he was thrown on the rough ground, cutting a gash in his head, doing him severe injury. He is doing as well as could be expected under the circumstances, and hopes are entertained for his speedy recovery.

Death of Sister Douglass.

We have intelligence of the death of sister Susannah Douglass, of Philadelphia. "A shock of corn fully ripe."

Hope the brethren in Philadelphia will see to it that we get the obituary notice for publication.

Conrad Peysel, or Conrad Beissel.

Comparing "Information Wanted," page 235, with "Feet Washing," page 228 of present volume of C. F. C., and with these articles the article "Dunkers" in "History of all Religions," by Samuel M. Schmucker, page 143, I come to the conclusion that the two names heading this article are only different spellings of the name of the same person. We meet with the same difficulties here that D. J. Miller, of Buchannon, W. Va., refers to. I went to the trouble of writing to the Parmelee Publishing House, of Cincinnati, Ohio, last winter (they wanted me to act as agent to introduce said work) on the subject. I offered to procure them a truthful history of our denomination, if they would substitute it for said article on Dunkers. Their reply was substantially this: "We do not own the plates of said book. Please write to the Philadelphia House, (Quaker City Publishing House, Nos. 217 and 219 Quince street), perhaps you can make arrangements for the change." I did not feel at liberty to take the responsibility of addressing said house; but I still feel that something should be done towards correcting the misrepresentation. I believe if the history of our church was more generally and truthfully known, much of the prejudice now existing against us would vanish.

By the way, I think I have seen the real successors of Conrad Beissel practice the simple mode of feet-washing. Do not the Seventh-day Baptists uniformly practice that mode? So much for the article from the pen of our "antiquarian" above referred to.

Report of the Brethren's Sunday School, Dale City, Pa., for the Term Ending April 14th.

Sometime last November, the brethren and sisters at Dale City and in the vicinity, feeling its want and being willing to enter into the work, organized a Sabbath-school at this place, by electing the following officers:

H. R. Holsinger, Superintendent.
J. W. Beer, Assistant Sup't.
M. D. Miller, Secretary.
S. D. Livengood, Librarian.
C. G. Masters, Assistant Librarian.
Daniel Buechly, Treasurer.

The school was kept open the whole winter, with a reasonable attendance and interest for a beginning. The average attendance of officers and teachers was 8; and of scholars, 34. There was also a fair attendance of spectators. The first term of our school closed on the 14th of April, when the following officers were elected for the second term:

J. W. Beer, Superintendent.
J. B. Sell, Assistant Sup't.
U. M. Beachly, Secretary.
C. G. Masters, Librarian.
M. D. Miller, Ass't. Librarian.
Daniel Buechly, Treasurer.

Our library is new, as yet consisting of 80 volumes selected with care. The prospect has been very flattering the last few sabbath's; and we fondly hope it may advance in interest and usefulness.

M. D. Miller, Secretary.

Away from Home.

Dear Brethren and Sisters, and all in whose hands this, perchance, may fall, as I am at this time somewhat afflicted in my right leg from having a tumor removed therefrom by surgical operation, in order to pass away time I thought I would drop a few lines for the COMPANION, and for a basis of my remarks I have selected the above language, "Away from Home." Those words were made use of in my presence under the following circumstances: One of my co-laboring brethren in the bonds of the gospel, and I, were journeying together some time ago on a mission of love, trying, in our weakness, to deal out a few crumbs of the broken bread of life unto the dying sons and daughters of Adam's race.

On having an appointment one evening at candle lighting for the worship of God, after services were closed and the congregation dismissed, a young, intelligent looking man came pressing through the crowd to where we were, extending the hand of fellowship to the brother at my side, saying, "How do you do, Mr. Driver?" Brother Driver replied, "You have the advantage of me to-night." "I am away from home," was the reply from the young man. Then, asking Brother Driver whether he did not remember of seeing him at a certain place in Highland county, West Virginia, some six months prior to that time; repeating again, "I am from home," then giving his name. Then Brother Driver recognized him and made reply, "Truly, you are away from home, and I am very sorry that I meet with you in such a situation as you seem to be, for, notwithstanding the intelligent appearance of the young man, he more than manifested to all present that he had been tampering with that mighty evil which is so prevalent in our country, namely, the use of ardent spirits; for the strong odor that came from his mouth gave evidence to the fact that such was the case.

The next day Brother Driver informed me that he had a slight personal acquaintance with the young man, and that he was taken quite on surprise upon the occasion, for he would not have suspected the young man ever to have been caught in such a situation, from the fact that, in his home community, he was regarded as a whole-soul, straight-forward man; and besides that, he professes to be a follower of the meek and lowly Redeemer, and was considered a consistent member and a devoted Christian in the society to which he belongs, having a devoted wife and several interesting and intelligent children in the home circle. But alas! away from home, the hour of temptation had come now, among strangers, and instead of maintaining the integrity of his soul, as a Christian, in disseminating the light of Christian conduct, he mingled with those who think it not manly if they do not take their comrades by the hand and lead them up to the bar of some drinking saloon to partake of some of the poisonous dregs which not only ruin the system and general health of men, but also ruin the poor soul for time and vast eternity.

"Away from home!" Unfortunate young man! Now away from home, where the eyes of a devoted wife and dear children could not penetrate to behold the actions of a dear husband and affectionate father; now being swerved from his proper course, waving to and fro upon the highway, making himself a gazing stock to all that passed by. My dear young men, yes, old ones too, remember being away from home. Yes, you may be away from home, where you may think there is no one to take knowledge of your conduct. This may be so as far as man is concerned, but remember, there is one whose eye never sleeps, who takes knowledge of all your actions, and surveys all your inward thoughts. If you have respect for yourself at home, in the home community and home circle, so that you walk in the fear and reverence of God, God forbid that it should be otherwise with you when you are away from home, among strangers.

My dear young Christian friends, wherever you be, remember that, while we are passing through this world of sin we meet with many trials and temptations. The devil, with the thousands of his agents, is lurking around, laying plans to defeat Christians on their way to Zion. Beware! if he can only get your safeguard from your side his work will soon be completed. Remember, that the wise man, Solomon, had said, "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging; and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise." Prov. 20: 1. Again, "Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth its color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright, at the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder." Prov. 23: 31, 32. The Apostle Paul tells us that no drunkard shall ever inherit the Kingdom of God. Then beware of the contaminating evil which is so prevalent in our country, and all other evils in connection with it; such as hatred, emulations, strife, seditions, lying, covetousness, idolatry, and a host of such like things which I might mention. But I forbear, remembering that while we subject ourselves to those things we are away from home, that is, we are away from God, away from Jesus, away from all the precious promises of God's Word and Will.

LEVI GARBER.

Mt. Sidney, Va.

Triangular.

Bro. Holsinger:—Since you have removed your printing establishment out of the Middle Penna. District the work of the District will doubtless properly fall to others, so far as pertains to printing. So you see, that we have good causes to congratulate the churches of this District upon their good fortune, of not being left without a church organ within their territory, centrally located at that. If ever I take a notion to start an opposition office to you, I guess I will start up in Western Illinois or Iowa, and call it "The Ancient Order Expounder of the Fraternity of the Brethren." Would'nt that be an expressive and significant title, with which, for instance, to catch the subscriptions of all the ancient minded members of the—"Fraternity!" For instance again: If you can't see the "Fraternity" look in the Hymn Book.

We convened a special council of the church on the 29th ult., to take into consideration, amongst other matters of more local import, the question of taking the sense of the church on the subject of feet-washing, and of electing delegates to our approaching District Council. So the question was argued by some who are not yet willing to endure an Absolute Episcopacy in the church, whether our delegates should be instructed by the direct voice of the church, on the question of single or double mode, and then, upon reading and re-reading the minutes it was discovered that, according to the plan laid down by the Annual Council, there had been no liberty granted to the churches to carry the question up to the District Council, neither to instruct the District Delegates on the subject; but that it was simply and exclusively a call of a Council of Elders, on the day preceding the regular Anual Council, to "finally dispose" of the question. And so the matter was allowed to rest until such time as the Elder should signify his intention, to attend the Episcopal Council at Wooster Summit, Ohio. If that Council shall have more regard for the will and custom of its members—and cannot divest itself of the pernicious influence and force of habit—than it will have regard for the unity of the church, then, and only then, will it assume a decisive attitude on the question. "Revolutions never go backward" in religious or political convulsions. We therefore caution the Elders of the church not to take the decision of this question upon themselves; because they would, in so doing, become liable to the grave charge of an unwarranted usurpation of power.

I wrote to you a good while ago that brother Samuel Longenecker had a distressing attack of western fever, but that he would recover. He did partially recover, but he never got like he was before; he would get one relapse after another until finally the Iowa fever took him off. He is gone; but we trust our loss will be his temporal gain. The whole community deplored his departure, which took place on the morning of the 3rd of April. We commend him to the brethren in Iowa and admonish them to take good care of him; he is weak in body but strong in spirit; his love for the church exceeds the love of a sister. He takes with him a precious family—a wife and two daughters—all in communion and fellowship with the church. He contemplated, when he left this place, to spend some time in Adams Co. Pa., to attend our District Council, and start westward in time for the Annual Council in Ohio. Thence to Illinois, and reach Panora, Iowa, about the first of June. May the God of all comfort and peace be and abide with him and his, is our prayer; Amen.

P. H. Beaver.

Brother Henry: As I did not get to meeting to-day, I felt a little lonesome, and I thought I would try to write you a few lines. We do not get to meeting much in winter, having a good distance to go; but when we do not get to meeting we read our Bible and Companion. I will here say that we had tried to do without the Companion, not feeling able to pay for it; but we could not; and now since you are sending it to us, we are made glad. Next to our Bible we do not feel like doing without the Companion; for through it we hear from the Brotherhood, and receive many good admonitions from our dear sisters, and also from our brethren. Dear sisters, you who have talents, go on; write much for our instruction and encouragement. Our brethren's good words are received with gratitude, of course, but still it is natural to have a little preference for our own sex.

Now, dear brethren and sisters, it is in and through the mercy of God that we all enjoy the privilege to-day that we do; therefore let us pray for each other, help to bear one another's burdens; keep united in one great body with Christ for our head; for united we stand; divided we fall. "Watch and pray;" for the time will soon, yes, very soon come, that we must lay down this house of clay, and put on immortality and dwell with spirits. Oh! that we may all dwell with the redeemed of God in his mansions above, where we can praise him in perfection, is the prayer of your unworthy sister.

Query.

There are four classes of professors, who hold different opinions respecting the punishment of the ungodly; first, they who believe in endless punishment, who believe that the ungodly will be cast into hell and remain there as long as God exists in heaven; second, the Restorationists, or those who claim that the wicked will be cast into fire after the resurrection and judgment, and remain there till the justice of God is satisfied; third, the Annihilationists, who claim that the wicked will be cast into hell and burnt up, or be put entirely out of existence; fourth, the Universalists, who claim there is no punishment after the resurrection—that their punishment is all in this world. Now will some one inform us which of the four opinions is nearest to reason and revalation?

Daniel Longenecker.

As a great many of our brethren preach that a man is a sinner by nature, is that according to the teaching of Christ and the apostles? There are some that understand it differently; consequently I much desire an explanation through the Companion by some one from the fact that we are to speak the same thing. Yours in the bonds of brotherly love.

Brethren Editors:—Having to lie over here 24 hours, I thought I would write you; but my frame of mind is not in its usual equilibrium, on account of having to stop so long. Nothing is more tiresome to me in the world than to have to wait on a train. Plenty of "sights," but I have no appetite for them. This being the starting point of the great U. P. R. R. people are brought together here from all points, except the West for the west; and such a bustle as there is when the transfer reaches the depot beggars description. People in traveling are very anxious to see their baggage well taken care of; but many are woefully mistaken in receiving it wholly undamaged, for the western hands on baggage trains have gotten themselves a name as the most noted rascals in baggage smashing in the world. But so it is; and all the recourse that passengers have, is to "grin and bear it," and the terrible spouters and roughs take delight in pestering tyroes in traveling; but up to this writing I have been even and a few points ahead of them, and will try and keep so.

I wrote you last from St. Joseph, Mo., intending to write again from Plattsburg, Mo.; but when I got there I could not find time, and in fact I could not write much from there anyhow, on account of making preparations to leave, visiting and traveling. I can't tell you much church news from there. The Brethren are generally zealous, with a few exceptions, and are doing a good work in preaching, visiting, &c. The greatest source of anxiety is the debt yet hanging over the church building; hope it may soon be liquidated.

I came from Plattsburg to Forest City, and stopped with the Brethren there over Sunday. On Saturday they had another choice for a speaker, the lot falling on the "right man," Joseph Glick, he being well qualified for the position, both temporally and spiritually. Right here I wish to make a remark in regard to ministerial support; that is, when a brother is called on to preach and his pecuniary circumstances are not the best, or even good, how can he be a "free man in Christ," when he knows that a family is dependent on him, and that, when he goes on a tour of preaching, he suffers loss by his work stopping. Whenever a minister is called on to travel, all his time that he loses, and expenses, should be paid by the congregation sending him or that sent for him. I know there are are many to jump at this and say, that we would, in this way, make merchandise of preaching, and would vehemently oppose it. To such I say, reserve your fire and apply it to yourselves, and see whether you would spend time, money and health for the cause; that will settle it. And farther, those that oppose paying even the expenses of the ministers, sit in their fine houses and sing "free salvation," and don't once think that the means in their power should be used to make it free. God has made them stewards of much property; and if they use it merely for selfish purposes, it will cause them to give an account in the reckoning day. Our church is far in the rear in the cause of missionary work; and the time is here that we must bestir ourselves. Books, pamphlets, tracts, &c., should be published in profusion; means to do so sent to publishing houses, and money in abundance collected in every church, and missionaries sent out in all directions. Each church should send one missionary at least, and make arrangements that he will not labor under pecuniary difficulties. Brethren, give this your attention now, and stop your talking, (I don't mean all, but only those that so much oppose the preacher), and not doing. Work to-day and all the time for the cause.

I passed a very pleasant visit with the Brethren of Holt; but on the 15th inst. bade them a long "good-bye." I was sorry to go, for many warm-hearted friends did I leave in Missouri; but my rambling mind said, "Go"; and now I am off and going thousands of miles from them; but if I meet them no more in Missouri, I hope to meet them beyond the river of death, and will, if faithful, be with them in eternity. May God's blessing be on all. Their kindness to me will always be remembered, and although far removed from them, they will not be forgotten by me. To brethren and friends a fond adieu.

I will write you from San Francisco.

Fraternally yours,
J. S. McFADDEN.

March 4th, of dropsy, in Fayette Co., W. Va., our much esteemed brother HENRY SANGER, aged 60 years. He was for many years a deacon in the church, and one that was much loved by the church, and by all that knew him. Truly the church, neighborhood, and family deeply feel their loss in the death of brother Sanger,. He moved from Rockingham Co., Va., to Highland Co., and from there to this Co. Advertising alone does not prove success. The thing which is advertised, must have intrinsic merit, or else large advertising will eventually do it more harm than good, advertise it thoroughly, and you will be sure to succeed; if it is poor, don't praise it, for people will soon discover you are lying.

Such is the policy of the Burlington Route that runs to three great regions in the West: 1st, To Omaha, connecting with the Pacific Roads. 2nd, To Lincoln the capital of Nebraska, and all that beautiful region south of the Platte, field with R. R. lands and homesteads. 3d, To St. Joseph, Kansas City and all Kansas points.

The roads are splendidly built, have the best bridges, finest cars, the Miller platform and coupler, and the safety air brake (to prevent the loss of life that is everywhere else happening); Pullman's sleepers, Pullman dining cars, large and powerful engines (to make quick time and good connections), and are in a word the best equipped roads in the West. So that if you desire to go safely, surely, quickly and comfortably to any point in Southern Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, or on the Pacific Roads, be sure that you go "By Way of Burlington."

THE
Christian Family Companion.

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

Our Common Destiny.

Tis well to pause, and ask ourselves the questi on, Why--
Why are we living? also, how expect to die?
Do we expect to live our three-score years and ten,
And not be called to answer how we spent our time?

Or if in youth, or middle life we're call'd away,
That we on that account will have no debt to pay?
Not so; 'tis not so much the length of time we live,
As how God's holy word and precepts we receive.

"Procrastination is the thief of time:" Of time?
'Tis true, quite true, if said in either prose or rhyme:
But yet, how many see we in our own fair land,
Cut down by death's relentless, strong, yea powerful hand.

The noble manly youth, so firm, so strong, and gay,
Often without a moment's precious time to pray,
Is snatched from earth, by some unknown, unseen event,
Not even time to say, "My Lord, I do repent."

The haughty beauty, and the humble, modest maid,
Both in a common, dark and silent grave are laid;
The rich, the poor, alike, prepared or unprepared,
Must haste away to get their portion or reward.

The little, playful child, so innocent and sweet,
Is taken from our arms.—Why should we mortals weep?—
Our hearts bereft, our heart-stones now more vacant are;
But angel bands are swelled—enlarged the holy choir.

'Tis strange, 'tis passing strange, that we, a mortal race,
Should ever look for happiness aside from grace;
Should court the favor and applause of dying men;
Labor for riches, toil for wealth or worldly fame.

If then it is the common lot of all to die,
Not knowing when, where, how, or even thinking why,
'Tis wisdom to prepare while yet favor'd in health.
The boon is free to all, in poverty or wealth.

Spring is Coming.

BY S. C. BASHOR.

Spring is coming; gentle birds in every grove I hear,
Chirping songs to gladden me—my drooping heart to cheer.
Would I were like them—so free from every wrong and care;
Lovely things 'mong the flow'rs! I wish that I were there.

Spring is coming; and the bees are busy on the wing;
Swiftly flying, sweetly humming songs they love to sing;
Hither, thither, without murmur, ever on they go.
Would that I were like the bee—no sorrow ever know.

"Spring is coming;" thus we hear the gladsome children say,
Longing for the blooming rose and flow'rs of early May;
"Then we'll gather in the garden ev'ry tint and hue, Forming richest boquets." Oh, I wish I were like you!

Spring is coming; beautiful and pleasant ev'rything I see;
All is cheerful, lovely, happy. Is there joy for me?
Would I were a child once more—had life to live again,
Better would I spend my days, and age were happy then.

Spring is coming; fairest season—pleasure's glorious king,
Rush we to thy banner now to taste thy sweets, O spring!
Let my sadness turn to joy 'mid charms that thou hast giv'n,
Foretaste rich of brighter bliss awaiting me in heav'n.

Spring is coming—spring in heaven—one eternal day—
Flowers ever richly blooming cannot fade away.
Oh! I wish that I were there, where winter cannot come,
Basking in the sunshine glory of my endless home.

How cold and dreary does life seem when we think of heaven—when we are conscious of that country so beautiful, whose gardens are decked with unfading flowers! Ah! when we think of that country, the heart grows sad with lingering here where the icy pangs of winter steal our joy, which at best is only a foretaste of that pleasure in heaven! This life can be compared to the four seasons: Spring, Summer, Autumn, and Winter. We commence with Spring. By and by Winter comes, which freezes all, sooner or later. But when the cold and dreary pest is over, beautiful Spring will usher in. But alas! for those who will prefer a climate where Spring never comes; where the icy bars of Winter will never be unbarred by the breeze of Spring, nor he icebergs be thawed by the rising sun. Come, sweet Spring, so long looked for by those of thy Creator's children whose sun will ere long rise with healing in his wings.

All can do Good.

Every one of us may, in some way or other, assist or snstruct some of his fellow creatures, for the best of the human race is poor and needy, and all have a mutual dependence on one another. There is no person that cannot do some good; and every one should diligently do all the good they can. It is by no means enough to be rightly disposed, to be serious and religious in our closets, we must be useful, and take care that as we all reap numberless benefits from society, society may be the better for every one of us.

It is a false and an indolent humility, that makes people sit still and do nothing, because they will not believe that they are capable of doing much, for every one can do something. Every person can set a good example, be it to many or to few. Every man and woman, can in some degree, encourage virtue and religion, and discountenance vice and folly. Every person has come one or other whom he can advise or instruct, or in some way help to guide through life. Those who are too poor to give alms, can yet give their time, their trouble, their assistance in preparing or forwarding the gifts to others; in considering and representing distressed cases to thop who can relieve them; in visiting and comforting the sick and afflicted.

Every one can offer up his prayers for those who need them, which, if they do not reverntly and sincerely, they will never be wanted in giving them every other assistance that it should please God to put in their power.

What is said of those that do good? "But love ye your enemies, and do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again; and your reward shall be great, and ye shall be the children of the Highest; for he is kind unto the unthankful and to the evil." Luke 6: 35.

Our days are swiftly moving;
The night of death draws nigh;
Then let us be improving
The moments as they fly
While yet the heart is beating,
While yet 'tis called "to-day,"
While time is swiftly fleeting,
O let us watch and pray.—The Young Web-foot.

The Beautiful Home.

There's a beautiful country of endless delight,
Beyond the dread waters of death's chilling tide,
Where rivers of pleasure unceasingly roll;
That beautiful country's the home of the soul.
Will you go? Will you go,
To dwell in that beautiful home of the soul?
Will you go? Will you go,
To dwell in that beautiful home of the soul?

In that beautiful place on the glorified shore,
Nor sin nor temptation molest any more;
Nor storms of affliction, nor clouds ever rise
To darken that beautiful home in the skies.
Will you go? Will you go,
To dwell in that beautiful home in the skies?

There parents and children again shall unite,
No more to be severed by death's gloomy night;
But, free from all sorrow, their spirits shall rest,
And never shall part from the home of the blest.
Will you go? Will you go,
To dwell in that beautful home of the blest?

There brethren and sisters together shall meet,
And dwell with bright angels in harmony sweet;
Through much tribulation they safely have come,
And now they are happy with Jesus at home.
Will you go? Will you go,
To join your dear friends in that beautiful home?

O, brethren and sisters, be faithful and true,
A crown of bright glory is waiting for you;
And soon the glad tidings from glory shall come;
The Saviour say smiling; "Dear children, come home."
We will go? We will go,
With Jesus to dwell in that beautiful home?

All glory to Jesus who died on the tree
To purchase salvation for you and for me
And promised, if faithful, with him we shall reign.
Hallelujah to Jesus forever! Amen!
Hallalujah! Hallalujah!
All glory to Jesus forever! Amen!
Hallalujah! Hallalujah!
All glory to Jesus forever! Amen!

The Seed of the Woman.

"And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed: it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." The above scripture, has received the attention of several brethren, who have given their views, but they did not give satisfaction to the querist, and, I have no doubt, many others, both brethren and sisters, and hence I will also try to give an answer. I do think the query is a fair one; neither do I see any catch in it. It is true, we may try to get a catch where there is none; hence the querist thinks the 15th verse of 3rd chapter of Gen. is so full, that some sprouted, and produced side issues. I will admit at least, that the subject under consideration had many issues, at least on the woman's side, else enmity would have ceased at once, but we see it perpetuated, to the bruising of the head of the serpent. Of course the enmity was put between the two seeds, and existed between the two who were in oppostion with each other, or in other words, were at war with each other. Hence all we need to look for in the subject before us is, to see what the contest in this war is. We will at once discover, that it is because of life and death, or a laws if you better understand it in that way. This law pronounced a cure upon the serpent, and sorrow, pain trouble and labor upon the seed of the woman or on man, until he would turn to dust from whence he was taken. Hence man had to be debarred from the tree of life, to which he could no more have right, until that law of enmity would be executed, which was to bruise the serpent's head. Hence I am willing to say to the querist, it was enmity that was to do it, which was no less than the curse which was to follow a broken law. How then was that law or course to be executed? and by whom? I answer by the seed of the woman, in Christ Jesus our Lord, in becoming a curse for us; thus taking the power from him who had the power of death, which is the devil, or serpent. This could not be done in any way but through this enmity, or law of suffering, which had to be fulfilled. Well may Paul reason and say, not those of the circumcision only, but those of us that were far off, are made nigh by the blood of Christ; "for he is our peace," "having abolished in his flesh the enmity," Paul saith, "even the law of commandments," "that was against us," "that he might reconcile both unto God in one body, by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby," so that by his Spirit we can have access unto the Father. „Glory to God in the highest for it. Amen. JOHN FORNEY SR.

Sunday Schools and the New Testament.

The New Testament in regard to Sunday Schools, is with them like it is with our common schools, spelling schools, singing schools, and writing schools, it simply says nothing at all about them. Such things as these schools, like printing the Bible, using the English language, and publishing Hymn Books, were not in use in the days of the apostles; hence they have left all these human inventions to the judgment of his holy people, and in harmony with his divine law, prohibit all things that are ultimately designed to oppose the pure teachings of the Bible. The world has invented many things: and among these many things, are a multitude of evil ones, while many are really useful, which it would be very unpleasant to do without. Our English language is a human invention and is not yet eight hundred years old. The printing process is another invention of the world of which the apostles were entirely ignorant, and still we would regret to part with either, though the scriptures say nothing about them.

Suppose we were called upon to lay aside our printed Bible, and resort to the custom of the apostles, and have none but those written by the hand of some one, in the Hebrew or Greek language. Perhaps it would be more unpleasant than many think it proper to imagine. When a new thing presents itself, after mature deliberation let the Church determine what is right and what is wrong. Certainly her wisdom can be relied upon, in the locality where she presides. Perhaps there are places where Sunday-Schools would prove detrimental; and if this be the wisdom of the church, let her act accordingly. Perhaps in course of time she may think it proper to change her mind as she notices a change in the locality that is the object of her deliberations. Another branch of the church may be blessed with more favorable circumstances, and at once act wisely in adopting Sunday-Schools. Suffice it to simply state, brethren who are opposed to these institutions should not attempt to defeat them, but take a good long pause, and carefully watch the result of them among the Brethren; then after mature deliberation, the church will be able to determine what is best designed to promote her welfare. Those brethren that firmly believe in them, should not abuse those that think it proper to do otherwise. It is often for their good, that they carefully examine the matter before acting. Labor with prayerful hearts in your little schools, giving all the glory to God, and ultimately many brethren will unite with you in all good labors. Let them be thoroughly convinced, and then their judgment will surely determine the proper course to persue.

Heavenly Home.

BY J. W. BEER

There's a home of joy, of bliss, high above,
Where the good and the pure meet again,
Where the saints redeemed forever shall love,
And with Jesus in glory shall reign;
Where no sickness, nor sorrow, nor pain shall molest,
Nor the tempter ever shall come;
But the glorified in rapture shall rest,
And enjoy all the sweets of that home.

In that home above, so bright and so fair,
Are the pleasures we here seek to gain;
And the Lord himself will welcome us there,
If we faithful to him do remain.
He has gone on before to the mansions of light,
To prepare for us while we roam;
But he soon will come with glory and might
And will bear us away to our home.

Travel on, dear pilgrims, never give way
For the promise is sure in the end;
March along in hope, while here you must stay,
And success shall your efforts attend.
Soon the toils and the sorrows of time shall be o'er,
And you'll rise to heaven's high dome,
There to feast your souls and rest evermore
In your own bright heavenly home.

Feet-washing and its Significance.

May I indite a few thoughts in reference to the observance of the ordinance of feet-washing? not a la mode, but in my opinion the more important question pertaining toward that appreciation of its spiritual significance that should characterize the appreciation of its subjects.

It may appear peculiar to many, and perhaps there are those among such persons, who may have witnessed the observance, who regard it as void of any spiritual significance, that may redound by its proper observance toward the renewing and sanctifying influences for which it was designed. But we are not of those who hold such an inestimable privilege and institution in such low estimate; but are proud to be classed among those who hold not the truth in righteousness, but are willing to observe, whether in word or epistle, fully conceiving that, if we know these things, happy are ye if ye do them. And why should we doubt that an example given to the apostles has been extended unto us? Has not our Savior given his apostles commission to go into all the world and preach his gospel, "teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you?" We accept faith, repentance, baptism, the Lord's supper, the communion, with the many other things included in his gospel. Is it meet for us to reject his wholesome and life-giving counsels in this significant demand made upon us, that was intended to constitute a portion, of that happiness in reservation for all those who obey him? And I would ask with all due deference toward those who dissent from us, whether we regard ourselves superior, in the divine sense, to those inspired mediums to whom it was necessary to give an example of that deep humility that was deemed requisite to characterize the lives of those so devoted to his holy service, himself personating the great exemplar. "Jesus knowing that the Father had given all things into his hands, that he came from God and went to God," our Lord seeing himself almost at the end of his race so far as his divinity, and humanity in its combination were to extend, and being about to leave his apostles, thought it necessary to leave them a lesson of humility, exemplified by himself, to deliver them from the bad influence of those false ideas which they formed concerning the nature of his kingdom, as on all occasions previous to this the disciples had shown too much attachment to worldly honors and dignities. Hence if this ambition had not been removed, the consequence of it would have been dreadful in the establishment of the religion of Christ. After his death it would have divided them, and perhaps infalibly dispersed them, It was necessary, therefore, to place a restraint upon this dangerous passion, and to confirm, by a remarkable example what he had so often told them before: that true greatness consisted in the depth of humility, and that those who were the willing servants of all, should be the highest in the estimation of God.

"He riseth from supper;" not from eating, as Bishop Pearce has wisely observed, but from his place at the table; for in all probability the dishes were not yet laid down, though the guest's were seated, according to the customs of the Jews and other Asiatics. This washing must have taken place before the supper.

"He laid aside his garments; and took a towel and girded himself," that he might appear in the character of a servant, and that he might be in readiness to dry their feet after he had washed them. He then poured water into a basin, &c. This was the office of the meanest slave. When David sent to Abigail to inform her that he had chosen her for a wife, she arose and said, "Behold, let thy handmaid be a servant to wash the feet of the servants of my Lord."

Some of the ancients have supposed that our Lord began with washing the feet of Judas, to inspire them with sentiments of compunction and remorse, to melt him down with kindness, to show his disciples how they should act toward their enemies; others have supposed that he washed the feet of Peter, James, and John only; but this is not likely, as there was a completeness in all he did.

As there is somewhat of significance in his approaching Peter, and the astonishment he expressed, we will endeavor to notice it "LORD, DOST THOU WASH MY FEET?" Every word here is exceedingly emphatic, and bears the impress of wonder and misapprehension on the part of Peter, who had, perhaps, often witnessed the great humility of his Lord and Master, but never saw his wonderful condescension, so peculiarly marked out as in this instance. "What I do, thou knowest not now:" as much as to imply, permit me to do it now, and I will shortly explain to you the nature and significance I attach to the action, and my motive for doing it. "Thou shalt know hereafter." We find all his counsels wisely administered at the proper time and place, as we find him explaining the whole to them as soon as he had finished the washing. See verses 12, 17. "Thou shalt never wash my feet." "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me:" thou canst not be my disciple unless I wash thee." Not that he meant to exclude him from his apostolic office, if he should persist only through the deepest reverence for his Master. Perhaps he could not brook the revolting idea of such wonderful condescension on his part, upon which we may justly predicate his refusal; but we must regard this act of his as emblematical of something spiritual, of something that concerned the salvation of Peter, and without which he could neither be an apostle nor be finally saved; therefore our Lord said, "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me." Hence we perceive in this, and in some of the other ordinances of our Lord, a mystical washing; or we might say, one of the means employed in the application of the blood of Christ to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. Hence John aptly remarks, "If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, (endeavoring to observe all of his precepts and examples, left upon record for our instruction in righteousness and true holiness, &c.,) the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." "And God hath both raised up the Lord, and will also raise up us by his own power." "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost; which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Savior.

It was the common custom of our Lord to pass from sensible and temporal things to those which were spiritual and eternal, and to take occasion from everything that presented itself, to instruct his disciples and raise their souls to God. If the discourse was of bread, water, leaven, father, mother, riches, &c., he immediately changed the literal sense, and under the figures and similitudes spoke of matters altogether spiritual and divine. Jesus Christ was a consummate philosopher. Every subject appears grand and noble in his hands; every design ordained by him but bears the impress of the divine image. By refering to the 24th verse of the 12th chapter of John, we find himself comparing himself to a grain of wheat: his death to a grain sown and decomposed in the ground; his resurrection, to the blade which springs up from the dead grain, which grain thus dying brings forth an abundance of fruit. Hence we infer from his word, that, "though he was a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered," even unto the death of the cross. Although co-existant and co-eternal with the Father, yet he bowed in holy submission to his divine will. "Believe that I am the in Father, and the Father in me; or else believe me for the very works sake. But that ye may know that I love the Father, and as the Father gave me command, even so I do. As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you; continue ye in my love. If ye love me and keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love, even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love."

"Know ye what I have done unto you? He had told Peter, in the presence of all the rest, what was the intent and meaning of this washing; and now he is about to fulfil his promise. Hence we must infer that it is more likely he gives a command here, than that he asks a question, as he knew they did not comprehend his design. "Ye call me Master and Lord; and ye say well, for so I am." If you accede to this important truth, that I am your Lord and Master, and seeing that I have washed your feet, "Ye also ought to wash one another's feet;" that is, ye should be ready, after my example, to condescend to all the weakness of your brethren, to be willing to do the meanest office for them, and to prefer the least of them in honor to yourselves. The servant is not grater than his Lord." Christ has ennobled the acts of humility by practicing them himself. Hence we infer, that the true glory of a Christian consists in being in his measure as humble as his Lord.

He now addresses them in language very expressive, and easy of comprehension: "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." All true happiness consists in the knowledge of God and in obedience to him. A man is not happy because he knows much, but because he receives much of the Divine nature, and in all his conduct conforms to the Divine will. Sacred knowledge, and devotedness to God, are the means by which a man can arrive to that perfection to fit him for heaven and that glorious immortality where he shall bask forever in the sunlight of God's countenance.

Then, my dear brethren and sisters, it behooves us that we hold fast to the profession of our faith without wavering unto the end; believing that whatsoever he has promised he is also able to perform. And when it is our province engage in this especial service, may we always pray the Lord to sanctify it toward the spiritual design for which it was intended; not being ashamed of any portion of his precious gospel, which emanates from him as the power of God unto salvation to all who believe, and hold not the truth in unrighteousness. In this institution the Brother of high degree and low degree (so called) are brought down upon a common level; and if there be any among us who have cultivated a higher tone of feeling than others, we must, in this observance, sacrifice it upon the altar of Christ's humiliation. May the Lord sanctify these imperfect reflections upon the character of this holy observance, toward that instruction in righteousness and true holiness without which no one can see him as he is, and be made like unto his glorious image; and while he permits us to grow in day's and in years, may he help us to grow in grace and in the knowledge of his truth, continually endeavoring to consecrate our lives more fully to his holy service, is the prayer of your unworthy young brother,

Non-resistance.

This doctrine is hard to understand. The Christian religion, or religion of Jesus, differs from all other religions in the world. In the Jewish religion there was given a privilege to hate your enemies, to use the sword, to return evil for evil; but Jesus said, "Resist not evil." The apostle Paul said, "Recompense to no man evil for evil;" 1st Pet. 3: 9. Jesus said to Peter, "Put up thy sword again into his place; for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword. John did not make use of his sword, and Peter was commanded to put his up into the sheath. The Christians sword is in its sheath, and should remain there. But who, then, shall rule the ungodly world? We answer, the same characters that ruled the ungodly before Christ's peaceable kingdom was established on the earth. Before Christ made his appearance, there were two classes of people, namely, the moral people of God, and the ungodly; but since the Christian dispensation, there are three classes:

first, the ungodly; second, the moralist; third, the Christian. Now the moralist stands between the ungodly and the Christian. Having the sword, the moralist protects the good and punishes the evil doer. The moralist is God's minister; therefore is subject to the higher power; he is the Christian's protector, and a punisher of the evil doer; he deals according to the law of Moses, "Eye for eye and tooth for tooth;" or, in other words, he returns evil for evil. Therefore do good, do right, and he will protect you. Be subject to the higher powers so long as their moral laws do not conflict with the gospel of Christ: when they conflict, we should obey God rather than man; but as long as their law is, "Thou shalt not steal; thou shalt not bear false witness," &c., we should not only obey him because he bears the sword, but for conscience sake. No matter whether he be a Jew or a Gentile, if he carries out the moral law; be subject to the higher power, whether he be a Cæsar or some other king. "Render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things that are God's. And when the moralist desires to come into the peaceful kingdom of God, let him lay down the sword, and come into Christ's kingdom, and pray with the disciples of Christ, saying, "Thy kingdom come," till all the kingdom's of the world, become the kingdom of God, and his Christ,—till all shall know him from the least to the greatest; and the knowledge of the Lord cover the earth, as the waters cover the sea; and the lion and the lamb shall lie down together, and men shall beat their swords into plowshears, and teach war no more; when Jesus, the Prince of Peace, shall reign wherever the sun doth his successive journeys run. And his kingdom shall stretch forth from shore to shore, till moon shall wax and wane no more.

Popeism.

We were at the funeral of a child not long ago. The preacher read the text 2 Kings 4: 18—24:

"And when the child was grown, it fell on a day, that he went out to his father to the reapers. And he said unto his father, My head, my head! And he said to a lad, carry him to his mother. And when he had taken him, and brought him to his mother, he sat on her knees till noon, and then died. And she went up, and laid him on the bed of the man of God, and shut the door upon him, and went out. And she called unto her husband and said, Send me, I pray thee, one of the young men, and one of the asses, that I may run to the man of God, and come again. And he said, Wherefore wilt thou go to him to-day? it is neither New moon nor Sabbath. And she said, It shall be well. Then she saddled an ass, and said to her servant, Drive, and go forward; slack not thy riding for me, except I bid thee."

This was a funeral text for a child, to a large concourse of people, and suitable on the occasion. But the speaker at the end of his discourse said, that he had visited the afflicted family a few days before, and had sprinkled the dying child, and initiated it into the church militant; and he, S——h said, the child was unconscious, and was crying at the same time; for it breathed its last directly afterward. He might as well have sprinkled the cooking-stove in the house, and called it serving the Lord. If that is not Popeism we have none in the world. We say that they have no Bible precept for sprinkling to be Christian baptism. They have it from the old Romish church handed to them by tradition. In vain do they teach for doctrine the commandments of men. The Savior said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for such is the kingdom of God;" and he embraced them, and blest them. We deny that he sprinkled them; nor is it said between the lids of the Bible that Christ commanded it. But men do that which is not of faith. Those who reject the gospel, reject the Savior. The greater their light, if they do not improve it, the greater will be their guilt, and the more dreadful their condemnation

Non-professors of Religion not Eligible to office.

We hear talk, and read of a resolution, of which the above heading is the substance. That honest officers are needed, I admit; but, that none but professors of religion are fitted to hold office under the general government, I will not admit. There are men who do not profess religion, that are as conscientious in regard to their honesty as religious men can be, and, fully as well fitted to hold the nation's offices. To make them ineligible, would not be rendering unto Cæsar what is due unto Cæsar. No, it would be robbing him of his dues, and proving ourselves dishonest. Our God being honest, he renders even unto Satan that which is due unto him. Then let us use men the same way. But this using them dishonestly is not the worst that will be brought about by the proposed resolution.

Allowing that such a law be passed, how long will it take an office seeker to profess religion? One minute; then he is eligible to office. Wherein has the matter been bettered in regard to the office seeker and his honesty? He has joined the church for a cover to enable him to get the coveted office. Now what evidence have we that we be any the more honest? None.

That a man who desires an office for the purpose of stealing public money, or practice any other dishonesty, would connect himself with the church, no man will dare deny That he is none the better fitted for the office is equally sure, and easily understood by any one capable of reasoning on human nature.

Having shown that we will be none the better off after the passage of such a law, I will next proceed to show that religion will be irreparably injured thereby.

In the first place, all must admit that there are many dishonest persons who profess religion. Many persons object to joining Christ's Church for no other reason. They say, "We are as good as many who belong to church" These, then, are thus kept from saving grace. That such a law would make the class of dishonest persons much more numerous, I have already shown. And that this objection would be much more frequent needs no proof, as it is a self-evident fact. Non-professors would say, "Mr. A., our state treasurer, belongs to church, and has stolen thousands of dollars of public money. We don't belonig to church, neither have we stolen anything, which proves that we are better than he. Such objections would be given by honest men. They would stay out of church among honest men, because, all dishonest men would be professors, and it would be a disgrace to be among them. Who could plead against such objections. No one. Then what would become of the cause of Christ? It would be ignored. What would become of the church? It would be doomed to hell, because of its dishonesty. What would become of governmen? Satan would become chief ruler, and all would be preciptated into the lake that burneth with unquenchable fire forever and ever. This would constitute the grand terminus of church and government under the proposed law. That this resolution is not designed to bring about what it would seem to indicate, will be readily perceived by every intelligent mind. That the real design will be to overthrow the true religion, will be quite as apparent. How long has it been since the Roman Catholic tried to throw the Bible out of the public schools of Ohio? That was but a rasher beginng to ultimately reach the same end for which the proposed resolution is designed. It was the first step and easily defeated. The proposed law is the second, and may prove much harder to overthrow, but it certainly will be overthrown. That there are others yet to come I have no doubt, but what they are to be and how received, I will not conjecture. Let them come as they may, we, as an enlightened people, will certainly mantain our established superiority of legislating, and leave to our progenitors the best government on earth. JAMES A. GRILLS.

—One after another, the religious papers are giving their testimony against putting on black as a sign of mourning. The Pittsburg United Presbyterian says: "A family will shroud itself for years, as an expression of sorrow for one of its dead. While one may be in Heaven, rejoicing in joy unspeakable, while relatives on earth are moving about in heavy and sombre garments, making their faces as gloomy as they can. There is no fitness in the thing. It is often a mere mockery of sorrow." It also objects to the practice, on the ground that it is uncalled for expense to the

The Dying Infidel.

What shall I be? Where shall I go?
I'd give a thousand worlds to know.
Shall I exist? or shall I not?
Ceasing to be—I dread the thought—
Does death, in fact, destroy the whole,
And with the body kill the soul?
Reason! I choose thee for my guide.
I'll hear thy voice and none beside;
Come, now, decide the doubtful strife,
'Twixt endless sleep and endless life.
Some, who thy sole dominion own,
As Nature's brightest eldest son,
Say thou hast taught the soul will live,
And her account to God must give.
Others deny that this will be
And both for proof appeal to thee.
I feel, I know that I have sinned,
And conscience rages here within;
If there's a God—(I fear 'tis true)—
Does he the creature's conduct view?
And if the soul immortal prove,
Can sinners ever taste his love?
Will they have nothing then to fear,
Because he governs there and here?
If he is good will he destroy,
And banish every human joy?
Are parents hurried to the tomb
Merely to give successors room?
If he regards our action here,
Why not revenge the oppressed's tear?
And crush the cruel and unjust
With pride and malice in the dust?
These thoughts an anxious doubt create,
That this is not our final state.
If there's a God, then who can tell,
There may be heaven, there may be hell,
The Bible doctrine may be right—
If not I sink to endless night.
I hate that God which they declare,
His Holiness is too severe;
I hate his law which says I must
Be only like him, or be curs'd.
Once I could laugh at what I feel,
And scorn the thought of heaven and hell.
But reason shines as clear as day,
Altho' my outward man decay;
Yea, it may shine and never stop,
And misery fill my future cup.
Draw near, my friend, if friend indeed.
You will assist me now in need:
With you I spent the jovial day,
And cast the thought of death away;
I spurned at God, and Christ, and hell,
As names that priest and woman tell:
I gave the rein to sin and lust,
Which hastened my return to dust.
O, can you screen my soul from harm
Against the power of any arm?
Ah! wretches, stop—deceive no more.
I've heard all you can say before
I scorned the Christian and his God,
And trampled on the Savior's blood.
With him I now no part can claim,
For still I hate the very name.
Yet he must be more safe than I,
Better prepared to live or die;
If I were right, still he is well,
If he is right,—I sink to hell.

Heaven is my Home.

I have no resting place on earth,
On which to fix my love;
But oh! my heart is yearning for
The promised rest above.
'Tis true the earth is passing fair,
O'er which I sadly roam;
But yet it hath no charms for me.
For heaven is my home.

A pilgrim long I've wandered here,
But with a steadfast eye
I see a rest reserved for me
At God's right hand on high.
Then all the joys of earth in vain
Will tempt my feet to roam,
To seek a rest on earth below,
Since heaven is my home.

Oh! were this world as fair as when Primeval Eden smiled,
I would not, by its glowing charms,
Dwell here to be beguiled;
But I would seek a brighter world,
Where God has bid me come;
Then seek no more to bind me here.
For heaven is my home.

In Heaven is Rest.

BY FREDERIC R. MARVIN.

Beyond the fev'rish cares and strife,
And all the joys which make our life
In Heaven—is rest.
Beyond our fears—a galling chain,
And all our hopes, so false and vain;
Beyond what now we would conceal
From friends and foes—the wrongs we feel—
In Heaven—is rest.

The angel band, the happy throng,
Around the throne, with harp and song,
Are there at rest.
There wearied ones, their conflict o'er,
A rest enjoy unknown before;
And there shall we, our sorrows done,
Our battle fought, our victory won,
Forever rest.

Kind Words.

BY IDA M. FRANTZ.

How very few of us know the value of kind words, or even think of the happiness they bring to those around us. We are too heedless of the words we speak, too apt to forget, in the joys and cares of our own lives, that there are others near, weary and suffering, to whom our kindness, perhaps, may come as rays of Heaven's own sunlight, brightening and cheering into new life their worn out, suffering spirits.

We, who are young and thoughtless, just entering upon the realities of life, who have still around us the loving tones and soft smiles of friends to who the trials and weariness of our faith are unknown. However dear to us may be the gentle voices of love; and however we may cherish the blessings of home, yet we do not, cannot know the value of kind words. Those only who feel the need of kind words can know their inestimable worth. He who has wandered in foreign lands, far from his home and his friends; he who has been sick and lonely beneath a distant sky; these, seeing around them only strange tongues, can tell how more welcome would have been the speech of his own land, heard in the kind, familiar tones of old friendship.

"Kind words can never die." Though long years may have swept over the earth since the time when they were spoken; though the lips that gave them utterance may have long been hushed, and the heart from which they flowed, been long buried beneath the green turf; they are not lost; their memory still lives a cherished and blessed influence of the past. Kind words make happy homes.

Understanding.

If we have an understanding about a thing, and we are not able to prove it as true, we should not begin to speak about it, lest when the light shines more clear, we are put to shame in setting up an opinion as truth; for everything but truth is shaken when the true light, which is Christ, appeareth.

The words of the Psalmist, which are, "Those who obey the commandments of the Lord, will have a good understanding;" were of late impressed upon my mind. Understanding passeth away; and we are commanded to seek first after the things that are everlasting. But in the heart of the upright, a will is wrought to deny the creature, which always inclines to hold an imagination of knowing something; and thus, in an open show of it, a triumphing over it is given through Jesus Christ; then is nothing left but a familiarity with the Father; and a dependence upon his arm for help, so that we will no more "trust in ourselves, but in God." Unto such will the "Lord give grace and glory, and withold no good thing."

"Make it Right."

BY D. B. MENTZER.

While visiting my native home near W———in Pa., a short time ago, I took a walk down the wayside one day, and came to a smithshop where the smith, my friend G——— is still carrying on the trade. I stopped a while. He was preparing to put on some tire, and not having any help just then, I tried to "pull the bellows." Soon the tire was hot and he proceeded to "make the weld." After considerable blowing, and heating, and striking, and forging, and measuring, the weld was done. But on examination we found a crack just beside the weld. What now?

"Will it answer the purpose?" said I.

"It might do a while, but may soon break off," said he.

"Must you cut it again?" I asked.

"Yes, I must cut it, and weld a little piece of iron on beside. I must make it right," said he.

Here is a lesson from real life, for you my young readers—make it right. Whatever you do "make it right." There never was any thing gained by making your work less than right.

We sometimes hear the good old maxim repeated: "Whatever is worth doing at all is worth doing well." Our first attempts do not always prove successful, therefore,

"If at first you don't succeed,
Try, try again."

We often need to do our work over, and if our work is not right and "well done, we ought to do it over, and over again. But we live in an age of the world when and where the cries are "Forward," "Hurry" "Quick," "Rush along."

I would say in Longfellow's poetic language,

"Be not like dumb, driven cattle!
Be a hero in the strife."

He only is a true hero who, in everything he does, will make it right. They who do their work well, maintain a good name, and prosper, so that that their customers confide in them, because they know they "make it right" and satisfactory.

I trust the readers of the Pious Youth department are an army of workers and love to work, but let me give you three words of advice—Make it right. Do not forget it. May an invisible pen write it indelibly upon the tablets of your young hearts, that you may make it a principle of character always to "Do right, because it is right."

As you engage in the professions or trades of business, or whatever becomes your duty in life, let it be your earnest effort and proud delight to do and make it right.

Now let us carry the thought to our individuality. Every one of us, more or less, attracts the attention of those with whom he mingles in daily life. However little we attract, still we exert an influence proportionately upon others, and for "all these things God will surely bring us into judgment." Then how careful we ought to be that we exert a good influence, and in the impression we make that we "make it right."

KEEP HIM.—A Sunday-School gains much by keepnig a good Superintendent in his place aseries of years. Experience is of great service to any one who proffits by it. Teachers ought to know if their superintendent is a man who grows, or if he is only one of the men that grew, as Dr. Bushnell has put it so forcibly, in his comparing of some men to trees and others to flag-staffs. It is the tree, and not the flag-staff, which the Sunday-School should represent.

Justice consists in doing no injury to men; decency in giving them no offence.

Few can be asiduous without servility, and none can be servile without corruption.

The greatest men living may stand in need of the meanest, as much as the meanest of him.

Arrangements for Annual Meeting.

The following programme in reference to the arrangements for holding the coming Annual Meeting; was published in the Wooster Republican, from which we clip it for the information of those who are interested:

The annual meeting of the German Baptist Church, in the United States, will be held on the farm of Cyrus Hoover, near Smithville Station, Wayne county, Ohio, commencing May 20th, 1872.

The undersigned, having been duly appointed a Committee of Arrangements on Preaching and Publication, we will for the information and satisfaction of the public generally, publish the following programme:

1. This meeting has for its object the regulation of the business affairs of the church; it is, strictly speaking, a conference. The intention is to erect a mammoth tent 80 by 220 feet, in which to hold this council.

2. There will be no preaching at the tent unless otherwise arranged when the time comes, but as we expect a large number of delegates from the different States to arrive on Saturday, the 12th, we are making arrangements to supply all the available preaching places for six or eight miles around, on Sunday, the 19th, and those having charge of houses of worship in the surrounding country can have them supplied on that day by making timely application to either of us. The conference will probably last three or four days, and all the preaching places within reach can be supplied in the same way every evening during the conference.

3. Ample provision will be made by the church to board all the delegates and members, and we would gladly board all others gratis if time and room would admit it. There will, however, be several commodious boarding tents on the ground, where all the necessaries of life can be had at reasonable rates. The same rules will apply as regards horse feed.

4. No boarding tents or places of traffic of any kind allowed in the vicinity, unless by permission of J. B. Shoemaker or Cyrus Hoover, who are a committee duly appointed for that purpose. All spirituous liquors, ale, beer, cider, profane language, as well as all disorderly conduct, strictly forbidden.

Committee—G. Irvin, Golden Corners; J. B. Shoemaker, Smithville; P. J. Brown, Congress.

Plan for Holding our Annual Meetings.

At the request of some of our patrons we publish the plan for holding our Annual Meetings, adopted at Antietam, Franklin Co, Pa., in 1866. We take it from the Brethren's Encyclopedia, pp. 195—197.

INTRODUCORY REMARKS.

The authority for holding General Conference Meetings is founded on the 15th ch. of the Acts of the Apostles, and a strict compliance with the example therein is advisable. By reference to said scripture, we learn that the question in dispute, and upon which the disciples differed, was not referred to a general council until all efforts had failed to settle it in the church in which it originated. The following language occurs in the chapter above referred to: "When therefore Paul and Barnabas, and certain others of them, should go up to Jerusalem unto the apostles and elders about the question." Here sems to be authority to send questions upon which the brethren differ in their judgments to a General Council, and that the bishops ought to go, and also have certain others with them. It is further said: "And being brought on their way by the church they passed through Phœnice and Samaria, declaring the conversion of the Gentiles: and they caused great joy unto all the brethren." Here we see that those who were sent were brought on their way by the church. So should we do. That is, help such to go that we send. It is said further, that "the apostles and elders came together to consider this matter." Hence we see that the Council Meeting should be for conference only.

THE ANNUAL MEETING.

We recommend that the Annual Council be formed by the delegates sent by the District Meetings, and by all the ordained elders present; that the Meeting be held at the place designated by the Council the preceding year, to commence on the first Tuesday after Whitsunday, the previous Lord's day (Whitsunday) to be spent as it has hitherto been by the brethren, in worship at such places in the vicinity in which the meeting is to be held, and shall be desired, and as may be judged most profitable; that there be no public meeting for worship where the Council Meeting is held, though the meeting should be opened with devotional exercises, and the reading of the 15th ch. of Acts and likewise closed with devotional exercises; that the Meeting shall be held alternately in the East and in the West.

The church holding the meeting shall make arrangments to receive and entertain all the brethren and sisters privately. There shall be no boarding tent put up at the place of meeting to entertain and feed a mixed multitude as heretofore.

All churches shall have the privilege to call on the General Council Meeting for comittees to investigate grievances, and it shall be its duty to appoint committees as heretofore.

THE ORGANIZATION OF THE ANNUAL MEETING.

The bishop and elders of the church holding the Annual Meeting, shall select from among the bishops present the standing committee. Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, shall each be entitled to three, if present, and two, if present, from each of the remaining states in which churches are established, and whenever said states shall contain ten bishops each, they also shall be entitled to three. The standing committee shall choose its own officers, and these shall be a moderator, two clerks, and a door keeper. He shall not permit two brethren to speak at the same time, and he shall decide who is entitled to the floor. He shall also keep the speakers to the question, and declare the query passed, after general consent, by silence. It shall be the duty of the first clerk to keep a faithful record of all the queries and answers, and prepare them for publication. It shall be the duty of the second clerk to read distinctly all papers as often as requested. It shall be the duty of the door keeper to take charge of the room in which the committee meet for business, and shall allow no intrusion in time of session.

As soon as the standing committee has been named, they shall retire to a private room for organization, and the reception of the queries presented by the delegates from the District Meetings (or churches), after which all proper queries shall be read by the General Council Meeting for adoption or amendment, and sub-committees be dispensed with.

The proceedings of the Annual Meetings shall be published, and it is earnestly recommended that all the overseers of churches, whether ordained or not, have them faithfully read and observed in their respective charges. And if it be represented to the Annual Meeting, that this recommendation is disregarded, it shall be the duty of the standing committee to appoint faithful brethren, whose duty it shall be to visit said churches, and see that the Minutes are properly read and observed, and to set in order things that are lacking. The above is unanmously recommened to the Annual Meeting by the Committee.

Signed by the Committee. D. [illegible]. Sayler, Henry Koontz, of Md., [illegible]enj. Moom aw, of Va ; David Derk, of Tennessee ; John H. Umstad ; [illegible]ohn Wise, of Pa. ; H. D. This report being read before the [illegible]neral Council, was adopted by the lowing resolution :

Baptism for the Remission of Sins No. 2.

Next, in support of our position that baptism is for the remission of sins, we shall refer to the conversion of Saul of Tarsus, afterward, Paul the apostle to the Gentiles. This was an extraordinary conversion ; yet we claim that he was pardoned upon a compliance with the conditions appointed by Christ, the same as the Jews were on the day of Pentecost. Saul was also a Jew, of the sect known as Pharisees. He was a native of Tarsus, a city of Cilicia, but was brought up in Jerusalem after the perfect manner of the law of the fathers, a disciple of Gamaliel, a earned doctor of the law. Here he was instructed in Jewish lore, and in the literature of the times and place.

The first notice we have of Saul in the scriptures, is in Acts 7th chapter, 58th verse, where we learn that the witnesses who stoned Stephen laid their clothes at his feet. He was then called a young man ; but although he was young he was active, and gave his consent to this cruel deed. Saul did not stop with merely giving his assent to the persecution waged by others; but, in his zeal, he took a more active part, and even breathed out "threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord ;" and "he made havoc of the church, entering into every house and calling men and women, committed them to prison." He was not content with executing this work at home ; but when the disciples were scattered abroad, he obtained letters from the high priest to the synagogues at Damascus, that he might go thither to carry on his devastations. This work of havoc he carried forward with honesty of purpose, thinking that Jesus was an impostor, and feeling that he ought to labor to break down and root out the doctrine He had proclaimed An honest, zealous person will, to the extent of his ability, labor for the success of the cause he deems right. Such a man was Saul of Tarsus.

When Saul had received his letters of authority, he, accompanied by some of his zealous, Pharisaical brethren, started on his way to Damascus. At about mid-day, as they were nearing their destination, suddenly there shone a light about them above the brightness of the noon-day sun, and Saul fell to the ground ; and he heard a voice saying, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me ?" Saul recognized this as an exhibition of a higher power than that of man ; and he at once, in his confused state of mind, said, "Who art thou, Lord ?" He knew it was the Lord's working ; but he did not comprehend how he was persecuting the Lord, for he thought he was serving God in opposing what he thought to be a vile imposition. The same voice replied : "I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest." This was an irresistible argument. He saw his error. He was convinced that Jesus of Nazareth was the Lord, the expected Messiah, the long desired king of Israel. With these convictions sealed upon his heart he was astonished ; when he thought of his former career, of his sinful course, he was made to tremble ; and, retaining his honesty of purpose to battle for the right, he faced about at once, acknowledged Jesus as Lord, and inquired, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do ?" When he left Jerusalem, he thought Jesus, the Nazarene, was a deceiver, and that he "ought to do many things against this name ; but here he acknowledged him to be the Lord, and earnestly inquired after the will of the Lord concerning him. He felt that he had been fighting against God, and exposing himself to his wrath—that he was the chief of sinners, and needed pardon. Under these circumstances, weighed down with his burthen of sin, the all absorbing inquiry of his heart was, '"Lord, what wilt thou have me to do,' that this load of sin may be removed, that my conscience may be at rest in the comforting assurance that my sins are pardoned, and that I may find favor in the eyes of the Lord?" The Lord replied, "Arise and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must."

We must here pause to notice this answer to Saul's inquiry. The Lord had wrought a miracle to convince Saul of his error and sinfulness. This was effectually accomplished; and when this was done, the remission of his sins and his acceptance with God depended upon the conditions which the Lord had before committed to his witnesses. Saul wished to know what the Lord would have him do, that his sins might be forgiven, that he might meet God's approbation. The Lord told him where to go to learn his duty, saying, "And it shall be told thee what thou must do." Saul must go to Damascus to learn the conditions of pardon and acceptance with God, or he must remain in ignorance concerning the will of the Lord; and he was not only to learn what the Lord required of him, but he "MUST DO" his will, or remain unpardoned.

Saul arose, but saw no man; "but they led him by the hand, and brought him into Damascus. And he was three days without sight, and neither did eat nor drink." This time of blindness and abstinence was no do doubt passed in deep penitence, ardent prayer, and anxious waiting. At length the time arrived, and Ananias, the chosen vessel of the Lord for this work, stood before him; and putting his hands on him, said, "Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost. And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales." Saul could then see, and, no doubt, he blessed the Lord for it. He also had, in this miracle, a sure testimony that the Lord's promise was about to be fulfilled, and that Ananias was the Lord's messenger to teach him what he "MUST DO." In this he could rejoice, and he certainly did. But was he satisfied? No, not yet. Why not? Because the promise was, "It shall be told thee what thou must do; and he had not yet heard the terms of pardon and acceptance with God.

Ananias then added, "The God of our fathers hath chosen thee that thou shouldest know his will, and see that just One, and shouldest hear the voice of his mouth. For thou shalt be his witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard." All this was cheering—very consoling to Saul; but it did not yet satisfy his mind. He had sinned against God in persecuting that just One, and in making havoc of his church, and he had not yet received a message of pardon, nor the terms of forgiveness. For this he was waiting with the utmost anxiety of mind. He was, however; soon relieved; for Ananias told him what to do. Well, what did he tell him to do? Did he tell him to believe on the Lord Jesus? He did not; for this he did with all his heart from the time Jesus appeared to him in the way. Did he command him to report? No, not a word was said about repentance; this he had also done, as his conduct clearly proves. Did he say to him, Pray on, Brother Saul, and the Lord will graciously pardon? He said nothing about prayer. Saul had earnestly prayed and fasted for three days, and, no doubt, he was praying when Ananias came to him. Did he tell him to give up all for Jesus—to cast himself on Him entirely and he should be blessed? Folly to give such advice to one who had counted all things but loss that he might win Christ—who would neither eat, nor drink, nor cease from prayer until he should receive an answer to his question, and find, at least, the terms of peace and pardon. Well, then, if Saul had done all this; if he believed on the Lord Jesus with all his heart; if he had bemoaned his sinfulness and turned to the Lord; if he had devoutly prayed and fasted and was waiting for a message from the Lord, did not Ananias tell him the Lord had graciously pardoned his sins? Nothing of this kind was intimated: Ananias knew nothing about the nineteenth century system of regeneration; or, if he did, he neither taught nor practiced it. Hear him: "Now why tarriest thou? Arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." Acts 22: 16. Saul had done all he could; he was as fit a subject for Christian baptism as ever was baptized, and yet his sins were not pardoned; he must be baptized that his sins may be washed away.

It is not to be understood from the foregoing that water was to wash away Saul's sins, for the blood of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, cleanses from all sin; hence no sin is washed away by anything else. John 1: 7. Neither is baptism (although it is a washing of the body in pure water, Heb. 10: 22) intended to put away the filth of the flesh, 1 Pet. 3: 21. But it is the response of a good conscience toward God, and he who is baptized according to Christ's appointment, is saved according to his promise: the soul is washed, cleansed, purified from sin by the purifying blood of Jesus, and, in symbol of this, the body is washed with pure water. Saul "arose, and was baptized;" and as Jesus had said, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," he was saved—his sins were remitted, hence a correct examination of Saul's conversion proves that baptism is "for (in order to) the remission of sins."

Just one idea here in reference to the mode of baptism. Saul was commanded to "arise and be baptized;" and he "arose and was baptized." If sprinkling or pouring had been the modus operandi in baptizing, it would have been both unnecessary and imprudent for him to arise to be baptized, as he was in a kneeling posture before God. But as baptism was immersion, it was absolutely necessary for him to arise in order to be baptized.

Conrad Beissel.

Brother Holsinger:—I noticed in the C. F. C, No. 15, volume 8, a piece written by brother D. J. Miller, and headed, "Information Wanted," in reference to what appears to be stated in a book which he has, which is called the "History of all Religions." For the satisfaction of the readers of the C. F. C., I will refer to a volume called, Pennsylvania Historical Collections, published in Philadelphia, by George W. Gorton. In this volume, on page 413, you can find who Conrad Beissel was. He was the author of the church called Seventh-day Baptists. My history does not say that C. Beissel ever belonged to the German Baptists but that he had been a Presbyterian. Now for the records in the Pennsylvania Historical Collections:

"In the year 1708, Alexander Mack, of Schreisheim, and seven others, in Schwardzenam, Germany, met together regularly to examine the New Testament, and to ascertain the obligations it imposes on professing Christians; determing to lay aside all preconceived opinions and traditional observances. Their inquiries resulted in the formation of the society called Dunkers, or First-day German Baptists. Persecuted as they grew into importance, some were driven into Holland, some to Creyfelt, in the Duchy of Cleves, and the mother church voluntarily removed to Sernstervin in Friesland; and thence emigrated to America in 1719, and dispersed to different parts—to Germantown, Skippack, Oley, Conestoga, and elsewhere. Soon after a church was established at Muelbach (Mill Creek), this (Lancaster) county. Of this community was Conrad Beissel, a native of Germany. He had been a Presbyterian, and fled from the persecutions of that period.

Intent upon ascertaining the true obligations of the word of God, he conceived that there was an error among the Dunkers, and that the seventh day was commanded to be observed as the Sabbath. In 1725 he published a tract on the subject, which created excitement in the society at Mill Creek; and he in consequence retired secretly to a cell near the Cocalico, which had previously been occupied by one Elimelech, a hermit. When his place of retirement, unknown for a long time, was discovered, many of the Mill Creek society who coincided in his opinions, settled around him in solitary cottages. They adopted the original Sabbath—the seventh day (Saturday)—for public worship in the year 1728, which has ever since been observed by them.

In 1732 the solitary was changed for a conventual life, and a Monastic society was established as soon as the first buildings erected for that purpose were finished—in May 1733. The habit of the capuchins or white Friars was adopted by both the brethren and sisters, which consisted of a shirt, trowsers and vest, with a long white gown and cowl of woolen in winter, and linen in summer. The sisters wore petticoats instead of trowsers, and had some peculiarity in the shape of a cowl. Monastic names were given to all who entered the cloister. Onesimus (Israel Eckerlin) was constituted Prior, who was succeeded by Jæbez (Peter Miller); and the title of Father—spiritual father—was bestowed by the society upon Beissel, whose Monastic name was Friedsam; to which the brethren afterwards added Gottrecht—implying together peaceable God-right. In the year 1740 there were 36 single brethren in the cloister, and 35 sisters; and at one time the society, including the members living in the neighborhood, numbered nearly 300.

I will stop writing. I think the above is sufficient to inform all brethren and sisters, and outsiders, that Conrad Beissel (sometimes called Peysel) was not the founder of the so-called "Dunkard" church.

Marriage in its True Signification.

H. H. Weimer, in Companion No. 16, has an article on the above subject. Beautiful in theory; but sin having marred God's workmanship, it does not work so well in practice. When religion truly exists in the heart, and the man's love knows no abatement, having selected a companion with the sole view to the glory of God, no doubt a reciprocity of affection, reverence, assistance, sympathy, love, chastity, constancy and faithfulness will continue till death. But how few consider marriage a sacrament! how few seek first the kingdom of heaven! how few make the glory of God the determining principle in their choice. Husbands, in some degree, are placed in relation to their wives similar to that which Christ bears to the Church; and Christ's example is thus made the rule governing the husband. As Christ loves his church, so should the husband love his wife. But in too many cases we do not find it so. And how then! Where then is the reciprocity? where "the reciprocal duties" on the part of the wife? And when the vile wretch who neither fears God or man, demands obedience, because he is her husband, ought she then be subject to his authority? It is easy for the wife to obey the husband who stands in relation to her as Christ to the church, to obey her husband in the Lord

I now offer a few rules on marriage which I have often presented to the young.

Seek first the kingdom of heaven.

Seek a wife who loves and obeys Jesus.

Let it be an important point that the husband shall be intellectually stronger than the wife.

Never marry until you find one for whom you are willing to forego any pleasure, by the denial of which you can confer paramount pleasure upon your partner.

Always seek the aid of the Divine Spirit in the selection.

Regard the approbation of God more than the approbation of man.

Answers to Queries.

Brother Henry: By your permission, I will try to explain some queries, or, at least, give my views on them. I think it is not only a privilege we enjoy, but it is also a great blessing, that we can, from far and near, talk together through the Companion, as one family; but as it is with this, as with all other blessings—we can make good use of it and can also abuse it. I think we ought to be very careful, when we offer a query for explanation, that we do it out of no other motive than to get light and to be benefited by it. Then I am sure there will always be some one to comply with our request. "Ask" is the command, "and ye shall receive" is the promise.

In No. 6, present volume, is an explanation requested on Matthew 12: 27, "If I by Beelzebub cast out devils, by whom do your children cast them out? Therefore they shall be your judges." Casting out devils was not an uncommon thing in the days of our Savior—not only by him and his disciples, but also by others that were not followers of Christ. See Mark 9: 38; Matthew 7: 22; Acts 19: 13.

But it seems to me that the seven sons of Sceva, a Jew and chief of the priests, did it more for sport than anything else. Yet they did it in the name of Jesus. Now the question of our Savior, "If I by Beelzebub cast out devils, by whom do your children cast them out?" the Pharisees could answer in no way but to confess and say, "They do it in the name of Jesus." Now the answer to the query. "If your children cast out devils in my name, and you say that I myself cast out devils by Beelzebub, will not they, your own children, be your judges?

Another explanation is desired on Matthew 6: 22, 23, "The light of the body is the eye: if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light. But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!"

Now to get the right understanding of the query, we will have to connect the 21st and 24th verses with the 22nd and 23d; "For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." The eye and heart as a general thing work together. If we see anything pleasing to the eye, the affection of the heart will go after it; and if the affection of the heart is set on any object, let it be what it may, the eye will be there too: we like to see it often, and the oftener we see it the more we love it. If our treasure is in heaven, our heart will be there too, and our eye will follow: we love to look heavenward, and as we cannot look one way and go another, we follow our eye, and walk the road that leads to heaven. If our eye is single, it can only be used for one purpose at the same time. We cannot look upward and downward at one time; neither can we serve God and Mammon at the same time. So if we serve God, we will be a light to the world—have our loins girded about, and our lights burning, which will so shine that men will see our good works, and our whole body will be full of light. But if our eye is evil, we look after evil things, the affection of the heart will follow; we look after the things of this world, lay up treasure in it; we will love it with our whole heart, serve Mammon, walk in darkness, and our light which ought to shine will go out, become dark—our whole body will be full of darkness, and how great will be that darkness!

Yours in Love,

JOHN HAMMER.

In No. 14, present volume, Noah B. Blough requests an answer to Matth 24: 34, and adds, "In our days a generation is counted about thirty years." I think if the brother will read the chapter carefully, especially the first and second verses, that the answer in the second verse will show us when these things shall come to pass, what will be the sign of his coming, and of the end of the world. I think most of these signs have come to pass. If we read the destruction of Jerusalem by Josephus, or Jewish antiquity, we will see that these things have come to pass. Compare Dan. 12; 1, with Josephus. Even they, perhaps, who cried, "Crucify him," were crucified in such numbers that space could not be found to set the crosses, or wood to make them. And when Titus entered the city, such a sight met his gaze, that he raised his hands towards heaven and exclaimed, "I am innocent of this." The city was surrounded with walls, and the space between the middle and inner walls was piled with dead men's bodies. Notwithstanding all this the Savior had given the sign to his disciples when to leave the city. He told them when Cestus places the Roman standard before the gates in triumph, then they should flee in haste. Why Cestus withdrew his army, just when he had the city in his grasp, is a mystery to military men to the present day; and would be to me, if I were not aware who had influence at work besides Cestus. God's people were within those walls, and in order that they might be saved it was necessary for Cestus to withdraw his army; but as soon as they were safely out, Titus lead the army back again. So God leads his people out of destruction. Lot was lead out of Sodom before destruction came on. Noah was placed in an ark of safety before the flood. Daniel was protected in the lion's den. When Moses stood on the banks of the Red Sea, he looked for deliverance and said to the children of Israel, "Stand still, and see the salvation of God." We all know the result of his faith. Brethren, "fear God and keep his commandments." "To the law and testimony."

In love,

Request, to Hannah Knouff.

Dear and respected sister in the Lord:—In C. F. C., Vol. 7. No. 47, I see the following statement: "The first Sabbath-School I knew of among the Brethren, was superintended by Jonathan Kepler about 30 years ago, then a citizen of Miami county, Ohio." The above according to your construction is correct no doubt; but I think it requires some explanation, from the fact, according to the reading of said article, the Brethren everywhere would most naturally understand that I was a favorite of Sunday-Schools, conducted according to the present acceptation of the term Sunday-School. This would falsify my position. I hope therefore you will please state through the COMPANION what the true meaning and intent of said declaration may be; for truly I can say that I have never been inside of a Sunday-School one hour to my recollection; but I have seen some of the evils of that institution.

And further, it is my belief that the introduction into our fraternity of Sunday Schools, which schools, protracted meetings, social meetings, or prayer meetings as commonly understood, are all a deviation from the apostolic order, and also to our Brotherhood no further back than 40 years. I hold that all christian religious meetings are, or should be, prayer meetings, and this is also the Sunday-School I approve of.

In Fraternal Love,

To H. B. Lehman.

You want to know where the scripture is that teaches us that we must give an account "For ev'ry vain and idle thought." I will try to answer. Turn to Matth. 12 : 36, and read, "That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment." But suppose you think this does not say, "For ev'ry vain and idle thought." Well, we will try to explain. We think words and thoughts are analagous in this case. To prove this, see 34th verse of same chapter, "For out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." Now you see a word, let it be good or evil, must first be conceived in the heart, then spoken ; therefore an evil, or vain and idle, word must, of course, be first a thought, then a word : hence the origin of the phrase in the Brethren's Hymn Book, from which you educed your query. I will now cite you to a few passages of scripture bearing on this subject. Read Matth. 12 : 34–37. This will give you light. Then turn to Luke 6 : 45 : then to Eccl. 12 : 14th verse. I will here quote this verse. "For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing whether it be good, or whether it be evil." God knoweth the secret thoughts of the heart.

Books Wanted.

There are a few small works, which I remember of seeing some years before I commenced my ministerial labors, and now much feel the need of them. All my efforts to procure them, during the last year, having proved fruitless, I thought to resort to this method.

1. "A Defence of Trine Immersion ;" by "A Lover of the Truth."

2. Eld. Adamson's work against Trine Immersion.

3 "Review of Elder Adamson ;" by Elder James Quinter.

If any brother will be so kind as to send me the above named works, or inform me where they can be procured, he will confer upon the writer a much desired favor.

Sabbath-School.

Brother Henry : A few words in regard to the Sabbath school cause. The Brethren in our arm of the church (Eagle Creek, Hancock county, Ohio), met on Sabbath, April 21st, and organized a Sabbath-school again for the coming summer, whereupon the following officers and teachers were appointed :

S. T. Bosserman, Superintendent.

Rafa Spacht and Isaac Rothrock, Assistant Superintendents.

John Baughman, Secretary.

D. B. Bosserman, Treasurer.

Rafa Spacht, Teacher in Bible Class.

" F—Nancy Spacht.
" G—J. N. Cotner.

The resolutions were read and accepted ; then the classes proceeded to read and explain the scriptures to the scholars. Sixty-six scholars present and 20 spectators. The interest manifested in the school was good ; and we believe that some good, at least, will be accomplished by it the coming season. The Sabbath-school is a place where the young can meet together to read about Jesus, and learn of him and the way to heaven. It will teach them in early youth that they have a God to worship and obey. It will form impressions on their minds that will never be eradicated. The young seek pleasure abroad, and are wont to assemble together somewhere on the Sabbath day ; and we know of no place, outside of attending the preaching of God's word, that is more beneficial to them and their morals than the Sabbath-school, where God's word is taught them in its purity. We are glad to see the Brethren taking hold of the cause, and think much good can be accomplished by them, if they conduct the schools rightly. Yet we know some people, and also some brethren, who do not urge their children to go to Sabbath-school ; and hence to spend the Sabbath they go fishing in some pond or stream, or play with bat and ball. Now we would much rather see them take their children with them to school, or, at least, send them to school, where they will be under the instruction of those who try to teach the scripture in its ancient purity and simplicity. We pray for the cause ; and hope the Brotherhood will pray, and let all our prayers ascend to Him upon the throne, that, through Sabbath-schools among the Brotherhood, many children throughout our land may be brought back into the fold of Jesus.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

On the 20th of March, sister SARAH CLARK, aged 58 years 7 months and 27 days. Her maiden name was Swalley, born in Juniata Co., Pa., She was a member of the Church over 34 years. Was anointed on the night of the 18th, by brethren D. Rittenhouse and J. Moore. She suffered with asthma since five years of age, erysipelas the last 16 years, and finally wasted away with inflammation of the lungs; but remained conscious to the last, and expressed a desire to live with Jesus. She left a husband, 9 children, 18 grandchildren and many friends. Four of her children are members of the church. Funeral improved by brethren Rittenhouse and Moore, from 2nd Tim. 4: 6—8.

In the Salem branch, Marion Co., Ills., March 20th JOHN FERRIER son of brother Henry and sister Elisabeth Ann, aged 11 years and 7 months. The subject of his notice came to his death accidently. He and his father went about one mile from home for some straw: and going home the boy was on the wagon. His father laid down a fence, the boy driving through. The front wheels of the wagon dropped into a furrow, throwing him down between the horses and wagon. The horses being frightened run away, injuring him internally. His father immediately carried him home. He died about one hour after he was hurt; bidding them all farewell, saying he would leave this troublesome world. His funeral was preached on Sunday 7th of April by Eld., Daniel Neher, from James 4: 14.

J. H. Nehr

In the Otter Creek congregation Macoupin Co., Ill., April 8th, of consumption, sister MARY GENGER, wife of friend Levi Genger, aged 30 years 9 months 12 days. She leaves a husband and two children to mourn their loss; but their loss is her eternal gain. She has been an exemplary sister of the church for a little over two years. Occasion improved by D. R. Nead and C. C. Gibson from 1 Cor., 15th chapter, latter clause of the 54th, and 55 verse to a large and attentive congregation.

I. H. Crist.

Near Smithville, Wayne Co., Ohio, April 7th, of inflammation of the bowels, AMANDA C. WINGER, aged 17 years 2 months, and 12 days. The subject of this notice was a very quiet, respectable young girl, with fair prospects for a long life; but in an hour when she thought not, a message of death was sent to her. On the morning of the 6th she was apparently well, headache excepted, and she joined her sister in singing. A few hours afterward she took a severe pain in her stomach; and although a good physician was called, and every effort made to relieve her, all was in vain: the monster was too strong, and on the morning of the 7th just before 11 o'clock she closed her eyes in death. O solemn hour of death! She loved everybody and had a great many friends and young comrades; but she had to leave them all. Her body was conveyed to the Paradise meeting house, where the funeral discourse was preached from Math., 24: 44 to a very large concourse of people, by the writer.

J. B. Shoemaker.

On the night of the 23d of April, of consumption, brother DAVID HOSTETLER, aged 34 years 4 months and 17 days. The deceased had selected the 11th chapter of John as the funeral text, which was improved by brethren Samuel Lupold and Henry Gephart, in the English, and Henry and Christ Miller in the German language.

Abner Baumgardner.

In the Ashland congregation, Ashland county, Ohio, March 9th, MARION, son of our friends Harry and Mary Freer, aged 13 years and 11 months. Funeral services by the writer, from 1st Peter 1: 24.

In the same congregation, on the 6th of April, WILLIAM HENRY, son of our friends Jonas and Lucinda Diehl, aged 2 years 6 months and 3 days. Occasion improved by the writer, from Matthew 18: 2, 3

In the Maple Grove congregation, Ashland county, Ohio, April 24, our much beloved friend ISAAC GEHNER consort of sister Susan Gehner, aged 49 years 10 months and 19 days. Occasion was improved by Moses Weaver, and the writer from Heb. 9: 27.

D. N. Workman.

In the Ashland District, Ashland county, Ohio, April 7th, brother JOHN KINSEY, aged 49 years and 17 days. Brother Kinsey was unwell for several years, but still able to be up and about. Lately he took to bleeding of the lungs. Just before his death, he walked out of the house; and when he came in again, he bled some again, he sat down on the chair, and died almost instantly, without a struggle. We trust our loss is his great gain. Funeral services by the Brethren from 2d Timothy 4: 6, 8.

D. M. Witmer.

In Rochester, New York, April 6th, after a short and severe illness, LESTER C. DOLLEY, M. D.

Isaac Price

In the Marion congregation, Ohio, NANCY JANE MOHLER, daughter of B. and C. Mohler, aged 6 months and 13 days. Funeral services by the undersigned, from Matth. 19: 13, 15.

Michael Moore.

In Springville, Ephrata congregation, Lancaster county, Pa., Feb. 6th, of old age, our esteemed old sister LIZZIE KELLER, aged 81 years, 11 months and 12 days. On the 9th her remains were interred in the Brethren's grave-yard near by. The occasion was improved by brethren Reinhold, Bamberger, and others, to a large concourse of people, from Heb. 4: 9. Our old sister lived at the place where our Love feast was held last year; and, no doubt, many of the old brethren and sisters there present will remember her in her feeble condition. She now is no more: she is gone to the spirit world, and we believe she is at rest; for she was an exemplary mother in Israel. She was a member of the church for forty or more years.

Advertising alone does not prove success. The thing which is advertised, must have intrinsic merit, or else large advertising will eventually do it more harm than good, advertise it thoroughly, and you will be sure to succeed; if it is poor, don't praise it, for people will soon discover you are lying.

Such is the policy of the Burlington Route that runs to three great regions in the West: 1st, To Omaha, connecting with the Pacific Roads. 2nd, To Lincoln the capital of Nebraska, and all that beautiful region south of the Platte, field with R. R. lands and homesteads. 3d, To St. Joseph, Kansas City and all Kansas points.

The roads are splendidly built, have the best bridges, finest cars, the Miller platform and coupler, and the safety air brake (to prevent the loss of life that is everywhere else happening); Pullman's sleepers, Pullman dining cars, large and powerful engines (to make quick time and good connections), and are in a word the best equipped roads in the West. So that if you desire to go safely, surely, quickly and comfortably to any point in Southern Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, or on the Pacific Roads, be sure that you go "By Way of Burlington."

THE
Christian Family Companion.
Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

Rate of Interest.

The subject of interest has been brought to our notice through the medium of the C. F. C., and we think it needs a little more sifting. Whether the brethren fear to come boldly up to the mark or not we are not able to tell: they seem to scratch around the corners a little more than need to be. There is but very little that comes under our notice but what has its extremes; and we are likely to take one or the other of these extremes, the subject of interest not excepted.

Every Christian man and woman must, in the first place, be a law-abiding citizen. Paul to the Romans, 13: 1, 2, says, "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers; for there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God. Whoever therefore resisteth the power resisteth the ordinance of God; and they that resisteth the power receive to themselves damnation." This no doubt has reference to the common law of our land. Now what is the law concerning the subject under consideration.

Brother Miunich says, The state can no more regulate the price of money than the price of corn. How it is in his state I do not know; but in our state it is different: it does regulate the price of money, or has made a rate of interest, which has stood from time immemorial, so far as I know, which is six per cent. statute law. Although some years ago, by the clamoring of moneyed men the legislature was petitoned, which passed an enactment that ten per cent. might be obtained by special contract. But in a few years that law was repealed, being impractical in the judgment of the law-making power, and stood so for awhile. But a clamoring arose which caused legislation on the subject again; and it now stands eight per cent. by special contract; but the old statute law has been in full force all the time. Now we would ask the question, which is the more reasonable for us as christians, to follow up the enactments, or to stand by the old statute? Now the extremes are these: we have some who cry, "sin," at taking any interest on money; and an other class who take all they can get, regardless of law. As a general thing, the tighter the times, the higher are the rates of interest asked. Is that right? We say emphatically, No; for when a man begins to totter every time he gets a kick it brings him nearer to the ground, and finally you get him down and perhaps ruin him. What will be said of you who speculate on your money in this way? If you see proper to do a charitable act by giving money without interest, the law will not find fault with you; yet you should not cry "sin" to him who takes lawful interest; but if you take more than lawful, then steps up the law and says, "You have done wrong," and it has legal right to do so. "But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain, for he is a minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil." Romans 13: 3. Law is intended to be founded on reason and justice; but is hard to make law to meet every case. Then we which are filled with the spirit of God, should be governed by our judgment when looking at each case as it comes before us; but never go beyond the the limits of law. Now let us make a comparison which will show you what you may not have seen. Land here is worth about, say seventy-five dollars per acre. It rents for about three hunded and seventy-five dollars per 160, acres, money rent. Then the owner must pay the tax and keep up repairs, which is less than three per cent. clear. Now to you who take eight, ten, and even more per cent., what will be your chance for Heaven and glory.

Order of Feet-washing: 1st, the Example; 2nd, the Commandment.

John 13: 4, 5—the example: "He riseth from supper, and laid aside his garments, and took a towel and girded himself. After that, he poureth water into a basin, and began to wash his disciples feet, and to wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded." (Verse 12), "So after he had washed their feet, and had taken his garments, and was set down again, he said unto them, Know ye what I have done to you? Ye call me Master, and Lord; and ye say well, for so I am. If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet. For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you." In verses 4, and 5, we read how Jesus prepared himself and the water, and how he did the work—he washed their feet, and wiped them with the towel wherewith he was girded. In verses 14, 15, is the commandment: "If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet:" ye also, in the same manner—likewise. Ought—necessary, should. The command then is how we should do the work: that ye also ought, likewise, in the same manner, wash one another's feet, and wipe them by authority of the example. He washed their feet and wiped them with the towel wherewith he was girded. The command is to wash one another's feet according to example; not in the number washed, but in the way it was done; not John wash two or more and James wipe them, neither, one the others; that is, not, John wash and wipe James's feet, then James wash and wipe John's feet, but John wash and wipe James's feet, James wash and wipe Andrew's feet, and so on around the table, the same as the salutation, and then we will wash one another's feet, and every one of the body will then obey the example and the command, and with less confusion than is sometimes under the present order; every member of Christ's body was engaged in the work of washing and wiping the disciples' feet. Just so, according to the light I have on the ordinance, every member of the church—the body of Christ—will follow the example, and obey the command, "Wash one another's feet," and wipe them; not one the others, nor one many others, but "one another's." May the Lord grant light and understanding, that the church may see, speak, and do the same things, in humble obedience to the truth, to the honor and glory of of his great name, and the union and prosperity of the church. From your weak and unworthy sister,

Eph J Walker

SARAH RUPEL.

Judgment.

"For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." 2 Cor. 5; 10.

All. There is no eluding that searching scrutiny: every eye shall see him. Reader, if safe in the covenant, there is to thee no terror in that coming reckoning. The Judicial dealing between thyself and thy God is already past. Thou art already acquitted. The moment thou didst cast thyself at the cross of thy dear Lord, the sentence of not guilty was pronounced upon thee; and "it is God that justifieth: who is he that condemeth?" But this sentence will be ratified and openly proclaimed before an assembled world. On that great day of disclosures God will avenge his own elect. All the calumnies and asperations heaped on their character will be wiped away: and in the presence of devils, and angels, and men, the approving sentence will go forth from the lips of the Omniscient One; "Enter ye into the joy or your Lord." And who is to be enthroned on that tribunal of that unerring rectitude before whom every knee is to bow and every heart is to be laid open? "He has appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that Man whom he hath ordained." That Man. Oh! it is no stranger. It is he who died for thee, who is now interceding for thee, who will then stand on that latter day on the earth to espouse thy cause, vindicate thine integrity, and utter the challenge to every reclaiming adversary: "Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect?"

Reader seek to know this God-man Mediator on a throne of grace, ere you meet Him on a throne of judgment. Seek to have your name now enrolled in the book of life, that you may have it then confessed before his Father and the holy Angels. What an incentive to increased aspirations after holiness and higher spiritual attainments, to remember that the awards of that day, and of eternity, will be determined by the transactions of time! It is a grand Bible principle, that, though justified by faith, we shall be judged by our works. Nay, more, while from first to last, Jesus and Jesus alone is the meritorious cause of salvation, yet the works flowing from faith in him, and love to him, will regulate the degree of future bliss, whether we shall be among the greatest, or the least, in the kingdom of heaven—whether we shall occupy the outskirts of glory, or revolve in orbits around the throne in the blaze of God's immediate presence.

Reader, were that trumpet blast now to break on thine ear, wouldst thou be prepared with the welcome response, "Even so, come?" Seek to be living in this habitual state of holy preparedness, that even the midnight cry would not take thee by surprise; that the summons, which will prove so startling to a slumbering world, would be to thee the herald, "He cometh! He cometh to judge the world!" Yes, dear sinner, you will be there; and if your actions are not in compliance with those that are on record, dreadful will be your portion. I ask the question how shall you be able to stand? Think of the awful forebodings of the place of the damned. There will be no light there except it were from the flames of hell, enwrapping your body and soul. I entreat you to get ready for the solemn event, and make this Judge your friend. Then you need not fear the day. But when the time arrives, you may have the joyous response on your tongue, Even so come, Lord Jesus. Amen.

Never again your loins untie,
Nor let your torches waste and die,
Till, when the shadows thickest fall,
Ye hear your Master's midnight call.

Uncovering the Head.

A few questions for brother C. G. Lint, in reference to his article, "Uncovering the Head," No. 16, page 245. In this article I perceive a few notes upon which we would like to have a further explanation. The brethren's uncovering seems easily understood, and needs but little comment in order to sustain its practice, while the covering of the sisters', or the woman's, seems to be more obscure.

Your article proves clearly that an artificial covering is necessarily required at certain times, when in the act of praying or prophesying. My brother says, "Sisters, be assured that you dishonor your head, if you are in a congregation when you attempt to offer a prayer with an uncovered head; and you have no assurance that God will hear you." Now we, sisters, want to know our place, and our duty concerning these things. We will be pleased to have the Thummim and the Urim—the light and the perfection. What does my brother mean when he says, "In a congregation, where you make an attempt to offer a prayer?" Does he mean public prayer, or secret? How do you understand the Apostle Paul here, when he says, "Every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered?" Does he mean, to pray aloud, or secretly, in the congregation, or aloud, or secretly, in a private capacity, and in the closet? What does he mean by prophesying? What kind of a charge is this, and what the position that "the woman" must occupy in order to fulfill her mission? Whom do we dishonor by praying or prophesying uncovered, as our head? Man in general, or "the man?" We will be pleased to have all the light and information that can be produced upon this subject by scripture authority, from any source, and also upon the 10th verse of the 11th chapter of 1st Cor.

Written out of pure motives, by your sister in Christ.

The ministers name and address is, Allen Ives, Burr Oak, Jewell Co., Kansas. There are several families more, in the same county, also some in Mitchell and Republican counties; members enough to organize a church, and hold regular meetings. The Lord willing, Eld. S. C. Stump and myself, expect to be with them at the above named places, from the 15th to the 20th of May to hold meetings.

Remarks on a Petition to be Presented to A. C; noticed in C. F. C. April, 23rd.

The writer calls it an underground method of gaining points; and as I am acquainted with some of the good brethren engaged in getting it up, I state in the beginning, that it was not their design to do anything "clandestinely," for they expressed regret that they had not acted sooner, that it might be more widely spread before A. C. Again, if they had wished to keep it secret they would never have sent it to the Editors of our papers, whose business it is to make things public. Our charity, differing a little from that described by Paul, 1st Cor. 13th chap., causes us sometimes to look at the worst side of the question, and to come to hasty conclusion, and often wrong ones, too. The writer intimates that they are extremist; but I must say, he sadly misjudges; for those whom he calls radicals, by extreme measures, are building up a division in the other extreme, who wish to throw off all restraint, while the petitioners desire to live according to the Gospel, in both spirit and letter, in the strictest possible manner, and will not compromise anything required in the Scripture for the sake of influence or popularity; yet wishing to exercise all possible Christian forbearance. They never have sought a division among the Brethren, nor do they now seek it, and would regret very much to see such a result. They have seen certain commitees, self-vested with lordly authority, excommunicate members, and are still continuing the same, till some churches are almost broken up, & are now threatening to cut off whole churches, Elders and all, because they will not conform to their peculiar notions, yet willing to conform the Gospel in every respect. We see how they are endeavoring to lord over God's heritage, instead of ruling by love, the spirit of Christianity.

Only about one month ago eleven members and two Elders, in a Church council, because they would not subscribe to the whole of the book published by brother Kurtz, but were willing to live by it so far as it corresponds with the Gospel, were told they could not sit in council; & consequently their names were read out and they were required to leave the house.

These said committees wish to require us to obey the minutes of A. M. entirely, while they themselves, nor those who made them, are able to observe them all, nor even try; for in fact, many of them have always been a dead letter hence the necessity for the first article of of the petition.

The writer above alluded to, thinks the last article unnecessary, as the scripture has always been our fundamental law. We trust it has been, but that would not preclude the necessity of having A. C. make the declaration again, and put on record what our code is, and thereby put to silence ignorent men who are declaring all over the country that Brother Kurtz's book is our discipline, and that members are received and dealt with according to it alone.

Again, we are aware that brethren in many parts of the country are declaring the insufficiency of the Gospel for church government. A few months ago an Elder declared, "The Gospel is good enough as far as it goes, but does not go far enough." Another, from Penn. who figures largely in A. C. said "there are cases we cannot reach unless we have something besides the Gospel." Another said, "we cannot receive members into the church by the Gospel alone;" and another assented to his views. Another Elder, holding views widespread among the Brethren, declared that whatever the church bound on earth would be bound in heaven; meaning that the A. C. has a right to make laws outside of the Gospel; that its delegates are under the influence of the Spirit to guide them into all truth; which is absurd, for that would make men infallible, and instead of their decisions having to be repealed, they would stand for all time, as the writings of the Apostles who were guided by the Holy Spirit.

Now we see there is danger of drifting from the shore, and losing the old landmarks of the Gospel.

We wish to know whether the Gospel alone is our law, or whether when we preach we are to say that the Gospel and article 1, 2, and 3 is our code?

The above, and many other things convince us, that the A. C. should declare where we stand.

Now as to direct petition; we have an example in Acts 15, where they sent the matter up directly to the Apostles, without its passing through the "District Council," and we might say that James acted "clandestinely," since he did not notify all the Jewish brethren in Judea who were largely interested in the matter. And we might accuse A. Mack and others of acting in like manner, but we forbear. There are many good members excluded, who cannot get a petition through the church even, shall they be left to perish? Cannot a city, without consent of its council, send a petition to the Legislature? Must the citizens of a State through its Legislature send a petition to Congress? Never. No government, except a tyranny, dare refuse the consideration of a petition signed by a respectable number of citizens. No church, except the church of Rome, dare refuse, in justice, to hear a petition from a respectable number of its members. Even the Methodist Church, with all its array of power, was compelled to yield and admit lay delegation. And now, can it be possible that our elders will be among the last to yield to the wishes of good brethren, when they demand nothing more than the Gospel requires? May the Lord add his blessing and direct us into all truth.

Denying the Lord.

The apostle Peter in his second epistle, supposed to be written by him when he was confined, shortly before he was executed, foretold his brethren of the false teachers, and commences thus: "But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction." Then he goes on farther and saith, "And many shall follow their pernicious ways, by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of." Now we must believe that Peter wrote through the Holy Spirit, and if we look around us we cannot help but believe that the time has fully come which the apostle had predicted, for I have often heard men teach things contrary to the Gospel. And where do the many sects come from? The word heresy means sects. If they would not deny the Lord, there would be no need of different sects.

But some one might say, "Well, but all these sects confess the Lord, and by no means deny him." But we will now try the word "deny," and see what we can make out of it. It seems to me that we read some place in holy writ, that Christ told some characters once, that they confessed him with their lips, but by works denied him. Now if this is true, (which we dare not doubt), we can see that it is quite easy to "deny the Lord;" more so than a good many imagine. And if we deny him in one thing, we might just as well in all things, for we find that whoever offends in one point is guilty of all. But I understand the apostle James to mean, if we wilfully offend; for if we would not take it in that way, none could be saved, for we read in one place that "we offend all." I claim that as soon as a man says this or that command is not essential to our salvation, he is then denying the Lord, and consequently is classed with false teachers.

Brethren and friends, this may seem strong language to you, but if we express ourselves otherwise, we too might be ranked with false teachers. But the same apostle also said that they "as natural brute beasts" * * * speak evil of the things that they understand not; and shall utterly perish in their own corruption." Now how many professors of religion have we heard speak evil of some of the commands of our Lord, because they cannot understand them, or cannot see what good they can do. But it matters not whether we can see what the design of a command is; it is enough that we know that it is the Lord's command, and we are bound to keep it, even if we don't understand it. We should by no means speak evil of the commands; for every command has some design. The apostle said, too, that they have "forsaken the right way, and are gone astray." So we can learn that there is only one right way, and that is the one that Jesus said: "I am the way." Now if Jesus is the only way, we must follow his way-marks; for he has opened the way for us, and has left us finger-boards along the way. If we take heed to those way-marks and follow him the whole route, we will surely meet him at the end of the way. But if we see another way that hath not the way-marks, and take that way, though we might think it is the same course and will lead to the same place, we will be foolish by doing so. I say again we must do all things that he has commanded us. Let us follow our Lord in all his ways, whether we understand them or not; for he has commanded nothing but what is for our good.

Christianity.

By Christianity is intended, that system of means arising out of the Gospel, which the Divine Father has most graciously instituted for the salvation of man, and adopted to his nature and wants in every particular. Is he organized to believe, to love, to reform, to repent, to fear, to hope? God has given him a system containing facts for belief, love and goodness, exciting love, and leading to repentance—commands enjoining obedience—threats to be feared, and promises to be enjoyed.

1. Therefore, Christianity is a system, of facts.

"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John 3: 16.

"Him (Jesus) being delivered by the determined counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain. Whom God has raised up; having loosed the pains of death, because it was not possible that he should be holden of it" Acts 2: 23, 24.

"I declare unto you the Gospel * * * that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures;" "by which you are saved, if you keep in memory what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain." 1 Cor. 15: 1—4.

2. Christianity is a system of love.

"Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." John 15: 13. "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich." 1 Cor. 8: 9. "Hereby perceive we the love of God; because he laid down his life for us." 1 John 3: 16.

"Herein is love: not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins." 1 John 4: 10.

"We love him because he first loved us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in God, dwelleth in love." 1 John 4: 10.

"Or despisest thou the riches of his goodness, and forbearance, and long-suffering; not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance?" Rom. 2: 4. It thus operates upon the heart, changes the affections, and leads to repentance.

3. Christianity is a system of Commands. "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." Acts 2: 38

"Repent and believe the gospel." Mark 1: 15. "Repent and be converted that your sins may be blotted out." Acts 3: 19. So far, let it be observed, it applies to the sinner; but it contains another class of commands, addressed to those who have obeyed the first, by virtue of which they have changed their state, and passed from death unto life, having been regenerated and adopted into the family of God.

"Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that you may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God." Rom. 12 : 2. "Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth." Col. 3 : 2.

"Add to your faith virtue ; to virtue, knowledge ; to knowledge, temperance ; to temperance, patience ; to patience, godliness ; to godliness, brotherly kindness ; to brotherly kindness charity." 2 Pet. 1 : 6.

"Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." 1 John 2 : 15. "Greet ye one another with a holy kiss." 1 Cor. 16 : 20.

"If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet." John 13 : 14. (15th verse), "For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you."

4. The law of Christianity embraces a system of threats.

"Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul ; but rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." Matth. 25 : 41.

"To them who are contentious and obey not the truth, tribulation and anguish upon every soul of man that doeth evil, upon the Jew first, and also upon the Greek." Rom 28.

"The Lord shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ : who shall be punished with everlasting destruction, from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power."

"And whosoever was not written in the book of life, was cast into the lake of fire." Rev. 20 : 15.

5. The law of Christianity contains a system of promises.

"I go to prepare a place for you, and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself ; that where I am there you may also be." John 14 : 2, 3.

"To them who, by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, honor and immortality, (God will give) eternal life." Rom. 2 : 7.

"Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure ; for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall ; for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." 2 Pet. 1 : 10, 11.

"For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord." 1 Thess. 4 : 16, 17.

"Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Rev. 22 : 14.

For such a system may we not exclaim in the language of the Psalmist : "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits : who forgiveth all thine iniquities ; who healeth all thy diseases ; who redeemeth thy life from destruction ; who crowneth thee with loving-kindness and tender mercies ;" "whose mercy is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him, and his righteouness unto children's children. Bless ye the Lord all ye hosts ; ye ministers of his that do his pleasure. Bless the Lord, all his works, in the places of his dominions ; bless the Lord, O my soul." Ps. 103 : 1, 2.

The Broad and Narrow Ways.

Our Lord and Savior, in the 7th Chapter of Matthew, plainly points out two ways ; the one as broad, with many travelers : the other as narrow, with but few thereon. Through the unfavorable weather being detained from going to meeting, I felt to write a few thoughts on this important subject. Our Lord and Savior came for the express purpose of saving us from sins, teaching us the way of everlasting life, and revealing to us the narrow way ; and by example and precept he taught us and warned us of the dangers that beset life's journey.

Our life truly may be compared to a journey, and every one as a traveler. Life is very short, so short indeed, that we sometimes see and hear of two, three, and even four little ones being taken from a family in a few days. But thanks be to God, through Jesus Christ our Lord, that he has atoned for such, that when such little lambs fall asleep, they are taken home to Jesus to be happy in their blood-bought privileges, purchased by Christ on Mount Calvary. But we who have arrived to years of accountability, how few can say with a certain young man, "All these things have I kept from my youth up." Yet all was not sufficient ; for he loved the things of this world too well, for he was rich.

How very few can say, We never disobeyed our parents. Obedience to parents is the first commandment with promise. Here it seems to me is the point where children generally knowingly disobey. Conscience will warn; and unless the voice is heeded, we become accountable ; our innocence is gone, the first step in the broad road is taken. If any read this who have not yet taken steps in the wrong direction, be careful ; heed the still small voice. If you have Christian parents, thank God for giving you such. Love and honor them. Read the word of God prayerfully, and try to live it in your daily life. Disobedience to the word of God through unbelief in our first parents, was the cause of their being cast out of the beautiful Garden of Eden. So likewise with us : when we know our duty and do it not, it is sin ; and that belongs on the broad road, and unless we repent and return as the prodigal son, will lead us to certain destruction.

O my brethren, sisters, and friends, may we carefully, prayerfully examine our present condition by the word of God, "the true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world ;" John 1 : 9. We need not be in darkness; but every one will be able to judge his own case. The Savior says, "My word shall be your judge." Every day brings us nearer our destiny to happiness or woe. These words should have great weight with us who reverence the name and authority of Christ ; they are his words, and are of great importance to us all; containing a short exhortation, "enter ye in at the strait gate ;" giving a very important reason for avoiding the wide gate, for it leads to destruction ; while the strait gate leads to life and happiness. The Lord Jesus being asked, "Are there few that be saved ?" answering, said, "Strive to enter in at the strait gate ; for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able." Why ? Because they are not willing to accept the terms by which an entrance is offered, but make ways of their own, having many more essentials, not willing to accept Christ as the door. "By me," says the Savior, "if any man enter in, he shall be saved." And no name is given under heaven, among men, by which we must be saved, but the name of Jesus Christ. What folly in us to hope for salvation in any way not corresponding with the teachings of Jesus! for he says, "I am the way, the truth, and the life, and no man cometh to the Father but by me." "If ye love me keep my sayings; for why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say unto you?" And again, if ye continue in my word ye are my disciples indeed. If we are disciples of Christ, we are in the narrow way; out of Christ and his doctrine, we are on the broad way, whatever our pretensions may be. May we be enabled, by the grace of God, to strive lawfully, is the prayer of your weak brother.

Is it Prudent?

Two ministering brethren meet to fill a regular appointment of meeting. One of them selects a passage of scripture as a text, 1st Cor. 11: 31, which reads thus, "For if we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged." He speaks to the congregation nearly one hour. The object of his discourse is to assist the Christian in judging what he is and what he should endeavor to be. After he takes his seat the other brotner arises, and tells the congregation that the scripture read in their hearing as a text by the brother was not a suitable scripture upon the present occasion; and in order to prove it, he would read a part of the same chapter, proceeding that verse; which he did. And after making some remarks in regard to the bread and wine, which we there read of, and the impropriety of the text, he selects an other passage of scripture from which he addresses the congregation Now from the above stated facts, it is evident that one of those brethren must have been out of proper order; and for the good of our young ministering brethren in the future, would some Elder brother please give his views through the COMPANION in regard to the above stated proceedings.

RESPONSE.

The subject was in place and not out of order; and the theme deduced therefrom very appropriate. I amonly astonished that any brother would assume the position the second one did. This conduct would indicate a lack of proper judgment Had he judged the matter with any degree of Christian courtesy he certainly would not have acted as he did. in my judgment of the matter, all such conduct portrays a spirit of envy, or jealousy; for brethren that have the love of the Master in their hearts, would not act so indiscreetly in public. The idea of reading another text in our regular meetings, and then to preach from the same after demolishing all that a brother before him had said, who had occupied nearly an hour in preaching, is, to say the least, out of all order. The witness he calls upon for proving his assumption is a failure, in my estimation. He thinks that, because he reads of bread and wine, &c., we should use this chapter at no other time than at our communion meetings. I am fearful, brethren, that too much of said chapter is crowded into the small space of one hour or so of time; and I am somewhat inclined to think, that brethren acting as this one did are guilty of doing so. O brethren, when will we learn to show due Christian respect for one another as well as for each others preaching. Paul to Timothy, gives us to uderstand that all scripture is profitable; and again, "Preach the word, in season and out of season," &c.,

A Dream.

FRANKLIN'S HISTORY OF THE GREEK CHURCH.

Two leaves from an unpublished book, selected by J. H. MOORE.

Last night I dreamed, that while in a book-store, a number of books were handed me to examine; the first of which I was exceedingly happy to learn was a complete "History of the Greek Church." The other books were quickly placed to one side, to give time to notice the work in hand.

On opening the little book,—who can imagine my delight, when to my unexpected joy, I perceived that the work was written by Benjamin Franklin, of Cincinnati, Ohio. A volume of thoughts rapidly crossed my mind, while glancing slightly over its respected pages. The use of such a work, to the brethren, I quickly determined, knowing that few men were more able to prepare a work of this class, than the able Franklin.

To be sure that all the doctrine and practices of the Greek Church were clearly set forth, the author, in his wise judgment, had thought proper to lay before the reader the extensive influence which the Greek language had exercised over the eastern part of the Roman Empire: to present this in the proper form, and gradually lead the mine to the Gospel period, he had commenced with the Greek customs, as early as 70 years B. C.; then extending his researches to Christ, then to the apostles, and on down the Christian period of time through the ancient Fathers, and applying them, clearly proved that the part of Christendom, called the Greek Church, found its origin in the extensive and successful labors of Christ, and the apostles; and from the very earliest periods of christianity, had taught and practiced the most correct doctrine and examples of Christ, and the apostles, then extant in the world. In short the proper body of Christian's to learn from at those periods, was the Greek Church.

Thought I to myself, while still reading, what a glorious proof in favor of Trine Immersion. Here we have Franklin, this learned Campbellite, who has proven, that the real Greek Church consisted of the first christians, and contained the most correct doctrine and views of Christ's teachings extant, and we know they always have used three dips, in baptism. My joy awoke me, but still I wish for "Franklin's History of the Greek Church."

Thy Kingdom Come.

The kingdom of God has come, eighteen hundred and seventy-two years ago. "Seek first the kingdom of God; the kingdom of God is at hand." From the days of John the Baptist, until the present day, the kingdom of heaven suffered violence. The kingdom of God is preached, and all men press into it. How could men press into it, if it was yet to come? how could they seek it in Christ's days on earth, if it was yet to come? But surely the kingdom has come, and will come until all the kingdoms of the world become Christ's kingdom; till Jesus shall reign, wherever the sun doth its successive journeys run; his kingdom shall stretch forth, from shore to shore, till the moon shall wax and wane, no more. Brethren and sisters, pray until your sons and daughters, and all the rising generation, become the subjects of Christ and his kingdom. If not, the kingdom of God will cease to exist on earth, and the devil will be universal king. But we pray God's kingdom come, until Satan and his host be overthrown, and Jesus will be universal king. It appears brother Spicher writes of the beginning of the kingdom of God; and sister Cronce writes of Christ's universal kingdom in the future. I think the misunderstanding is greater than the difference of opinion.

Hebrews 5: 8, 9.

"Though he were a son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered. And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him."

The great expounder of the doctrine of Christ, fearless and bold in his proclamation, not being ashamed of the gospel, which, in his estimation, was the power of God, and salvation unto every one that believed it, has let fall this expression from his inspired lips, which, perhaps, carries more force with it than any other expression between the lids of the blessed book containing the revelation of the divine will. Satisfied, as he was, that the gospel of God could alone make us wise unto salvation, he determined to cultivate no other knowledge, and teach nothing but Jesus Christ and him crucified, as the foundation of all true wisdom, piety, and happiness; as it is from this great, fundamental truth alone, that flows in all its superabundant character the loving efficacy necessary to fit and prepare us for a glorious immortality beyond the confines of death, hell, and the grave. For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness, unto every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek, who, by virtue of his Sonship—that peculiar relation of affinity sustained toward the Father, who was virtually in him reconciling the world unto himself—is the basis upon which our salvation is alone predicated, or I may express it more clearly by remarking that he is the Rock of our salvation, a tried stone, which has become the head of the corner; for there is no name given under heaven by which we can be saved than that of Christ Jesus our Lord. Although he was a rock of offence, a stumbling stone, to the Jews who would not receive him as the true Mesiah, rejecting his life-giving counsels, laid violent hands upon him and slew him, crucified the Lord of life and light, he in whom was immortality to be brought to light, it is right here we find the culmination of the greatest event ever recorded upon the pages of history, divine or profane—one upon which high heaven frowned in gross darkness over the whole land. And with his last expiring breath, the temple at Jerusalem was rent in twain from top to bottom; all of which was induced by the fall of man, in order to redeem him from his lost and undone condition. Hence we discover that though he were a Son, co-existent and co-eternal with the Father, yet, in order to fill up the predeterminate fore-counsels of God, he became obedient even unto death, by and through which were all things perfected in him; for the old covenant not being impertect, he had wisely ordained that a new and better should be established, even at the great sacrifice of his only begotten Son. Hence in place of the old ceremonial law, we are having under the law spiritual—grace, by which we are sanctified and saved, redemption and forgiveness of sins, promised through his blood. Then, with all such blessings and benefits flowing from the divine atonement, do you wonder at St. Paul's attaching so much importance to it as to exclaim, that he knew nothing among men, except Jesus Christ and him crucified, being fully assured that the whole plan of redemption emanates from this stupendous truth, without which we would not this day have a Savior sitting at the right hand of the Majesty in Heaven making intercession for us? He has now virtually become the author of eternal salvation; all power in heaven and in earth has been invested in him. In his hands is the destiny of every soul. His mission has been filled according to the will of his Heavenly Father—no part of it being pronounced non-essential.

He has become the author of eternal salvation to whom, let me ask? Why to all who obey him? Here is a little provision to which attaches the most vital importance, and needs some little philosophizing. How does this apply to us in our unsaved condition? In what sense do you stand toward him? Is not your position only an abstract one? He has tendered to you the loving efficacies flowing from his obedience to the behests of his Heavenly Father. Have you accepted of his authority, or do you still reject his life-giving counsels that will make you wise unto salvation? Hence I would suggest, without fear of successful contradiction, that, in analyzing this sentence, by distinguishing between the positive and negative issue arising at this point, his authoritative demands are null and void of the promises so kindly tendered unto us by virtue of our obedience. Our position might be regarded as more reprehensible than that of the Jew who receives Christ as the Messiah, who before his conversion is necessarily compelled first of all to confess him to be the Christ of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write. Not so with us—a confession is not necessary for us to make. We have always regarded him as the Savior of the world; but our faith has been, and in every unconverted soul is still, slumbering: no practical results have ever emanated from it; and until aroused from its lethargy, and exercised in complying with the divine demands made upon us, you can never be made free from the law of sin and death; you cannot behold him as truly and virtually your Savior, except prospectively the means of saving grace have been made accessible to you. The propitiation has been made, and the propitiator to-day is making bare his arms of love and mercy, ready to receive you into his fond embrace. Yea, for over eighteen hundred years he has been sitting at the right of the Father in Heaven, ever making intercession for you—for all. The pathetic tones of that sweet plaintive voice once addressed to those unrepentant Jews, may, perchance, have over and again audibly articulated in your ears, "Ye would not come unto me, that ye might have life. O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets and stonest them that are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered you together as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, but ye would not."

Then my dear unconverted reader, feeling an earnest solicitude for the eternal interest of precious souls, with a heart overflowing with divine gratitude to God for what he has done for me, as an ambassador for Christ as though God did beseech you by us, we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God; for he has made him to be sin for us who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him. Then why yet delay? Procrastination is the thief of time. You are daily standing in peril of irretrievable and eternal ruin. Why stand ye in jeopardy every hour? Lay hold of the means that will make you a perfect man, and be thoroughly furnished in every good and perfect work. Walk steadfastly, rejoicing continually in the hope of eternal glory. Behold in him the Lord of life and immortality—virtually and truly your Savior and Redeemer.

"Behold the Savior of mankind,
Nail'd to the shameful tree.
How vast the love that him inclined
To bleed and die for me!"

Secret Societies.

WHY MEN JOIN THEM.

Men ought to have good plausible reasons for everything they do in this life, and this is especially true where an act affects or interests others. Humanity has claim upon us, and anything we may do to counteract that claim is in deadly antagonism with the highest good of the race. If we are true to God we will contemplate the race as a whole and as a unit, and just in proportion as we fail to do this, we fail in developing the eternal principles implanted by our beneficent Father. What, then, are the reasons which men assign for binding themselves together in sworn alliance for selfish interest and profit?

I. Secret societies open our way to usefulness.

Let us notice this. The very first step towards this high position for usefulness is a terrible oath, displeasing to God and obnoxious to men. Is it part of God's order for the Christianization of the race, that men should glaringly violate his law that they may extend his kingdom? The next step is the most undisguised partiality, whereby the weak and helpless—those who most need support—are peremtorily debarred all access to your good qualities. Another essential qualification is a correct understanding of various signs, grips, passwords and misterious secrets by which you may be known of the craft, thus keeping under cover, fearing the light, courting darkness and seeking to hide yourself from the gaze of mankind as one too good to be properly appreciated, or too bad to be seen. If the usefulness of secrecy is to be bought at such a fearful sacrifice of manhood, such destruction of Bible morality, and such a waste of conscientious scruples, will it pay the investment? Would it not be better to seek to be useful in an other and a higher sphere?

II. Secret societies will aid me in business.

Why? Because their members are sworn to patronize each other where it is possible. This creates "rings" in trade, and in consequence somebody must suffer. And you will avail yourself of the protection of a great institution that you may the more successfully bleed the public, and crush the poor with the incubus of ill-gotten prosperity. Can you do this without feeling that it is sin?

Thus you make secrecy a hobby to ride into power, even though you should tear the bleeding breast of suffering humanity with the sharp talon of your parsimonious and exclusive selfishness. A good thing, say you. Can we not say as much for every system of fraud, intolerance and favoritism, by which the interests of the few are observed, and the wants of the many are disregarded? The bloated demagogue buys a seat in Congress with bribery and whisky, but does it follow that perfidy and intoxication are "good things?" Is it just or Christian for us to seek our selfish interest irrespective of the rights of others?

I.I.I. Secret societies will aid me in traveling.

Yes, they may get you the best seat in a railroad car, the finest berth in a steamboat, and the best room in a first class hotel; while the most obsequious servants stand around on tip-toe, ready to obey your slightest wish, and supply your every want. And is it possible, that while you enjoy this favoritism and distinction, and see others just as good as you, rudely treated and meagerly cared for, you never feel ashamed of yourself, and ashamed of the institution which confers such unmerited favors! It seems to me that the man who would crave such distinguished honors without anything to merit them, is a tyrant in embryo, and his very existence casts an uncharitable reflection, either upon his Creator or his education.

IV. Secret societies will give me prominence among men.

Just as though a king or president could not be a villain. This miserable, truckling, aping after somebody! Many persons think that so many great men cannot be mistaken, when in fact it requires little perception to discover, that leading politicians, judges and lawyers, are usually not the men to mind a twinge of conscience, especially when place and power are within their grasp. And these are the men whom you are anxious to hail a master, when God's word tells us that we should not mind high things but condescend to men of low estate. You would reverse this order of God and get all in the name of religion. Is it not wicked to seek prominence by association with those who lay all the treasures of cultivated mind and true affection at the shrine of self?

V. Secret societies have many good men.

Suppose I admit this as being true, does it furnish sufficient reason for joining them? If there are good men in these societies, it is very plain that they have not made them so, but they are good because of their Christianity, and not because of their Masonry. I have shown conclusively that there is nothing essentially good in these societies, but very much that is wicked and sinful. There may be good men in the Roman Catholic Church, but I should consider this a very weak reason why I should embrace the idolatrous tenet of this mother of harlots. Slavery in its palmy days had many pious advocates, and from press, pulpit and rostrum, the boisterous fulminations of a consecrated priesthood, flowed forth in strains of crushing eloquence, to convince a careless and incredulous world that "property in man" was a divine institution and fraught with peculiar blessings to a lost and ruined race. Is it right to shackle the bleeding limbs of my brother because "praying men" sustained and blessed the act?

VI. Secret societies will aid me, should I commit a crime or be in danger of punishment.

To say the least, this reason is not very creditable to secret societies nor to you. If you have a disposition to commit crime it is perhaps no more than natural that you should desire something to hide you from justice; but it betrays a very low stand of moral training for you to claim the protection of a powerful society, that you may prey with impunity upon the sacred rights of others. Will Christians adduce this as a reason for joining these societies? These are some of the most prominent reasons usually assigned for uniting with secret organizations. I have shown that every reason given is based upon the most unblushing selfishness. Everything connected with secret societies tends toward this inevitable goal. There is not a great moral principle in the whole system. They pretend to base their institutions upon the authority of God's word, but they never touch the vital essence of that word. Christ's law is, "Good for evil,' but theirs is "Good for good." Christ's law declares, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them," but the watch-word of secrecy is, "Whatsoever men do unto you, do ye even so unto them. Not, whatsoever ye would. I challenge the friends of secrecy to show whether I have not fairly presented the case. They know that selfishness, and nothing else, led them into these orders, and yet they will persist in claiming the sanction of divine law for their conduct. Christ is supremely unselfish.

Humanity requires no oath-bound organizations for the protection of the strong! Riches, pride and power are already too strong for the good of the race, and that which strengthens them weakens the moral forces God has provided for the unity and salvation of the world. Every iota of capital, whether pecuniary or mental, thus used, is just so much loss to the race, and instead of hastening the glad era when all shall know the Lord, helps to arrest the great work, and thwart the designs of Christianity and moral reform. This may seem but a small matter when we look at it as individuals, but when we view it in the aggregate, it is far-reaching in its results, and may control churches and nations. We are responsible, therefore, for the indirect effect of our moral influence, as well as that which we may see. Shall we stand in the way of the progress of our blessed Christianity under the mistaken, false and specious idea, that we are the friends and patrons of morality and righteousness? Nothing is easier than to be deceived in this matter. When I look toward my own aggrandizement, when I consult every motive of my selfish nature, when I close my ears to the cries of wronged humanity, when I seek for the society and protection of the strong and spurn the weak, when I lose sight of Christ and his blessed teachings and find my highest happiness in discarding the sacred rights of two-thirds of the human family, then I favor secret societies with all my heart. But when I allow conscience to speak and utter her protest of warning, when I remember that the souls and bodies of others are as dear to God as my own, when I permit my heart to feel the tender sympathies toward others that I would have others feel toward me, when I turn my eyes toward Calvary and listen to the song of triumph that mercy utters from the cross, and feel that Jesus tasted death for every man, then my selfishness is abashed, and I want no other institution for the good of men than that which contemplates the happiness of all, and is capable of being extended from the rivers unto the ends of the earth! Christianity requires no supplemental agency to her blessed work. She reaches forth the hand of help to every sufferer, and satisfies every want. To doubt her ability or willingness is to dishonor God, and to attempt the addition of schemes, devised by human ingenuity, and fostered by self-interest, is to mock his work. The religion of Jesus Christ, rising from its Judean cradle with all the glory of its celestial origin, and marching forth from city to city, from continent to continent, with the tread of a mighty conqueror; trampling under foot heathen gods, overturning false religions, supplanting national tastes, bequeathing virtue and progress, scattering joy and prosperity with a lavish hand, until its mighty conquests are written by the unfettered songs of emancipated millions, and living hearts from pole to pole, beat in unison with the gracious Redeemer: such a religion is too venerable to be frightened from the field of conflict by the jibes and jeers of secret societies; and it is too holy to require the curse of their gratuitous counsels!

Many may deplore agitation on this momentous question, but the times demand it. If secret societies are the foes of true religion, and dangerous to the State, as Washington taught, then the people ought to know it. Every great reform is inaugurated by discussion and agitation. It brings truth to the surface, and men are brought face to face with the living realities which surround them. Let the friends of our holy religion lift up their hearts to God, and invoke his blessing upon every effort that is being made to bring the hidden things of darkness to the light of day, that treachery, falsehood and vanity, may be driven from the earth, and righteousness, peace and fraternity fill all hearts, adorn all lives, and smooth the ruffled pathway of life, even to the troubled waters of the river of death!

JOHN WISE'S, PA.
May 1st, 1872.

Dear Companion: We write now at the house of our brother John Wise. It is a beautiful morning, and as we are sitting by the open window, the aerial songsters salute our ears with their sweetest notes, no doubt as an inaugural address to the Beautiful May.

To day the council of the Western District of Pennsylvania, convenes at the meeting-house within a mile of this place. Quite a number of delegates have already arrived, and the indications are for a good representation. Very little business has yet been heard from, and it is hoped the session will be short, especially that part of it which is usually occupied in settling old difficulties or disputed questions. We are hopeful that a little time may be spared for making aggressive movements upon the enemy, a thing much desired. What may be done; we cannot even surmise.

The brethren here are reported to be in general health. We visited one brother, Reuben Bales, who is afflicted, from a relapse of Measles. We have met with much kindness at the hands of the brethren and sisters.

After the council, to which we shall now repair, we will have more to communicate. Until then, farewell.

Whereas this District Meeting has repeatedly been appealed to for a more practical plan for conducting a Home Mission. Therefore we adopt the following:

1st. That each member, voluntarily, pay into the Treasury of the congregation, quarterly, the sum of ten cents, or more, to be quarterly handed over to the District Treasurer, for the purpose of supporting the Home Mission, and defraying the expenses of the District.

2d. The ministering brethren to be sent out are to be selected by the congregations nominating one or more brethren from their own or other branches in this District, and from this number the delegates present shall elect two, or more, ministers for the ensuing year.

3d. That the District Meeting shall fix the support of the evangelists for the ensuing year, and designate their field and time of labor.

4th. Applications for ministerial aid may be made by congregations through their delegates or otherwise, to a committee of six brethren, two of whom shall be appointed at each annual District Meeting, and serve for the term of three years.

This plan was adopted almost unanimously, and it is regarded as one of the most important actions taken by the District since its organization.

The meeting then proceeded to elect by ballot and casting lots, a committee, or Mission Board, resulting as follows:

C. G. Lint, Joseph Berkey,	Three years.
H. R. Holsinger, Lewis Kimmell,	Two years.
J. P. Hetric, Joseph I. Cover,	One year.

The meeting authorized the Committee to take such action in the Home Mission Cause, as in their judgment emergencies may require.

Art. 14. Elders John Wise and C. G. Lint were elected delegates to Annual Meeting, the former named for the Standing Committee.

Art. 15. Hiram Musselman was elected Treasurer for 1872. Address: Scalp-level, Cambria Co., Pa.

Art. 17. The Treasurer for last year being absent, H. R. Holsinger was appointed Treasurer pro tem. who reported an indebtedness of $26.03, for expenses of delegates to Annual Meeting of 1871. He then importuned the meeting to "pay up old scores and start in with a clean docket," which was responded to, and the old debt was paid off, and $23.57 in cash and pledges handed over to the permanent Treasurer.

Art. 18. Resolved that our next District Meeting be held on Wednesday following two weeks before Whitsunday, at Fairview meeting-house, Fayette county.

Art. 19. Resolved that we have 200 copies of Minutes printed and sent to the clerk for distribution, as called for.

The Meeting closed at noon of Thursday, after a pleasant session of a day and a half.

In the afternoon there were devotional exercises, and in the evening Communion services. The congregation in the evening was large, but very attentive, and we trust good impressions were made.

Early next morning brother Tombaugh and brother Leatherman took our delegation by their conveyance to Washington for the early train. We were very sorry to put those brethren, who had already so faithfully served those in attendance at the meeting, to so much extra trouble. We only got as far as Pittsburg that day, after all their labor to get us off early.

Our thanks are due many brethren and sisters for kindnesses.

That Petition.

We offer a few criticisms upon the "Remarks of brother O. W. Miller, in another column, upon our notice of a Petition which fell into our hands.

1. That petition had not been sent to us, and we would never have seen it at all, had it not been for the watchfulness of a brother to whom it had been sent. It was not intended we should see it at all. Our columns are ever open for the suggesting of all good measures, intended for the promulgation of the Master's cause. Anything that is intended for the public eye will be presented to the press. Why did not the "good" brethren engaged in getting up this measure appeal to the Brotherhood through the Companion, and thus have reached three times the number of readers they can in any other way? They evidently did not wish it to be generally known.

2. "The petitioners desire to live according to the Gospel, &c. Yes that is the great cry of the age, and then everybody explains the Gospel according to his own peculiar notions.

3. There may be cause of complaint from the causes mentioned by brother Miller; but there are fair methods of meeting and disposing of them.

4. There is no example of petitioning, or clandestine work in Acts 15. On the contrary it did pass through the hands of the "District Council," for it was not until after Paul and Barnabas had debated the subject with the men who came from Judea, that they (the council) determined to send delegates to Jerusalem with the question.

Lastly. Why did not brother Miller, if he had anything to do with the getting up of this petition, suggest to his colleagues—who already regretted "that they had not acted sooner, that it might be more widely spread before the Annual Council"—the plan of having it published in the C. F. C, and thus be made known throughout the entire Church?

MINERAL POINT, May 10th.

Dear Companion: We have safely arrived at this point, but can get no farther and return our report in time for this week's issue. Will therefore give what we have. Upon arriving at this station we found an excited throng of people on the platform. There were men who had fire in their stomachs and on the brain. Report has it that three-fourths of the town of Somerset is in ashes, and we are disposed to credit the report. Only one store remains of all the business places. The court house and jail have been spared, but all the prisoners were liberated. Would it might always remain unoccupied.

The loss is estimated at half a million, but we will not vouch for the correctness of the report. The banks have been destroyed, but all the deposits are believed to be safe. No accidents nor serious burns are reported. We hear many rumors and incidents, some of which are curious enough, but they need "sifting" and "boiling down," which we are not now prepared to do.

Although the loss is very great, and many families are houseless and homeless, there will be no occasion for suffering. Somerset being located in a wealthy settlement, and a Christian community, the destitute will find homes of sojourn in the surrounding community. For instance, Mr. Cyrus Meyers lost all his property, furniture, and clothing; but the express train conveyed him and family to the old homestead at Meyers' Mills, where every comfort will be furnished them. Many others will no doubt be similarly favored. For the poor there will be provision made by the surrounding country and towns. Hope the citizens of Dale City will call a meeting this evening and contribute liberally for that purpose. Let there be prompt action, and a willing response.

In our next, when we shall have visited the scene of destruction, and seen for ourself, we expect to give full particulars, so far as consistent with the character of our paper.

Both printing offices have been destroyed, and we mean to offer our services to our brethren of the quill.

Behind Time.

We are nearly five days behind time (including Sunday) occasioned by the giving out of several flues in our boiler, and the want of the requisite mechanics to repair them. It was the most painful suspense our nerves have been called upon to endure for many weeks. We are now in reasonable order again.

Answers To Correspondents.

MICHAEL ZUG: Your explanation is quite satisfactory; and we trust you will pardon the error.

E. ZIMMERMAN: Yes, it is all right, and just as you say.

J. A. STUDEBAKER: It was a typographical error, as we received $1.20.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The South-western District Meeting of Ohio.

This District assembled in council on the last day of April, in the Bear Creek meeting-house, seven miles west of Dayton. There was a large attendance, and the different churches were pretty well represented. Our District is composed of about twenty churches, and we have had such meetings for sixteen years. While the business before the meeting was considerable, yet the number of queries was not as great as on some previous occasions. The business was transacted apparently to the satisfaction of all, and with much unanimity of sentiment. We indeed had a feast of fat things. And the conduct and spirit manifested by the leading brethren was so commendable. They did not "snap one another off," or contend about "hair-split distinctions," but rather provoked one another to good works. "How pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" said the Psalmist. When brethren cause division in the church, we should "rebuke them sharply," and "withstand them to the face," but "with all long suffering," bearing in mind the apostle Peter's injunction, "Be courteous." If we have added to our faith such christian virtues as the apostle exhorts to, we have in our catalogue "the bond of perfectness," and "brotherly kindness," neither of which will lead us to make any unnecessary strictures, but rather that "we might be made a castaway for their sakes." Only two queries were sent to Annual meeting. Bro., H. D. Davy, "whose praise is in the gospel throughout the churches," was chosen as member of Standing Committee of Annual Meeting, and S. Garber, an "old experienced and established elder," as delegate. As brother Davy has been sick all winter, arrangments were made for another brother to go in his place in case he could not.

The meeting was closed by singing a beautiful and appropriate hymn, a short exhortation, and sincere and serious prayers, to which the "great congregation" responded, "Amen."

A Few Thoughts.

In the four Gospels we have Jesus represented to us as the Messiah, the teacher, the pattern, and the good. Throughout the Bible, God recognizes the principle of approaching different minds by different means, and has so arranged his word that no constitutional peculiarity remains untouched. Whatever may be our peculiar temperament or habits of mind, in the Bible we will find a Redeemer adapted to our wants, and a gospel suited to our condition. Try the character and claims of Jesus by the various and pressing spiritual necessities of men, and see how exactly he answers to them all; with what certainty he leads every variety of character submitted to his direction towards its own proper perfection; by what appropriate methods he corrects every evil disposition and soothes every sorrow; how equally he reveals himself to the most enlightened and the least instructed of those who make him their Savior; how uniformly all his precepts are fitted to the nature and condition of men, and tend to promote their highest happiness; how strong a hold he has on the warmest and most devoted affections of all who choose him for their friend; with what undeviating confidence they trust him, and with what unshaken faith they preserve the consciousness of his presence and love; and how this confidence and faith when regulated by his instructions, never fail to impart unalloyed improvement to the intellect and the affections; how hope, by his influence, continues steadily through every kind of worldly trials, and brightens to rapturous vision when man is called to nature's last struggle. Consider, also, that all this influence has been steadily increasing from its first commencement, and that the number, the zeal, the intelligence, and the power of those who act under it, were never so great as at the present time, and never so rapidly increasing. The first three Evangelists describe especially those things which Christ did in our flesh and relate the precepts which he delivered on the duties to be performed by us. Will we walk on earth and dwell in the flesh? But St. John soars to heaven as an eagle, above the clouds of human infirmity, and reveals to us the mysteries of Christ's godhead, and of the trinity in unity, and the felicities of life eternal; and gazes on the life of immutable truth, with a keen and steady eye.

Sleep not, the Savior cries,
On this low, earthly ground.
Press on—above the skies,
There shall your rest be found.
On earth, cold storms arise,
And clouds obscure the sun;
For rest the pilgrim sighs,
But there his work is done.
My soul be not dismayed,
But gird thee for the race;
I'll ask his hourly aid,
To reach that happy place.

Baptism—Form of.

In noticing the form used by the brethren, as given by the A. M., to read, "For the remission of sins," in connection with the formula as given by Christ in the commission, Matth. 28 : 19, I was brought to the thought have we a right, according to the gospel, to take a part of Peter's preaching on the day of Pentecost, to instruct those repenting Jews as to the design of baptism, and connect it with the commission? Inasmuch as this is a matter of vital importance to the followers of Christ, in fulfilling their mission, although the Brethren assembled in Annual Council have settled down on a certain form for baptizing applicants for baptism, yet there remains a difference in our church, from elders down to lay-members, and are all members of the same body; hence it is of great importance that this question be candidly and seriously investigated by our brethren, and reconsidered in due time, in order that we become more united, and thus giving the church a greater power in converting sinners, as a house divided against itself cannot stand. I believe the brethren assembled in council were honest, and have decided to the best of their understanding of the gospel. I also believe those who see differently are equally honest in their conclusions. There is a possibility for man to err, and there being only one right way the others must be wrong; hence the subject should be considered by all, with true motives, in the spirit of the gospel and affection. Our brethren, in giving a form for baptizing, have added to the commission given by Christ a portion of the preaching of Peter on the day of Pentecost, thus making the commission read, according to the present decision, "Baptizing them for the remission of sins, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," while the commission given by Christ only was to baptize them in the name of the Father, &c., after they have been taught; hence, is it not reasonable to conclude that this "for the remission of sins," was only a part of Peter's preaching to those convicted in their hearts, to make them sensible of the duty devolving upon them, in order that they might obtain that remission? And when the ordinance of baptism was administered, we have no gospel ground to show us that he used anything but the commission given by Christ, and we have no scripture to tell us that he even used that; but I think we are safe to assert that he did, as it would rather be alleging a charge against the old apostle, when he was filled with the Holy Ghost, and when he had so powerfully preached to them that he melted their stony hearts, that they cried, "What must we do?" And he now taught them that they must "Repent and be baptized * * * in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins," and they were willing to obey. To say that he now used anything but the commission given him by Christ for baptizing, while all the rest, except the administration of baptism, was only the first teachings and belonged to preaching, where Peter also placed it. Much more might be said on this point; but will for brevety's sake forbear for the present; but when called for, more will be given to sustain the point. I hope the brethren will, through the COMPANION, give light wherein they think I am in darkness; but all out of love as this was written.

Marriage in its True Signification.

Dear Editor :—In the COMPANION, volume 8, number 16, I noticed H. H. Weimer's reply to marriage in its true signification. He says, "Marriage is a civil, and also a religious institution." If marriage is a civil institution, man has a right to break or amend it, for the benefit of the parties; and if a religious institution, then it belongs to the religionists, and the worldlings have nothing to do with it. This savors of Mormanism.

He again says, "It is a part of the law of nations." Then nations have power to establish or annul the marriage contract; for all legislators have power to amend or abolish any law enacted by them. I think this is also a part of the law of nations. He also says, "Marriage should always be entered into with deliberation and mutual consent, at a proper age; then it is honorable, as being instituted by God. But suppose it is not entered "into with mutual consent, at a proper age: then it must be dishonorable, and not instituted by God.

He also says, "Husbands are placed in a relation to their wives, similar to that which Christ bears to his church." This is true of all those whom God has joined together. They will love honor and obey, for they cannot help it: the affinity exists by virtue of the union. Now is not this the way that one man and one woman are permanently united. There must be a principle by which we can judge these Heaven-ordained marriages. God never united one man and one woman as opposite to each other as the Torid and Frigid Zones are. But right here let me say to you, do not understand me to say that two individuals that marry must be alike in every particular. Not so. They may have different organizations. To illustrate: a real sensitive, moral, high-toned, intellectual woman, marries an intellectual rogue for a husband. This man requires this sensitive woman, with her soft, subduing nature, to equalize his roguish disposition; and he has sufficient mind to see her ideas, and to grieve her right where she deserves it; consequently he finds a solace sufficient to alleviate all his sorrows, which no one else but this God-ordained help could do. On the other hand this woman needs this coarser, stronger arm to lean on; and in this case she will get it. Then will the Christ-like relation shine through all of their life.

Now let us style this woman class B, and instead of her marrying class B, she is influenced by her parents to marry class Z. What will be the result? Hatred, envy, and strife. Talk not of good coming out of evil. You might as well talk about stopping the wind from blowing, as to try to create harmony between these two individuals. Why this is contrary to their natures and in opposition to God's law. Now come, friend Weimer, let us reason on a case of first marriage. Suppose some cool, deliberate, cunning, wise-working young man comes to your house, and so called, falls in love with one of your daughters; if you have any. You don't blame the girl; you think quite well of him yourself. The young man plays his part admirably, and soon he gains the entire good will of the family. Seduction is his intention, if possible; but all his attempts are in vain. She does not yield to him. He finally resorts to marriage to consummate his groveling desire. He asks the father, for his daughter's consent is given, and they marry, as it is generally termed. He gratifies his lusts; then oids her good bye, and he leaves for parts unknown. To which class will friend Weimer say this marriage belongs, to the civil, religious, or God-ordained? Now will you not be compelled to say that the devil instituted and man legalized the works of the old friend? This lovely sacrifice of Weimer's has to be the innocent sufferer for the purpose of removing the scales from her father's eyes, to show him that all man's work is not instituted by God. I fancy I hear friend Weimer say, "I hear the cock crowing."

Yours in love,

MARY B. SHELLY.

Brother Thomas S. Holsinger of Alum Bank, Bedford Co., Pa., says:

It is very sickly about here, and a great many dying, old and young. Measles are very plenty, and smallpox is raging south-west of us: one within 3 or 4 miles of us. I heard that nine died out of one family; and at one time that the doctor came to the house and found none living but the baby, and it was picking off the scabs from its sores. Eight of our family had the measles, and got along well without a doctor. The baby had no measles. It died with the croup, I think.

NO REDUCED FARE ON THE NORTH-WESTERN R. R.

Dear Brother Henry :—The District Meeting of Northern Illinois, appointed me to try to get reduced fare on the North-western R. R., to the Annual Meeting. I went to see about it; but they give no reduced fares on any "Theological gatherings of any nature." So please make it known through the COMPANION, for the satisfaction of the Brethren in Northern Ill., and oblige, JOHN HOLLINGER.

Napiersville, Ill.

DAYTON AND MICHIGAN R. R.

The following notice was sent to the Visitor office too late for insertion in the May No. By request of the Editor it appears in the COMPANION:

Editors of the Gospel Visitor: Please announce through the Visitor, that the Dayton & Michigan R. R., Co., have agreed to return free, upon certificate of Secretary, till, and inclusive, May the 31st, 1872, all persons who may have paid full fare over said road going to our Annual Conference, to beheld at or near Wooster, Ohio, commencing May 20th. This road crosses the Pittsburg Ft. Wayne & Chicago R R., ot Lima.

D. BROWER.

J. W. Beer · We, that is H. R. H. and others too numerous to mention, are at this time in the Union depot at Pittsburg. This is quite a stirring city. I could not help but think of our Dale City. Our trip thus far has indeed been a pleasant one, as well as prosperous; we made good time, and mean to leave on time for Washington, which is 3:38 P. M. Every one here seems to be after urgent business; that is, if we can call the riches and honors of this world proper objects for a Christian people to hanker after. Talk of fashions and conformity to the world among the Brotherhood. If some of our stay-at-home members would venture out a little more among the real fashionable of this world, they would have to say with Solomon, "Vanity of vanity." Train after train is leaving for different parts of the country, loaded with human beings of every hue and form imaginable. All, all are strangers. Wonder if, when we are brought together, not in the Union Depot at Pittsburg, but somewhere at a place where God will locate, all the thousands there convened will have that expression of gratitude and pleasantness which we see them have here to-day. I fear not. Neither will the smoke that will then rise be spoken of as lightly as the masses do of the smoke that seems to be continually rising from this city, and is, as a thick cloud, hanging over the city, as a mementum of the usefulness of the inexhaustible riches that are imbeded in this earth. The smoke that will ascend in the day of God's wrath will be to portray the utter uselessness of the foolish and vain things with which the people of this world while away their own precious time. Brethren and sisters, take warning.

I am now at brother Lane's, about starting for 10 A. M. meeting. Pray for us. All is well. This is council day morning. The delegates are coming in from all parts. Present appearrnces indicate a good representation; and I hope the meeting will be a good one. Brother, pray for us, while we are in the service of the Lord here. C. G. LINT.

Dear Brother Holsinger :—I have neglected to send you the money for the COMPANION, and through my neglect, I suppose, it has stopped coming. I am poor and need my money for other purposes. But yet I must have something to feed and strengthen the immortal part. Therefore do not stop the paper as I expect to be able to pay you some time. I will now tell you of my misfortune: On Sunday, April 14th, my barn with its contents was consumed by fire. All my farming implements, hay, wheat, oats, corn, twenty bushels of potatoes, one buggy, and one spring calf were destroyed. I have many purchases to make and no money to purchase with. I think of moving to Fulton Co., Ohio. If you know of any members of our church living in the north-east part of Fulton Co., or the north-west part of Lucas Co., I wish you would let me know through the C. F. C.

JACOB BARE.

Lodi, Medina Co., Ohio.

Brother Henry :—Please correct the mistakes made in my item of church news. In present volume, page 254, read two reclaimed instead "two reclined." "This arm of church" that I had reference to, is in Douglas Co., Kan. Willow Springs is our post-office. The COMPANION comes regularly to this office; and quite a welcome visitor it is, as it always brings news from all parts of the brotherhood. Wishing the Companion family success, I close.

J. A. STUDEBAKER.

Brother Henry. :—Will you, or some other brother, inform me through the COMPANION, whether it is inconsistent with the teaching of the scriptures, to preach that we are sinners by nature, or, in other words, by nature the children of disobedience? Some contend it is wrong, while many preach so. Now if it is wrong, it is time that many be informed of the wrong.

HENRY BRUBAKER.

Virden Ill.,

Correction.

In my article, No. 18, on the "Personal acquaintance of John and Christ," the printers several times caused me to say just the reverse of what I really did say. In the last sentence of the second column instead of, "It is not probable," read, it is much more probable. And in the first sentence of the next column instead of, "That he should of himself have known," read, that he should not, of himself have known.

E. WILLIAMS.

Notice.

This informs the Brethren (and others) that Eld. David Bosserman has no more of his tracts for sale or distribution and that no farther orders are solicited.

Query.

Will some one please give an explanation on Romans 6: 18?

At Dunning's Creek, Bedford Co., Pa., March 26th, friend THOMAS W. MILLER, aged about 66 years. He was truly a good and kind neighbor.

Same place, April 14th, friend JESSE BLACKBURN, aged 72 years. He was a zealous member of the Quaker society.

Also, April 22nd, GEORGE RININGER, aged 74 years. He was raised in the neighborhood, was well off in this worlds goods; but made no profession of religion. He was chosen trustee of the first meeting house the brethren built here, and always was a friend of the brethren.

Near "Creek Side," Indiana Co., Pa. April 8th, sister ELIZABETH HILL; age 36, years 3 months and 28 days. She left a sorrowing husband and 7 small children to mourn their loss. Advertising alone does not prove success. The thing which is advertised, must have intrinsic merit, or else large advertising will eventually do it more harm than good, advertise it thoroughly, and you will be sure to succeed; if it is poor, don't praise it, for people will soon discover you are lying.

Such is the policy of the Burlington Route that runs to three great regions in the West: 1st, To Omaha, connecting with the Pacific Roads. 2nd. To Lincoln the capital of Nebraska, and all that beautiful region south of the Platte, field with R. R. lands and homesteads. 3d, To St. Joseph, Kansas City and all Kansas points.

The roads are splendidly built, have the best bridges, finest cars, the Miller platform and coupler, and the safety air brake (to prevent the loss of life that is everywhere else happening); Pullman's sleepers, Pullman dining cars, large and powerful engines (to make quick time and good connections), and are in a word the best equipped roads in the West. So that if you desire to go safely, surely, quickly and comfortably to any point in Southern Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, or on the Pacific Roads, be sure that you go "By Way of Burlington."

All who wish particular information, and a large map showing correctly the Great West, and all its railroad connections, can obtain them and any other knowledge, by addressing General Passenger Agent, B. & Mo. R. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

THE Christian Family Companion.

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

The Cruse that Faileth Not.

"It is more blessed to give than to receive."

Is THY cruse of comfort wasting? rise and share it with another,
And through all the years of famine, It will feed thee and thy brother;
Love divine will fill thy storehouse, or thy handfull will renew;
Scanty fare for one will often make a royal feast for two.

For the heart grows rich in giving; all its wealth is living grain,
Seeds which mildew in the garner, scattered, fill with gold the plain.
Is thy burden hard and heavy? Do thy steps drag wearily?
Help to bear thy brother's burden; God will bear both it and thee.

Numb and weary on the mountains, wouldst thou sleep amidst the snow?
Chafe that frozen form beside thee and together both shall glow.
Art thou stricken in life's battle? many wounded round thee moan
Lavish on their wounds thy balsams, and that balm shall heal thine own.

Is the heart a well left empty? None but God its void can fill,
Nothing but a ceaseless fountain can a ceaseless longing still.
Is the heart a living dower? Self-entwined its strength sinks low;
It can only live in loving, and by serving love will grow.

Childish Piety

Child piety is no novelty. The state of ideas and feelings which repressed it was but a temporary eclipse that passed before the church. Christians generally have believed that when Christ spoke of "little ones that believe in me," and when he said "of such is the kingdom of heaven," he taught that in some respects the child is the typical, the model Christian. We have no logic or doctrine that does not require us to expect and encourage child piety. We have much reason to desire not only more of it among those that we love, but more of its nature in our churches.

It is simple belief in Jesus. it prays, and trusts, and expects. It loves. It is ardent. It is cheerful. It endures. It has more excellences than we can enumerate. But child-piety need not be childish piety always, and it needs development. Our Christianity incurs certain dangers from childish piety. It is uninstructed. Doubtless young converts become eventually the best informed Christians, but everywhere we see growing up young persons whose study of the great truths of God nearly ceased at their entrance into the church.—here is danger that the child's measure shall become the standard of the church. Already the effects of childish piety are seen in increased levity, frivolity, loosenness of doctrine, want of discipline, and general ignorance of the great doctrines. The church cannot fail to feed the lambs without suffering.

On the whole, perhaps, the church has more to fear from its own neglect of common sense and plain duty toward the children, than for anything natural to the children, and it is taking a great responsibility in restraining the children from a profession because there is not piety and wisdom enough to train them.

Prayer.

Could a memento be reared on every spot from which an acceptable prayer had passed away, and on which a prompt answer has come down, we should find "Jehovah Shammah, — the Lord hath been here," — inscribed on many a cottage hearth, and many a dungeon floor. We should find it not only in Jerusalem's proud temple, and David's cedar galleries ,but in the fisherman's cottage by the brink of genesseret, and the chamber where Pentecost began. Whether in the field where Isaac went to meditate, or the rocky knoll where Jacob lay down to sleep, or the brook where Israel wrestled, or the den where Daniel gazed on the lions, or on the hillsides where the man of sorrows prayed all night, we should still discern the prints of the ladder's feet let down from heaven — the landing place of mercies. Prayer needs no saints — no proficient in piety — no adept in eloquent language — no dignity of earthly rank; it needs but a blind beggar, a loathsome lazarus: it needs but a penitent publican or a dying thief; and it needs no sharp ordeal, no costly passport, no painful expiation to bring you to the mercy seat. The Savior's merit, the name Jesus, priceless as they are, cost the sinner nothing. They are freely put at his disposal, and instantly and constantly he may use them. This access to God in every place, at every moment, without any place or personal merit, is it not a privilege that we have? is it not our duty, and the duty of every human being under the out-spread curtain of the heavens. It is the Savior's command; and as little can we dispense with this command as any other.

"O servant of Christ, too heavy the cross;
Has thy trust in thy Master been shaken?
In doubt and in darkness thy faith has been lost,
And thou criest, "My God, I'm forsaken."

"But cheer up, dear brother, the night can not last,
And soon will the day-break be dawning;
Then trials of earth, which we've borne from our birth,
Will all be made right in the morning."

The Contrite and Humble Spirit.

"For this saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy; I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of contrite and humble spirit, to receive the spirit of the humble, and the heart of the contrite ones. Isaiah 57: 15.

Is it not a beautiful thought, that the great and holy Being, who in his great wisdom created all things, whose dwelling place is in heaven, that he will come down and dwell with poor, mortal man? But he cannot dwell with the ungodly. Our bodies are his temple, (1 Cor 6: 19,) our hearts his dwelling place. Man's heart must be changed from a sinful (for by nature we are sinners) to a holy state. By the renewing of our mind, by returning to the innocency of our childhood, we now as babes in Christ, contrite and humble, take up the cross, and walk in the steps of Jesus. Now with contrite and humble spirit, God will make his dwelling place in that heart, and he will keep it: he will manifest his power, and purify his temple, and all the fiery darts of the wicked cannot injure nor destroy his holy temple. "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are;" 1 Cor. 6: 15. We are still left to our own will; if we will serve God faithfully, he has promised never to leave nor forsake those who put their trust in him; but if we tire and faint, and grow weary of his means of purification, and turn our thoughts and our affections in a way to seek after those things which are more pleasing to nature, and do despite to the Spirit of grace, we grieve the Holy Spirit whereby we were sealed unto the day of redemption; and the good Spirit will thus be driven away, and the temple defiled, and the creature destroyed.

God is most gracious, and will not that any should be destroyed, but that all shall come to a knowledge of the truth and be saved; and in all our trials and troubles he will sustain us. He is ever ready to revive the spirit of the humble, and the heart of the contrite ones.
